An Epitome of Official Documents Relative to Native Affairs and Land Purchases in the North Island of New Zealand
Compiled and Edited By H. Hanson Turton
Wellington. By Authority: George Didsbury, Government Printer. 1883.

Preface.

THE following work was compiled some years ago by direction of the late Native Minister, Sir Donald McLean, but in consequence of his death, and from other causes, its publication has been deferred to the present time. It was intended to be a companion-volume to the "Compendium of Official Documents relative to Native Affairs in the South Island," compiled by Commissioner Alexander Mackay in 1872, but restricted entirely to the northern portion of the colony. Owing to the limited sum provided for the purpose, only about one-half of the matter prepared has been published in the present issue; but in that which is given will be found an interesting epitome of governmental transactions from the earliest times down to a very recent date. Many of these despatches were only published in London, by order of the House of Commons, and therefore are very little known by the-present race of settlers; and to preserve them from oblivion was the chief object of their present republication in the colony. From the great variety of their subjects the order of date has, of necessity, been adopted; and the division into Parts arose from their being printed at two separate offices. Any difficulty of reference, however, will be obviated by the several Indexes attached.

A very complete treatise on the Early History of New Zealand, comprising the North as well as the South Island, will be found in Mr. A. Mackay's work above referred to, and will well repay the attentive reader—i.e., if he can obtain a copy of it, for the edition was but a small one, and has long been out of print.

Respecting Visit of the Rev. Samuel Marsden to New Zealand.

I HAVE to report to your Lordship that, on his making an application to me to that effect, I granted leave of absence: to the Rev. Samuel Marsden, the principal chaplain of this colony, to visit the Islands of New Zealand, for the purpose of establishing some missionaries there, in consequence of orders he had received from the Church Missionary Society in England to that effect.

Mr. Marsden sailed from hence in the brig "Active" on the 28th November, 1814, and returned hither on the 23rd March last, bringing with him several chiefs from New Zealand, who had expressed a wish to visit Port Jackson. I gave each of these chiefs a dress, some live stock, and a few other articles, as presents on the part of Government, of which your Lordship I hope will approve; it being my wish to conciliate them to the British interests. Mr. Marsden speaks in high terms of the kind treatment he met with at New Zealand, and of the improved state of civilization of the natives of that country.

Application from Sydney Merchants to establish a Factory in New Zealand.

Some time since I received an application from certain merchants at Sydney for permission to establish a factory at New Zealand, and to form themselves into a commercial company there, to the exclusion, of all other traders. This I declined granting, conceiving the latter part of the request unreasonable; but I consented to forward their memorial Home for your Lordship's favourable consideration, which I have now the honour of doing accordingly. I do not see that there can be any objection to these gentlemen being allowed to establish a factory at their own expense in New Zealand, with the permission of the Native chiefs; but I conceive they ought not to have any exclusive trade, and I should not recommend that Government should be put to any expense on account of the proposed establishment.....

Bay of Islands.—Transmitting Letter of Maori Chiefs. Waimate, New Zealand, 16th November, 1831.
SIR,—

I have the honour to forward to you, by His Majesty's ship "Zebra," the enclosed document, with its translation, and to request that you will lay it before the Governor for his information. I have further to request that it be transmitted through His Excellency to the Secretary of State, in order to its being laid before His Majesty.

Enclosure. To King WILLIAM, the Gracious Chief of England. *Address of Chiefs to His Majesty the King.

KING WILLIAM,—

We, the chiefs of New Zealand assembled at this place, called the Kerikeri, write to thee, for we hear that thou art the great chief of the other side the water, since the many ships which come to our land are from thee.

We are a people without possessions. We have nothing but timber, flax; pork, and potatoes; We sell these things, however, to your people, and then we see the property of Europeans. It is only the land which is liberal towards us. From thee also come the missionaries who teach us to believe in Jehovah God, and in Jesus Christ His Son.

We have heard that the tribe of Mariau is at hand coming to take away our land; therefore we pray thee to become our friend and the guardian of these islands, lest the teasing of other tribes should come near to us and lest strangers should come and take away our land.

And if any of thy people should be troublesome or vicious towards us (for some persons are living here who have run away from ships), we pray thee to be angry with them that they may be obedient, lest the anger of the people of this land fall upon them.

This letter is from us, from the chiefs of the Natives of New Zealand.

Lord Viscount GODERICH, one of the Principal Secretaries of State to His Majesty the King of Great Britain, to the CHIEFS of NEW ZEALAND.

His Majesty's Reply.

FRIENDS,—

I am commanded by the King to acknowledge the receipt of the letter which you addressed to His Majesty, and which you intrusted to William Yate to forward to England.

The King is much gratified to find that the cause for alarm, which appears to have existed at the time when your letter was written, has entirely passed away, and he trusts that no circumstances may occur in future to interrupt the internal tranquillity of New Zealand, which is so necessary to the maintenance of a close commercial intercourse between its inhabitants and those of Great Britain.

The King is sorry for the injuries which you inform him that the people of New Zealand have suffered from some of his subjects; but he will do all in his power to prevent the recurrence of such outrages, and to punish the perpetrators of them according to the laws of their country, whenever they can be apprehended and brought to trial, and the King hopes that mutual good will and confidence will exist between the people of both countries.

In order to afford a better protection to all classes, both Natives of the Island of New Zealand and British subjects who may proceed or may be already established there for purposes of trade, the King has sent the bearer of this letter, James Busby, Esq., to reside amongst you as His Majesty's Resident, whose duties will be to investigate all complaints which may be made to him. It will also be his endeavour to prevent the arrival amongst you of men who have been guilty of crimes in their own country, and who may effect their escape from the place to which they have been banished, as likewise to apprehend such persons of this description as may be found at present at large.

In return for the anxious desire which will be manifested by the British Resident to afford his protection to the inhabitants of New Zealand against any acts of outrage which may be attempted against them by British subjects, it is confidently expected by His Majesty that, on your part, you will render to the Resident that assistance and support which are calculated to promote the object of his appointment, and to extend to your country all the benefits which it is capable of receiving from its friendship and alliance with Great Britain.

I have, &c.,

GODERICH.

Colonial Office,

14th June, 1832.

Instructions to the British Resident.

SIR,—

New South Wales, Government House, 13th April, 1833.

Having received His Majesty's commands to furnish you with instructions for your conduct and guidance in the discharge of your duties as British Resident at New Zealand (to which place I propose you should immediately proceed), I have to request your attention to the following particulars:—

You are probably aware that the creation of the appointment which you hold has originated in the representations made at different times by this Government touching the acts of violence and inhumanity perpetrated on the Natives of New Zealand by the crews of British vessels frequenting those islands. The extent to which these atrocities have been carried may be estimated by the perusal of the accompanying papers relating to the conduct of the master of the brig "Elizabeth," a vessel lately trading between this colony and New Zealand. The facts of this dreadful case made it at once apparent that it was no less a sacred duty than a measure of necessary policy to endeavour, by every possible method, to rescue the Natives of those extensive islands from the evils to which their intercourse with Europeans had exposed them; and, at the same time, to avert from the well-disposed of His Majesty's subjects settled in New Zealand the fatal effects which would sooner or later flow from the continuance of such acts of unprincipled rapacity and sanguinary violence, by exciting the Natives to revenge their injuries by an indiscriminate slaughter of every British subject within their reach.

To check as much as possible the enormities complained of, and to give encouragement and protection to the well disposed settlers and traders from Great Britain and this colony, it has been thought proper to appoint a British subject to reside at New Zealand in an accredited character, whose principal and most important duty it will be to conciliate the good-will of the Native chiefs, and establish upon a permanent basis that good understanding and confidence which it is important to the interests of Great Britain and this colony to perpetuate. It may not be easy to lay down any certain rules by which this desirable object is to be accomplished; but it is expected, by the skilful use of those powers which educated man possesses over the wild or half-civilized savage, an influence may be gained by which the authority and strength of the New Zealand chiefs will be ranged on the side of the Resident for the maintenance of tranquillity throughout the islands. An address to His Majesty lately forwarded from several of the chiefs of New Zealand, requesting the King's interference for the punishment of evil-doers, and claiming His Majesty's protection for their country, sufficiently shows the favourable point of view in which the power and justice of Great Britain are regarded by them. The reply which His Majesty has been graciously pleased to make to that address is calculated to augment this feeling. I have the honour to transmit this reply in original, and to request you will take an early opportunity, after your arrival at the Bay of Islands, of delivering it, with as much formality as circumstances may permit, to as many of the chiefs who subscribed the address as can be conveniently assembled for the purpose. You will also please to take that opportunity for delivering the presents which have been selected for them. It will be fitting at the same time that you explain to the chiefs the object of your mission, and the anxious desire of His Majesty to suppress by your means the recurrence of those disorders of which they complain. You will also announce your intention of remaining among them, and you will claim the protection and privileges which you will tell them are accorded in Europe and America to British subjects holding in foreign States situations similar to yours. You will find it convenient to manage this conference by means of the Missionaries, to whom you will be furnished with credentials, and with whom you are recommended to communicate freely upon the object of your appointment, and the measures you should adopt in treating with the chiefs. The knowledge which the Missionaries have obtained of the language, manners, and customs of the Natives may thus become of the greatest service to you.

You will proceed to New Zealand in His Majesty's ship "Imogene," commanded by Captain Blackwood, who has been requested to afford you not only protection in case of any untoward event, but the countenance and support which the presence of one of His Majesty's ships of war is calculated to afford as well upon your first arrival in the country as during your conference with the chiefs. I may here inform you that the Lords of the Admiralty have instructed Vice-Admiral Sir George Gore, commanding His Majesty's ships and vessels in India, to direct a vessel from his squadron to put in at the principal harbours of New Zealand as frequently as possible.

If your proposal to reside, in an accredited character, in New Zealand shall be received by the chiefs with that satisfaction which from the tenor of their address to His Majesty there is little reason to doubt, you will then confer with them as to the most convenient place for establishing your residence, and will claim protection for the persons and property of yourself, family, and servants, either by the establishment of one or other of the principal chiefs at or near your dwelling, or by placing a native guard over it, or by any other means which, upon conferring with the missionaries, you shall think it expedient to require. If you shall find it necessary to offer such chief or guard, either annually or at shorter periods, any presents of inconsiderable value, they shall be furnished on your application. You should, however, take care, in distributing these or any other presents, not to create a jealousy on the part of those whom it may not be necessary to conciliate, and upon whom, consequently, such presents need not be bestowed.

If, contrary to all expectation, your reception at New Zealand by the chiefs should not be such as to afford you a well-grounded assurance of perfect security for yourself and family, and the chance of being able to accomplish some, at least, of the objects of your mission, you will consider yourself at liberty, after all hope of succeeding by negotiation shall have failed, to re-embark on board the "Imogene" and return to this colony.

Assuming, however, that your reception will be as favourable as has been anticipated, I will endeavour to explain to you the manner of proceeding by which, I am of opinion, you may best succeed in effecting the objects of your mission. You will, at the same time, understand that the information I have been able to obtain respecting New Zealand is too imperfect to allow of my presenting you with anything more than a general outline for your guidance; leaving it to your discretion to take such further measures as shall at any time seem needful. You are aware that you cannot be clothed with any legal power or jurisdiction by virtue of which you might be enabled to arrest British subjects offending against British or colonial law in New Zealand. It was proposed to supply this want of power, and to provide for the enforcement of the criminal law, as it exists among ourselves, and further to adapt it to the new and peculiar exigencies of the country to which you are going, by means of a colonial Act of Council grafted on a statute of the Imperial Parliament. Circumstances which I am not at present competent to explain, have prevented the enactment of the statute in question. You can, therefore, rely but little on the force of law, and must lay the foundation of your measures upon the influence which you shall obtain over the native chiefs. Something, however, may be effected under the law as, it stands at present. By the 9 Geo. IV., cap. 83, sec. 3, the Supreme Courts in New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land have power to inquire of, hear, and determine all offences committed in New Zealand by the master and crew of any British ship or vessel, or by any British subject living there; and persons convicted of such offences may be punished as if the offence had been committed in England. The law having thus given the Court the power to hear and to determine offences, it would seem to follow, as a necessary incident, that it has the power of bringing before it any person against whom any indictment should be found or information filed for any offences within its jurisdiction. If, therefore, you should at any time have the means of sending to this colony any one or more persons capable of lodging an information, before the proper authority here, of an offence committed in New Zealand, you will, if you think the case of sufficient magnitude and importance, send a detailed report of the transaction to the Colonial Secretary by such persons, who will be required to depose to facts sufficient to support any information upon which a Bench warrant may be obtained from the Supreme Court for the apprehension of the offender, and transmitted to you for execution. You will perceive at once that this process, which is at best but a prolix and inconvenient operation, and may incur some considerable expense, will be totally useless unless you should have some well-founded expectation of securing the offender upon or after the arrival of the warrant, and of being able to effect his conveyance here for trial, and that you have provided the necessary evidence to insure his conviction. In cases, however, where a person proceeding from New Zealand to this colony on his own affairs can give evidence of any offence committed by a British subject in New Zealand, it will be right to apprise the Colonial Secretary, in order that a sworn information may be obtained from him, upon which the offender may, if he should arrive in this colony, be immediately apprehended.

Having stated in the foregoing paragraph that the warrant of the Court might be transmitted to you for execution, I would here observe that I can propose no other means by which you may secure the offender than the procuring his apprehension and delivery on board some British ship for conveyance to this country by means of the Native chiefs with whom you shall be in communication.

It is well known that amongst those Europeans who are leading a wandering and irregular life at New Zealand are to be found transported felons and offenders escaped from this colony and Van Diemen's Land. It is desirable that opportunities for the apprehension and transmission of those convicts to either colony should be promptly embraced. The chiefs, it is said, are well acquainted with the descriptions of the different Europeans residing in their country, and will be found able and willing to point out and secure, at a convenient time, those whom they know to be fugitives from the Australian Colonies. You will be furnished, from the office of the Principal Superintendent of Convicts in Sydney, with the names and descriptions of those convicts from New South Wales who are known or suspected to be concealed in the Islands of New Zealand, and you will use your discretion as to the fittest time for causing the apprehension and removal of such as may be within your reach, or are guilty of any offence against the peace and tranquillity of the country.

You will, of course, take every precaution to avoid the apprehension of a free person in mistake for a convict, as an action for damages would probably follow the commission of such an error. This Government will indeed be disposed to save you harmless in all such cases where becoming circumspection has been used; but it would be manifestly imprudent to incur any considerable risk for a trifling advantage.

When any of His Majesty's ships of war are off the coast, you will request the commander to receive the convicts or other prisoners arrested by your means, for conveyance to this place; but, as such opportunities cannot be frequent, arrangements will be made by this Government for the conveyance of all such persons as you shall put on board the merchant vessels engaged in constant trade between this colony and New Zealand. I would further observe that by means of the information which you are likely to receive from the chiefs you may become acquainted with the criminal projects of Europeans before their execution, and, by a timely interference, you may be able altogether to prevent their mischievous designs, or render them abortive. In the character which you hold, you will be justified in addressing any British subject to warn him of the danger to which he may be exposed by embarking or persevering in any undertaking of a criminal or doubtful character.

You will be pleased to keep this Government fully informed of every circumstance of importance occurring in New Zealand which in any way relates to the objects of your mission, or is brought under notice in these instructions. The vessels trading between Sydney and the Bay of Islands will offer the means of forwarding your communications.

In the manner I have now described, and by proceedings of a similar character, it may perhaps be possible to repress the enormities which have heretofore been perpetrated by British subjects in New Zealand. It may also happen that this salutary control will not affect British subjects only, but that the knowledge of there being a functionary stationed in New Zealand, through whom the offences committed by the subjects of any other State against the people of that country will be made known to the British Government, and through that Government to the other European and American Powers, may induce the subjects of those Powers to adopt a less licentious conduct towards the New Zealanders and other inhabitants of the South Sea Islands.

There is still another form in which the influence which it is hoped the British Resident may obtain over the minds of the New Zealand chiefs may be even more beneficially exhibited. It is possible that by your official mediation the evils of intestine war between rival chiefs or hostile tribes may be avoided, and their differences peaceably and permanently composed. It is also possible that at your suggestion, and by the aid of your counsels, some approach may be made by the Natives towards a settled form of government, and that, by the establishment of some system of jurisprudence amongst them, their Courts may be made to claim the cognizance of all crimes committed within their territory, and thus may the offending subjects, of whatever State, be brought to justice by a less circuitous and more efficient process than any which I have been able to point out. If, in addition to the benefits which the British missionaries are conferring on those islanders, by imparting the inestimable blessing of Christian knowledge and a pure system of morals, the New Zealanders should obtain through the means of a British functionary the institution of Courts of justice, established upon a simple and comprehensive basis, some sufficient compensation would seem to be rendered for the injuries inflicted heretofore by our delinquent countrymen.

Having thus explained to you generally the course of proceeding by which I think your residence in New Zealand may be conducive to the suppression of the enormities which British subjects, and those of other States, have been in the habit of committing in those islands, I have only further to observe that it will be your duty to assist, by every means in your power, the commercial relations of Great Britain and her colonies with New Zealand. It would indeed be desirable that you became the medium of all communications between the New Zealand chiefs and the masters of British or colonial vessels frequenting the coasts, and the merchants and settlers established in the islands. This arrangement will probably grow out of your residence in the country, and you should keep it in view as an important object. You will please to forward, by every opportunity, a shipping report, setting forth the names, masters, number of crew, tonnage, and countries of vessels arriving at the Bay of Islands, or other ports of New Zealand, from whence you can obtain correct accounts, with the cargoes of such vessels, their object in touching at New Zealand, and any other particulars concerning them that may be worthy of notice.

You will please to furnish the Government with occasional reports upon the agriculture, commerce, and general statistics of those islands. Under the first of these divisions you will not fail to mention the quantity of flax you may conjecture to be cut annually, and how disposed of. Under the second, I beg to call your attention to the strange and barbarous traffic in human heads, which certainly did exist to some extent, but which I am given to understand is now nearly abandoned. Should it be found to continue or revive, some legislative enactment may be necessary to prohibit, in this colony, the crime and disgrace of participating in so brutalizing a commerce.

Having already mentioned the assistance which I anticipate you will receive from the Missionaries, I have only now to impress upon you the duty of a cordial co-operation with them in the great objects of their solicitude—the extension of Christian knowledge throughout the islands, and the consequent improvement in the habits and morals of the people.

I have, &c.,

RICHARD BOURKE.

James Busby, Esq., British Resident in New Zealand.

THE British Resident announces to his countrymen that he has received from a person who styles himself "Charles, Baron de Thierry, Sovereign Chief of New Zealand and King of Nukuhiva," one of the Marquesas Islands, a formal declaration of his intention to establish in his own person an independent sovereignty in this country, which intention he states he has declared to their Majesties the Kings of Great Britain and France, and to the President of the United States; and that he is now waiting at Otaheite the arrival of an armed ship from Panama to enable him to proceed to the Bay of Islands with strength to maintain his assumed authority. His intention is founded on an alleged invitation given to him in England by Shunghee and other chiefs, none of whom, as individuals, had any right to the sovereignty of the country, and consequently possessed no authority to convey a right of sovereignty to another; also upon an alleged purchase, made for him in 1822 by Mr. Kendall, of three districts on the Hokianga River from three chiefs who had only a partial property in these districts, parts of which are now settled by British subjects by virtue of purchase from the rightful proprietors. The British Resident has also seen an elaborate exposition of his views which this person has addressed to the missionaries of the Church Missionary Society, in which he makes the most ample promises to all persons, whether whites or Natives, who will accept his invitation to live under his Government, and in which he offers a stipulated salary to each individual missionary in order to induce them, to act as his Magistrates. It is also supposed that he may have made similar communications to other persons or classes of His Majesty's subjects, who are hereby invited to make such communications, or any information on this subject they may possess, known to the British Resident or to the Additional British Resident at Hokianga. The British Resident has too much confidence in the loyalty and good sense of his countrymen to think it necessary to caution them against turning a favourable ear to such insidious promises. He firmly believes that the paternal protection of the British Government, which has never failed any of His Majesty's subjects, however remote, will not be withheld from them should it, be necessary to prevent their lives, liberties, or property from being subjected to the caprice of any adventurer who may choose to make this country, in which British subjects have now by the most lawful means acquired so large a stake, the theatre of his ambitious projects, nor, in the British Resident's opinion, will His Majesty, after having acknowledged the sovereignty of the chiefs of New Zealand in their collective capacity by the recognition of their flag, permit his humble and confiding allies to be deprived of their independence upon such pretensions. But, although the British Resident is of opinion that such an attempt as is now announced must ultimately fail, he nevertheless conceives that, if such a person we once allowed to obtain a footing in the country, he might acquire such an influence over the simple-minded Native as would produce effects which could not be too much deprecated or too anxiously provided against; and he has therefore considered it his duty to request the British settlers of all classes to use all the influence they possess with the Natives of every rank in order to counteract the efforts of any emissaries who may have arrived or may arrive amongst them, and to inspire both chiefs and people with a spirit of the most determined resistance to the landing of a person on their shores who comes with the avowed intention of usurping a sovereignty over them. The British Resident will take immediate steps for calling together the Native chiefs in order to inform them of this attempt upon their independence, and to advise them of what is due to themselves and their country, and of the protection which British subjects are entitled to at their hands; and he has no doubt that such a manifestation will be exhibited of the characteristic spirit, courage, and independence of the New Zealanders as will stop at the outset such an attempt upon their liberties, by demonstrating its utter hopelessness.

ADDRESS of the Baron de THIERRY to the WHITE RESIDENTS in NEW ZEALAND.

GENTLEMEN,—

I appeal to every respectable white resident in New Zealand for his decision in a question from which he must discard the prejudice which the reports of evil-disposed persons have insidiously raised against me, and in which he must allow the unshackled dictates of his heart to respond to the voice of honour, honesty, and integrity. I appeal to every New Zealander for the truth; to the relatives of Shungie; to Waikato, my old and valued friend; to the heirs of Mudi Wai; to Patu One; to Nene; and to the missionaries themselves, to say whether I did or did not purchase the land to which I lay claim, many years before it became the favourite residence of Europeans. The family of the late Mr. Kendall yet exist; Mr. F. Hall and Captain James Herd are still alive; and there are many others who can bear witness for me. I appeal to them for the truth in a matter which so closely concerns every person who has ever purchased an acre of land in New Zealand; but let them remember the solemn injunction, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour!"

I claim the district called the Te Tu One, at the source or rise of the River Yokianga; the district of Wai Hue, adjoining the aforesaid district called the Wai Hue; also the district called Huta Kura, adjoining the aforesaid district called Te Papa; all of which districts are situated at the source and on the eastern and western banks of the River Yokianga, and contain by estimation 40,000 acres, be the same more or less. These districts were purchased for me by, Mr. Kendall, of the chiefs Mudi Wai, Patu One, and Nene (friends to Shungie and Waikato). in presence of Captain James Herd and Mr. William Edward Green, master and first officer of the ship "Providence," then in New Zealand; on the 7th day of August, 1822, forwarded to England by the hands of Mr. F. Hall, missionary, through the Church Missionary House in London, and copies delivered at the Foreign Office, Downing, Street, and Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Paris. The question at issue is, then, whether the first purchase has the first right, or whether a first purchaser's right is to be destroyed at the will of the original seller. If the first be decided according to the written law of every civilized nation on earth, the land belongs to me; but, if the Natives have a right to resell, they may do it again and as often as they please; and I might (if I were capable of such an act) consider myself justified by such a decision in purchasing all the lands now held by the white residents at Hokianga; the residents might again purchase over me, and I over them, till he who has lost most money, or has most friends to back him, remains master of the field, until some man of larger capital renews a struggle which must ultimately bring ruin to all parties, and end in the total extermination of the whites.

You that have bought land in New Zealand; you that have wives and children to look to you for provision; you who do not side with robbers and oppressors; you who must recognize the rights of others, if you wish them to recognize your own; you will one day be called upon to render an account of your proceedings to the high tribunal of Heaven. Will you consent to see me deprived of a right which I claim in common with every other landowner in that country? Remember, gentlemen, that my expedition has been projected and been often attempted for upwards of sixteen years. The eyes of the world are now open upon you, and you will be judged by your own verdict. The 'question which affects my claim involves the legitimacy of your own, and you must hold your own lands or lose them according' to the side you take in the case now before you.

I know that several respectable families are residing on my lands, intending perhaps to settle there for life; and I am equally aware that their industry has greatly increased the value of my estates. Let them be assured that I have no wish to disturb them, and that I would rather add to their comforts by all the means in my power than put them to loss or inconvenience. For every acre which the residents may have in cultivation on my arrival, I will grant them a free lease of three acres for so long as they shall acknowledge me as lord, of the soil; with this reservation only: that should their families at any time leave the country without intention to return, I shall re-enter into possession, and have the refusal at a fair valuation of such buildings and other improvements as may have been erected on the land. Their cattle may continue to run on any unenclosed part of my territories, and I will, protect their property with as much attention as my own. It must be obvious to every one that the greater the number of residents on the land the more its value must improve. I consider I derive a real benefit by the sacrifice of part of my property, because other parts become more valuable as population increases; and, by the same reasoning, those to whom I resign portions of land will be better off with such estates as they can turn to advantage than if they possessed the whole country. I improve the value of every man's, property, besides increasing his means of doing business, by bringing customers for what he may have to sell, leaving the small trade to those who already enjoy it, and retailing no further than may be necessary to satisfy the Natives for what I may require of them. My arrival in New Zealand can have no other effect than to bring a fast-accumulating host of customers to the retailers, and consequently to cause a vast improvement in their circumstances. Connected with mercantile firms of the highest respectability in both, hemispheres, I shall be able to afford the small trader the facilities which have hitherto been wanting to his prosperity; he will have constant opportunities of sending his produce to a market, without dread of overwhelming monopolies. At the present time a settler may saw timber, salt a few barrels of pork, or have a few tons of maize, potatoes, or flax for sale, without being able to dispose of them at a fair profit; or he may be unable to wait, three or four months for the return of his little capital from these colonies, which return is rendered the more uncertain by his being unable to effect assurances on his property. I shall make the necessary arrangements for the removal of this disadvantage, so that risks may be covered, and my keeper of the stores shall be instructed to purchase marketable produce from the smaller trader at average colonial prices, deducting a reasonable profit, freight, assurance, and commission. By an immediate return of capital the industrious man may have all the benefit of his exertions, and, by turning it over as often as he may have produce to sell, his yearly profits will be considerably increased, and he will be saved all the risk and disappointment which he has to contend with. Important as these advantages must be to those who wish to insure a provision to their families, it is obvious that they cannot be obtained unless New Zealand affords such a protection to life and property as may justify merchants in making consignments or investing capital in commercial speculations. This protection must necessarily depend on the sort of guarantee which an organized system of government is able to offer and, as it is no less certain that a Native Government can never sufficiently understand those intricate questions in political economy, to benefit the mass without injury to individuals, than it is clear that foreign government would bring inevitable ruin on the whole body of settlers, there exists an imperious and unquestionable necessity that I should remove these fatal disabilities by the adoption of a rational and paternal independence. But, though I am so well impressed with all the advantages which must arise from my early arrival, and though I know that at least a portion of New Zealand will be saved from the horrors of anarchy, I interfere with no part of it save my own territories. Such of our neighbours as may be desirous to benefit by our institutions shall be received as brothers, their land shall be surveyed and enrolled, and in the hour of danger, as in times of peace, their families shall be protected with our lives. Strong by being united, happy in neighbourly harmony, we must bring upon the New Zealanders and upon ourselves those blessings which may lay the foundation of the future greatness of our adopted country.

Believe me, residents of Hokianga, that I have not been unmindful of your necessities. I go to govern within the bounds of my own territories, it is true; but I neither go as an invader nor a despot. You will find, in me a brother and a friend, who will feel proud of, your advice and co-operation in legislative measures, and who, without claiming an unwilling service from you, will preside over, your safety and prosperity. Had this been done ten years ago how different would have been the present condition of the white man and of the New Zealander! In a community like yours what can you do without a head? No nation can enter into treaty with you; your possessions and property are exposed to every vicissitude; you are bound by no common sympathies; you have no certain protection against danger, because your very pursuits divide your interests; you have no strength to oppose to foreign or domestic invasion, no power to prevent or punish crime: even in the most extreme cases you may have to cross the seas in search of slow and uncertain justice; you are oppressed by monopolies, and are little better; than outcasts, where you have the power to be happy, secure, and prosperous. I need not represent to you the long catalogue of disadvantages under which you labour; they are well known to you; and, if you can banish from your minds the ridiculous reports which have been propagated concerning my "pretensions" (as they have been styled), Hokianga will immediately become what no other part of New Zealand has ever yet been, and which none will ever be able to become unless there exists a power which you assist in directing, and in which the Natives will participate in proportion as they are able to understand the intricacies of civilized government. Then will you reap the golden harvest of your early speculations, your lands will rapidly rise in value, and the immense resources of New Zealand will attract to our shores traders from all nations, who will take our produce and spread before our thriving families all the comforts and enjoyments of home.

A due regard to your present situation has induced me to make pecuniary sacrifices, of which you will not, I am certain, be unmindful. I shall be accompanied by a considerable number of respectable families, who will add to your society and increase your feeling of security. I take a surgeon, whose duty will be to give gratuitous attendance to the poor of either colour; also experienced agriculturists, who will instruct you in the cultivation of cotton and tobacco; mechanics of various trades, whose joint efforts will vastly improve your circumstances; and hundreds of persons will follow by, the regular traders which are to visit our settlement. I have engaged a gentleman of high classical attainments as tutor to my sons, and given him permission to take the sons of respectable settlers under his care, who will have the advantage of the best education. A lady will have the care of my daughter, of the daughters of the principal persons accompanying me, and of such residents on my territories as may wish to intrust her with their children. In both these academies the sons and daughters of chiefs will be clothed, and will receive a liberal English education. To all chiefs who shall enter into treaty with me, and engage to live at peace with other tribes and with the whites, I will give occasional bounties in reward of good conduct; and everything shall be done on my part to better their situation, and to raise them to a respectable rank in society.

It is well known that no civilized government can be carried on without a revenue, and the settlers may ask whether it is to be derived from direct or indirect taxes. I do not intend resorting to either; and by this declaration I can show that the residents on my territories will be in more prosperous circumstances than those of any other civilized nation; for should all import dues and licenses (to say nothing of direct taxation) only amount to 5 per cent on the yearly expenses of a resident in Sydney, he will be £5 poorer on every hundred than he spends than if he were living in New Zealand. It is as easy to begin' by establishing a productive Government as it is to form a consuming one. If we farm 5,000 acres of land to cover public expenses, and we clear about £10 per acre by our crops, we shall be in receipt of £50,000 a year; and by due attention to our growing wants we can meet them with a large surplus without adding to the cost of imported goods or cramping the means of individuals. By opening our port to free trade we attract traders from all nations; and Hokianga, had she but a better entrance, would become the emporium of the new world.

I claim jurisdiction over no part beyond my own territories; but, if it should ever be the policy of the Bay of Islands to become a member of our society, a degree of prosperity will ensue of which no infant nation can offer a parallel. New Zealand has such elements of wealth within herself that nothing is wanting to her greatness but a national domestic Government, capable of giving the necessary guarantees at home and abroad. A vigorous administration, on the mildest and most equitable representative principles, in which every man, whether white or Native, has an interest, must be productive of happiness and harmony; and, as our institutions can never do otherwise than increase the prosperity of these colonies and add to their security, we shall ever be bound by the strong ties of reciprocal interest and good feeling.

I have too high an opinion of the residents of Hokianga to believe that those who have been so active in misrepresenting my intentions to the Natives will now withhold the real truth from them; and I feel persuaded that amidst so many white settlers some will be found whose honest candour will induce them to convey to the chiefs the substance of this address, and point out to them the happiness and prosperity which my arrival must secure to the tribes of which I consider myself the sovereign representative.

To the Wesleyan Missionaries who are said to reside on my territories I can only say, in common with other settlers, Continue to reside where you are; and may that same Almighty God whom we all adore assist me in increasing the measure of your usefulness to the people of New Zealand.

You will judge by the annexed Articles of Agreement, by which I bind those who accompany me' whether I am likely to do good or evil. Judge me by my works, as the tree is judged by its fruit; and, upon fair and impartial consideration, I am convinced you will believe me,

Gentlemen, Your very sincere friend,

CACHARLES, BARON DE THIERBY.

Sydney,

20th September, 1837.

Bay of Islands.—Transmitting Declaration of Independence. British Residency at New, Zealand, Bay of Islands, 2nd November, 1835.

SIR,—

I have the honour to enclose herewith a copy of a Declaration by the chiefs of the northern parts of New Zealand, of the independence of their country, and of their having; united their tribes into one State, under the designation of "The United Tribes of New Zealand."

In this Declaration the chiefs entreat that His Majesty will continue to be the parent of their infant State, and that he will become its protector from all attempts upon its independence; and it is at their unanimous desire that I transmit this document, in order to its being laid at the feet of His Majesty.

I have, &c.,

JAMES BUSBY, British Resident at New Zealand.

Mr. Under-Secretary Hay, &c.

Enclosure.DECARATION of the INDEPENDENCE of NEW ZEALAND.

- WE, the hereditary chiefs and heads of the tribes of the northern parts of New Zealand, being assembled at Waitangi, in the Bay of Islands, on this 28th day of October, 1835, declare the independence of our country, which is hereby constituted and declared to be an independent State, under the designation of "The United Tribes of New Zealand."
- All sovereign power and authority within the territories of the United Tribes of New Zealand is hereby declared to reside entirely and exclusively in the hereditary chiefs and heads of tribes in their collective capacity, who also declare that they will not permit any legislative authority separate from themselves in their collective capacity to exist, nor any function of government to be exercised within the said territories, unless by persons appointed by them, and acting under the authority of laws regularly enacted by them in Congress assembled.
- The hereditary chiefs and heads of tribes agree to meet in Congress at Waitangi, in the autumn of each year, for the purpose of framing laws for the dispensation of justice, the preservation of peace and good order, and the regulation of trade; and they, cordially; invite the southern tribes to: lay aside their private animosities, and to consult the safety and welfare of our common country by joining the confederation of the United Tribes.

- They also agree to send a copy of this declaration to His Majesty the King of England, to thank him for his acknowledgment of their flag; and, in return for the friendship and protection they have shown and are prepared to show to such of his subjects as have settled in their country, or resorted to its shores for the purposes of trade, they entreat that he will continue to be the parent of their infant State, and that he will become its protector from all attempts upon its independence.

Agreed to unanimously on this 28th day of October, 1835, in the presence of His Britannic Majesty's Resident.

[Here follow the signatures or marks of thirty-five hereditary chiefs or heads of tribes, which form a fair representation of the tribes of New Zealand from the North Cape to the latitude of the River Thames.]

English witnesses—

- George Clarke, C.M.S.
- James C. Clendon, Merchant.
- Gilbert Mair, Merchant.

I certify that the above is a correct copy of the declaration of the chiefs according to the translation of missionaries who have resided ten years and upwards in the country, and it is transmitted to His Most Gracious Majesty the King of England at the unanimous request of the chiefs.

JAMES BUSBY, British Resident at New Zealand.

Respecting the Maori Declaration of Independence.

I have received a letter from Mr. Busby enclosing a copy of a declaration made by the chiefs of the northern parts of New Zealand, setting forth the independence of their country and declaring the union of their respective tribes into one State, under the designation of "The United Tribes of New Zealand." I perceive that the chiefs at the same time came to the resolution to send a copy of their declaration to His Majesty, to thank him for his acknowledgment of their flag, and to entreat that in return for the friendship and protection which they have shown and are prepared to show to such British subjects as have settled in their country or resorted to its shores for the purpose of trade, His Majesty will continue to be the parent of their infant State, and its protector from all attempts on its independence.

With reference to the desire which the chiefs have expressed on this occasion to maintain a good understanding with His Majesty's subjects, it will be proper that they should be assured, in His Majesty's name, that he will not fail to avail himself of every opportunity of showing his good-will, and of affording to those chiefs such support and protection, as may be consistent with a due regard to the just rights of others, and to the interests of His Majesty's subjects.

On British Settlement in New Zealand. Government House, Sydney, 9th September, 1837.

MY LORD,—

While awaiting the measure which your Lordship has recently announced an intention of resuming for the parliamentary regulation of the intercourse between British subjects and New Zealand, it may be proper to lay before His Majesty's Government whatever information I am able to procure upon this difficult question.

With this view, having lately had occasion, in consequence of a war breaking out between two tribes near the Bay of Islands, to request Captain Hobson, commanding His Majesty's ship "Rattlesnake," an experienced and judicious officer, to repair to New Zealand to afford to British subjects resident there and to British shipping such protection as might be required, I proposed to him to make known to me on his return the opinions which his observation whilst there might lead him to form upon the present state of New Zealand, and the means of securing, with the least possible overt interference, the common interests of the Natives and of the British settled amongst them. This request has been complied with in the letter of which a copy is transmitted, and which appears to me to contain suggestions of great value. Captain Hobson proposes the introduction of commercial establishments, confined within certain limits, upon a plan resembling the factories of the early trading companies resorting from Europe to India, and within which limits resident British subjects shall be placed under the protection and obligation of their own laws; premising, as an inflexible condition that nothing whatever be established on the part of the British Government which is not cheerfully conceded on terms of clear mutual interest by the Natives. The details of the proposed measure may be varied to suit whatever circumstances may arise; and this without giving any reasonable cause for jealousy on the part of the other States, or exciting alarm in the breasts of those philanthropists who so creditably and powerfully advocate the rights of the aborigines all over the world. It is neither possible nor desirable to put a stop to the growing intercourse between the English colonies in those seas and New Zealand, the extent of which will appear by the accompanying return. If the British Resident were withdrawn, which I represented in a former despatch to be an alternative preferable to his being left there without adopting some further measures to secure the professed objects of his appointment, the public might indeed be warned that the trade of New Zealand was to be carried on at their own hazard; but it would be difficult for His Majesty or for this Government to act for any length of time upon the stern principle of non interference, if the lives or property of British subjects appeared to be in jeopardy. Any plan, therefore, by which intercourse may be sufficiently regulated, and usurpation, real or apparent, avoided,—providing at the same time for its support without drawing upon the revenues of this colony,—is well worthy of serious consideration. I confess that I am unable to submit a better arrangement than this, which Captain Hobson has proposed, and therefore beg to recommend his letter to your Lordship's attention.

With Captain Hobson's report I have the honour to transmit the copy of a letter received by his hands from the Resident, Mr. Busby, describing at considerable length the present condition and character of the New Zealanders, and the manner in which they are affected by the intercourse of Europeans. This letter contains suggestions for the future proceedings of Great Britain towards New Zealand, which are not without value, but which would probably be found difficult to reconcile with some of the peculiar circumstances affecting the matter under consideration. Mr. Busby recommends that Great Britain should undertake the protection of New Zealand, and for this purpose should maintain British troops on the islands; but, though this undertaking should be commenced with the greatest good-faith and purest intentions, it would be open to misinterpretation, and in a remote country, where it is hardly to be expected the law would be very efficiently administered, it might be eventually perverted by British subjects to selfish purposes.

A part of Mr. Busby's letter being taken up in the description of the Native war to which I have alluded, and which alarmed him for the safety of the European inhabitants, I am happy to be able to show, by the copy of a letter since received from him, that peace is now restored. Your Lordship will perceive with pleasure that it has (I believe for the first time in New Zealand) been effected without the loss of human life by way of retaliation, or as the price of accommodation: a piece of land being accepted in compensation of an aggression which had caused the death of a woman belonging to one of the belligerent tribes.

I take the present opportunity of stating that the Baron de Thierry, who was mentioned in your Lordship's despatch of the 26th August last, is at present in Sydney, where he arrived on his way to New Zealand to seek possession of a large tract of property which he claims to have acquired by purchase. He has complained to me that the spars for the use of the navy, to be furnished to His Majesty's ship "Buffalo," now proceeding hence to New Zealand, are cut on his land; but I have, declined interfering in any way in the matter. Nor have I considered it my duty to interpose any obstacle to his proceeding to New Zealand, of which country he claims to be a chief by right of his purchases. He denies all intention of prejudicing the interest of Great Britain, and professes a reliance upon moral influence alone for the authority he expects to acquire among the New Zealanders.

I have, &c.,

RICH. BOURKE.

Visit of H.M.S. "Rattlesnake" to New Zealand. H.M.S. "Rattlesnake," Port Jackson, 8th August, 1837.
SIR,—

I have the honour to acquaint you that His Majesty's ship "Rattlesnake" in her late cruise visited the Bay of Islands and several other ports on the eastern coast of New Zealand, and in Cook Straits.

It affords me great satisfaction to assure your Excellency that the European settlers at the Bay of Islands repose the most entire confidence in the friendly disposition of the Natives, notwithstanding the existence of war between the two tribes settled in their immediate neighbourhood. I am aware that the British Resident is not free from apprehension; but from the intercourse I maintained with the Missionaries, and all other classes of British subjects, I am free to assert that he stands alone in the opinion he has formed.

Tribal War at the Bay of Islands.

The war between the Bay of Island tribes under Pomare and Titore is the only one now prevailing in New Zealand, notwithstanding that many of the auxiliaries enlisted under the rival chiefs have come from considerable distances in every direction; but this does not appear to disturb the harmony of those who remain behind in their pas, although the nearest neighbours are engaged on opposite sides.

Reverting to the position in which our countrymen stand in regard to these factions, it is a remarkable fact, and worthy of imitation by more civilized Powers, that the hostile forces have repeatedly passed through the very enclosures of the Missionaries at Paihia, on their way to and from the field of battle, without molesting a single article belonging to the whites and in one instance the two parties, by mutual consent, removed the scene of action to a greater distance from our settlements, lest a white man should by accident be injured. How long this feeling may continue, it is impossible to say. I only know that those who have everything at stake—their lives, their families and their properties—entertain not the slightest apprehension of any change.

I heartily wish I could report as favourably of their situation with respect to the abandoned ruffians from our own country who have, from time to time, found their way to the Bay of Islands. From these, indeed, there is much to be dreaded. An instance of a most daring burglary occurred in my absence on the East Coast, in which a British settler was extensively robbed, his life attempted, and the females of his family most brutally treated. I am happy to say, two out of four of the perpetrators of this outrage have been apprehended and banished by the Natives, and were brought to Sydney in this ship. I sincerely hope the 9th of George the Fourth will be found applicable to their case, and that they may be made an example to many of a similar character who remain behind to disgrace our nation even in the eyes of savages.

In our cruise on the eastern coasts I visited Puriri and Waikaitewa, on the Thames, the Island of Waiheke, at its entrance, and Cloudy Bay, in Cook Straits. I intended to have called at Entry Island and Mana, where a Mr. Bell has settled, but the boisterous state of the weather prevented any anchoring. I stood close in to both islands, and feel convinced that the very appearance of a man-of-war in that quarter will have considerable weight, from the terror in which we are held by the Natives in consequence of the severe chastisement inflicted on them by the "Alligator," and the detachment of H.M. 50th Regiment, in 1835; and, for the same reason, I have no doubt but our visit to the Thames will also be productive of benefit, for there the Natives are in a more primitive state than at the Bay of Islands, and when engaged in war have not always been so scrupulous about the property of British subjects, although in no instance has any violence been done to their persons. I will suggest to the officer who may succeed me on this station to open a further intercourse with the Natives on the Thames, which will soon place our settlers there in a state of as perfect security as in any part of the Island.

On the northern shores of Cook Straits a most powerful tribe of Natives have collected, under the celebrated warrior Rauparaha, but it does not appear they have in view any warlike object: indeed, if they had, our countrymen, with the exception of Mr. Bell and his small party on the islands, would have but little to fear, for the only other places to which the whites resort are Cloudy Bay and Queen Charlotte Sound, where they are so numerous, and so confederate by their pursuits (which are exclusively whale-fishing), that no tribe of Natives whatsoever dare molest them. The only danger they have to apprehend is from themselves, and that is in a great measure neutralized by the counteracting influence of their own reckless and desperate character.

The quarrel between the Bay of Island tribes is supposed, by the best-informed, to be in a fair train for adjustment. When we sailed, the loss sustained by the conflicting parties was more nearly on a par, not from the numbers slain, but from the possession acquired by the Ngapuhis (as Titore's people are called) of the dead body of a chief of the opposite party, on whom atonement was made for an insult that was offered to two of their chiefs, who had been killed in battle and found by the enemy. There are other causes too that, it is hoped, will lead to pacification. Nene, a powerful chief from Hokianga, who has embraced Christianity, has brought his tribe across the island with the full determination to compel the contending parties to make peace; and, as he is known to possess both courage and power to turn the scale on either side, his mediation is not likely to be slighted. The scarcity of provisions and the necessity for agriculture will also operate favourably towards the same object. On the other hand, the excellent chief Titore is dead, and his people are under the direction of a perfect savage, who thirsts for war; and Pomare, the head of the opposite tribe, is likewise a violent fellow, who claims a right to the land of Kororareka, which was once his, but was ceded to Titore at the peace of 1830. The gentlemen of the Mission maintain a constant intercourse between the parties, and are received by both with the greatest respect. Their efforts to promote peace are unremitting, and of late they have felt confident of eventual success.

Social Condition of the New Zealanders.

In reporting to your Excellency my views and observations on the social condition of the New Zealanders, I cannot repress a feeling of deep regret that so fine and intelligent a race of human beings should, in the present state of general civilization, be found in barbarism; for there is not on earth a people more susceptible of high intellectual attainments, or more capable of becoming a useful and industrious race under a wise Government. At present, notwithstanding their formal declaration of independence, they have not, in fact, any government whatsoever nor could a meeting of the chiefs who profess to be the heads of the United Tribes take place at any time without danger of bloodshed. How, then can it be expected that laws will be framed for the dispensation of justice or the preservation of peace and good order, even if Native judgment were sufficiently matured to enact such laws or to carry them into execution?

Whilst the disunited state of the tribes, and their jealousy of each other, render it impossible to enact or execute laws, it also lays them open to the designs of turbulent individuals, and destroys all confidence in the permanency of the peace.

That their wars, which are fast depopulating their beautiful country, may sooner or later be extended to our countrymen, is a circumstance that it would be the height of rashness to doubt; and as British subjects are fast accumulating, and are every day acquiring considerable possessions of land, it must become a subject of deep solicitude with the British Government to devise some practicable mode of protecting them from violence, and of restraining them from aggression.

Heretofore the great and powerful moral influence of the Missionaries has done much to check the natural turbulence of the Native population; but the dissolute conduct of the lower orders of our countrymen not only tends to diminish that holy influence, but to provoke the resentment of the Natives, which, if once excited, would produce the most disastrous consequences. It becomes, therefore, a solemn duty, both in justice to the better classes of our fellow-subjects and to the Natives themselves, to apply a remedy for the growing evil.

Establishment of British Factories desirable.

It has occurred to me that if factories were established at the Bay of Islands, at Cloudy Bay and Hokianga, and in other places, as the occupation by British subjects proceeds, a sufficient restraint could be constitutionally imposed on the licentious whites, without exciting the jealousy of the New Zealanders, or of any other Power.

I will not presume to enter too deeply into the details of such a measure, but beg simply to suggest that sections of land be purchased, enclosed, and placed within the influence of British jurisdiction, as dependencies of this colony.

The heads of factories should be magistrates, and the chief factor should, in addition, be accredited to the united chiefs of New Zealand as a political agent and consul. All communications with the British Government should take place through the chief factor, with whom alone the local factors should correspond.

All British subjects should be required to register themselves and their landed property at the factories.

Two or more of the most respectable British residents nearest to each station should hold Commissions of the Peace to assist the factors.

Prisons should be constructed within the factories, and legally proclaimed in the colony.

A treaty should be concluded with the New Zealand chiefs for the recognition of British factories, and the protection of British subjects and property.

To meet the expenses which the establishment of a system of factories upon the principle I have mentioned would necessarily entail, funds might be obtained from a variety of sources, such as a small fee on the registration of the purchase of land from the Natives, on the entry and clearance of British shipping, and a small percentage on goods and produce imported and exported. The greater security which would result from this system would, it is conceived, readily dispose the British subjects resident in New Zealand to conform to such an impost.

I am aware of the necessity of a British Act of Parliament to give effect to the whole system, to impart to the colonial Courts of New South Wales, more perfectly than at present, jurisdiction over offences committed by British subjects in New Zealand, and to the colonial Legislature to enact such laws in respect thereof as the more complete local knowledge of the country might from time to time suggest.

The benefit that may be supposed to result from the establishment of factories in New Zealand is not confined to the mere legal protection they are calculated to afford but we may hope they will be the means of introducing amongst the Natives a system of civil government which may hereafter be adopted and enlarged upon. Nor is it to be overlooked that in times of intestine war they will afford a safe retreat to our fellow-countrymen, who will become powerful by concentration.

I trust the imperfection of the foregoing details may not be allowed to militate against the measure I have the honour to suggest, but, if the principle be approved, that it may be modified and arranged by abler hands, so as to adapt it to the exigency of the case.

I have, &c.,

W. HOBSON, Captain.

British Residency, Bay of Islands, 16th June, 1837.

SIR,—

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 16th ultimo, which was delivered to me on the 27th of the same month by Captain Hobson, of His Majesty's ship "Rattlesnake."

On the Tribal War at the Bay of Islands.

By my letter of the 4th ultimo, No. 111, His Excellency Sir Richard Bourke would perceive that the fears I had formerly expressed, that war was about to break out in this immediate neighbourhood had been realized but that, contrary to all expectation, the conduct of the Natives towards the British settlers had been, on the whole, most exemplary. I am happy to add that it has so continued up to the arrival of the "Rattlesnake," Under circumstances so favourable, an attempt was made by Captain Hobson, accompanied by a party of Missionaries and myself, to mediate between the contending parties, but without effect. The chiefs on Pomare's side, whom I formerly represented as being unfriendly to Pomare's procedure, although in a manner constrained to take part with him, were most favourable to the proposition, and requested that one or two persons, whom they named, of the opposite party should meet them to adjust the preliminaries; but Pomare himself turned a deaf ear to every argument that could be urged.

The overtures of the well-disposed chiefs were nevertheless delivered, but they were received by the Ngapuhis in the most unfriendly spirit; and, on its being too evident that all attempts at mediation were fruitless, Captain Hobson concluded by cautioning them as to their conduct to British subjects, assuring them that if any violence should be offered by either party to these it would then become his duty to take satisfaction, and that he would do it effectually.

Since the date of my last despatch the war canoes have been almost every day in motion; but there have been only two encounters of the parties worthy of notice. In these two affairs thirty persons were killed The Ngapuhis have lost another chief of the first rank, and in other respects have been the severest sufferers from the commencement of hostilities. The injury for which they took up arms has consequently been aggravated by every attempt to obtain reparation.

A fact has also come to my knowledge which gives a greater colour of truth to Pomare's original accusation than any circumstance of which I was previously aware, namely, that the woman, of whom it was alleged that she had been murdered and eaten on being landed from the ship, had formerly been the wife of the person who was charged with her murder. It was, in former times, a very common case for a chief to put to death any of his wives who had deserted or been unfaithful to him.

But, whatever may have been the real circumstances or motives which originated the present war, there is not the least probability of its being speedily brought to a termination. Pomare's party appear confident in the strength of their position, and the Ngapuhis are evidently actuated by the most irritated and vindictive feelings; and there seems no reason to doubt that they will speedily be joined by the powerful Tribe of Rarawa, from the more northerly parts of the island. Under these circumstances, although the visit of His Majesty's ship "Rattlesnake" at this juncture is peculiarly important, as making it appear to the Natives that a vigilant guardianship is maintained over His Majesty's subjects who are settled here, and that assistance is never at a great distance, should it be required, yet it is impossible to look at the continuance of this contest without the most serious alarm.

Titore, who was the most influential of the Ngapuhi chiefs in preserving order in the Town of Kororareka, where the Natives and British are mingled in the greatest numbers, died a few days ago; and in several instances already I have heard that the loss of his influence has been felt to the detriment of the British inhabitants. Whatever influence the other chiefs possess will also be weakened when their provisions become exhausted and, as little or no cultivation will be attempted while things remain in their present position, it may naturally be expected that the Natives will become reckless in proportion to their want of the means of subsistence.

Under these circumstances, His Excellency will be prepared for my entire concurrence in his opinion that any additional expenditure, with the view of giving increased efficiency to my office as at present constituted, would be altogether fruitless; nor would the Act of Parliament to which His Excellency refers, if the powers it was intended to impart should be limited to the controlling of British subjects, be of much service in the state to which the affairs of this country have arrived. What is wanted is a paramount authority supported by a force adequate to secure the efficiency of its measures.

Without the establishment of such an authority by some civilized State, I cannot, after a full consideration of every circumstance connected with the actual condition of this people, see the least prospect of any permanent peace being established amongst them whilst there remains a stronger man to murder his weaker neighbour. There are few persons so insignificant as not to have it in their power at any time to plunge the country into war. The crime of an individual involves his most distant connections, as each of them is a legitimate object of retaliation to the connections of the injured party. It is in vain to represent to them that the criminal alone should suffer: their answer is ready, and it is perfectly consistent with the dictates of natural justice, namely, that his tribe will not surrender him to suffer for his crime, and by standing up in his defence they have become participators in it while, on the other hand, provided the criminal be not a slave, his connections are never without a grievance more or less ancient, which they bring forward as a justification of his crime. Thus, by every attempt to administer the law of retaliation—the rude justice of nature—the breach is made wider. New deaths involve more distant connections; tribe after tribe becomes a party to the contest; and peace, or rather an intermission of murders, can only be procured when one of the parties becomes too weak to continue the contest, or when the loss on both sides happens to be so nearly balanced that neither party has an advantage over the other.

In this way has the depopulation of the country been going on, till district after district has become void of its inhabitants, and the population is, even now, but a remnant of what it was in the memory of some European residents.

Rapid Decrease of the Maori Population.

It would, in relation to the subject on which I intend to enter in this despatch, be an interesting and important question, did there exist means of bringing it to a satisfactory solution, how far, this depopulation of the country, which has at least been rapid in proportion to the increase of its intercourse with the whites, was originated by the latter and may justly be chargeable to them. My own opinion is that all the apparent causes which are in operation are quite inadequate to account for the rapid disappearance of the people.

The introduction of firearms is alleged as one cause, but there seems good reason to doubt whether their wars were less sanguinary before firearms were introduced. The use of intoxicating liquors and tobacco are less questionable evils and, though their direct influence cannot, I think, be stated as at all remarkable, they are, in all probability, the original causes of diseases with which their immediate connection is not apparent.

Venereal diseases are another means of undermining the constitution of the multitudes who, in one shape or other, are subjected to them; and, besides these sources of disease and death, the abuse of the females who are sent by their masters or relations on board ships, and the murder of the fruits of this intercourse, which is believed by those likely to be best-informed to be of frequent occurrence, are undoubtedly powerful checks to increase, and ought to be largely allowed for in estimating the causes which are in operation for the depopulation of the country. But, on the other hand, it must not be lost sight of that the mortality has not been confined to those who have been the victims of violence, or who have been exposed to the effects of vices or diseases of foreign origin. Disease and death prevail even amongst those natives who, by their adherence to the Missionaries, have received only benefits from English connections; and even the very children who are reared under the care of Missionaries are swept off in a ratio which promises, at no very distant period, to leave the country destitute of a single aboriginal inhabitant.

The Natives are perfectly sensible of this decrease; and when they contrast their own condition with that of the English families, amongst whom the marriages have been prolific in a very extraordinary degree of a most healthy progeny, they conclude that the God of the English is removing the aboriginal inhabitants to make room for them; and it appears to me that this impression has produced amongst them a very general recklessness and indifference to life.

Respecting Captain Hobson's Appointment as British Consul. Downing Street, 1st July, 1839.
My LORDS,—

It having been deemed expedient by Her Majesty's Government to establish some competent British authority in the Islands of New Zealand, it has been determined that Captain Hobson, R.N., should proceed thither, invested with the character of British Consul.

The first object contemplated in making this appointment is to obtain from the Native chiefs the cession to Her Majesty of certain parts of those Islands, which it is proposed should be there added to the Colony of New South Wales as a dependency of that Government, when Captain Hobson would assume the character of Lieutenant-Governor.

In furtherance of this object I am to signify to your Lordships Her Majesty's pleasure that a ship of war may be appointed to convey Captain Hobson and his family to New South Wales, and thence to New Zealand, with instructions to the Commander to afford Captain Hobson such aid and co-operation as he may stand in need of, pending his negotiations with the various Native chiefs.

I shall take an opportunity of communicating to your Lordships such instructions as may be issued to Captain Hobson for his guidance in the execution of this service.

I have, &c.,

NORMANBY.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

Bay of Islands.—Narrative of Proceedings on Arrival in New Zealand. H.M.S. "Herald," Bay of Islands, 5th February, 1840.
Sir,—

I have the honour to acquaint your Excellency that immediately on my arrival here I circulated notices printed in the Native language that on this day I would hold a meeting of the chiefs of the Confederation, and of the high chiefs who had not yet signed the Declaration of Independence, for the purpose of explaining to them the commands I had received from Her Majesty the Queen, and of laying before them the copy of a Treaty which I had to propose for their consideration.

Accordingly a vast number of chiefs, with a multitude of followers, crowded in from every quarter, and at 12 this day they assembled under spacious tents, decorated with flags, which had been previously erected at Waitangi by the direction of Captain Nias, of this ship.

First Levée and Native Meeting held.

Preparatory to the meeting, I had appointed a levée to be held at Mr. Busby's house at 11 o'clock, to which I invited all the principal European inhabitants, the members of the Church of England and Catholic Missions, and all the officers of this ship, and was highly gratified to find that nearly every one, either here or in the neighbourhood, favoured me with their attendance.

Soon after 12 I proceeded to the tent, supported by Captain Nias and his officers, Mr. Busby (the late Resident), the members of the Church Missionary Society, the French bishop, the officers of the Government, and all the principal European inhabitants, &c., in procession, and took my seat on a raised platform, surrounded by the gentlemen in the same order as they had accompanied me. In the centre of the area within the tents, the chiefs seated themselves upon the ground, leaving a space round them for the Europeans. The whole spectacle produced a most imposing effect.

Treaty of Waitangi read and discussed.

The business of the meeting then commenced by my announcing to the chiefs the object of my mission, and the reasons that had induced Her Majesty to appoint me. I explained to them in the fullest manner the effect that might be hoped to result from the measure, and I assured them in the most fervent manner that they might rely implicitly on the good faith of Her Majesty's Government in the transaction. I then read the Treaty a copy of which I have the honour to enclose; and, in doing so, I dwelt on each article, and offered a few remarks explanatory of such passages as they might be supposed not to understand. Mr. H. Williams, of the Church Missionary Society, did me the favour to interpret, and repeated in the Native tongue, sentence by sentence, all I said.

When I had finished reading the Treaty, I invited the chiefs to ask explanations on any point they did not comprehend, and to make any observations or remarks on it they pleased. Twenty or thirty chiefs addressed the meeting, five or six of whom opposed me with great violence, and at one period with such effect, and so cleverly, that I began to apprehend an unfavourable impression would be produced. At this crisis, the Hokianga chiefs, under Nene and Patuone, made their appearance, and nothing could have been more seasonable. It was evident, from the nature of the opposition, that some underhand influence had been at work. The chiefs Rewa and Ihakara, who are followers of the Catholic bishop, were the principal opposers, and the arguments were such as convinced me they had been prompted. Rewa, while addressing me, turned to the chiefs and said, "Send the man away; do not sign the paper: if you do, you will be reduced to the condition of slaves, and be obliged to break stones for the roads. Your land will be taken from you, and your dignity as chiefs will be destroyed."

At the first pause Nene came forward and spoke with a degree of natural eloquence that surprised all the Europeans, and evidently turned aside the temporary feeling that had been created. He first addressed himself to his own countrymen, desiring them to reflect on their own condition—to recollect how much the character of New Zealanders had been exalted by their intercourse with Europeans, and how impossible it was for them to govern themselves without frequent wars and bloodshed; and he concluded his harangue by strenuously advising them to receive us, and to place confidence in our promises. He then turned to me and said, "You must be our father. You must not allow us to become slaves; you must preserve our customs, and never permit our lands to be wrested from us." One or two other chiefs who were favourable followed him in the same strain; and one reproached a noisy fellow named Kitiki, of the adverse party, with having spoken rudely to me. Kitiki, stung by the remarks, sprang forward and shook me violently by the hand; and I received the salute apparently with equal ardour. This occasioned among the Natives a general expression of applause, and a loud cheer from the Europeans, in which the Natives joined; and thus the business of the meeting closed, further consideration of the question being adjourned to Friday, at 11 o'clock, leaving, as I said, one clear day to reflect on my proposal.

Second Meeting with the Native Chiefs.—Treaty signed,

6th February, 1840.

At 10 o'clock this morning it was announced to me that the chiefs, being impatient of further delay, and perfectly satisfied with the proposals I had made them, were desirous at once to sign the Treaty, that they might return to their homes. The further consideration of the question had been adjourned from the 5th to the 7th; but to have refused this request would probably have rendered nugatory the whole proceeding by the dispersion of the tribes before they had attested their consent by their signatures. I therefore assembled the officers of the Government, and, with Mr. Busby and the gentlemen of the Missionary body, I proceeded to the tents, where the Treaty was signed in due form by forty-six head chiefs, in presence of at least five hundred of inferior degree.

As the acquiescence of these chiefs, twenty-six of whom had signed the Declaration of Independence, must be deemed a full and clear recognition of the sovereign rights of Her Majesty over the northern parts of this Island, it will be announced by a salute of twenty-one guns, which I have arranged with Captain Nias shall be fired from this ship to-morrow.

In the course of this proceeding I have courted the utmost publicity, and I have forborne to adopt even the customary measure of propitiating the consent of the chiefs by presents or promises; and not until the Treaty had been signed did I give them anything. To have sent them home without acknowledgment would have been a violation of their customs, and would have given offence; I therefore distributed amongst them a few articles of trifling value before they separated.

It is my intention next week to visit Hokianga, and I hope to obtain the adherence of such of the chiefs of that district as were not present at Waitangi.

I have, &c.,

W. HOBSON.

His Excellency Sir George Gipps, &c.

HER MAJESTY VICTORIA, Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, regarding with her royal favour the Native chiefs and tribes of New Zealand, and anxious to protect their just rights and property, and to secure to them the enjoyment of peace and good order, has deemed it necessary, in consequence of the great number of Her Majesty's subjects who have already settled in New Zealand, and the rapid extension of emigration both from Europe and Australia, which is still in progress, to constitute and appoint a functionary properly authorized to treat with the aborigines of New Zealand for the recognition of Her Majesty's sovereign authority over the whole of any part of those Islands. Her Majesty therefore, being desirous to establish a settled form of civil government, with a view to avert the evil consequences which must result from the absence of the necessary laws and institutions, alike to the Native population and to her subjects, has been graciously pleased to empower and authorize me, William Hobson, a Captain in Her Majesty's Royal Navy, Consul and Lieutenant-Governor over such parts of New Zealand as may be, or hereafter shall be, ceded to Her Majesty, to invite the confederated and independent chiefs of New Zealand to concur in the following articles and conditions:—

Article the First.

The chiefs of the Confederation of the United Tribes of New Zealand, and the separate and independent chiefs who have not become members of the Confederation, cede to Her Majesty the Queen of England, absolutely and without reservation, all the rights and powers of sovereignty which the said Confederation or individual chiefs respectively exercise or possess or may be supposed to exercise or possess, over their respective territories, as the sole sovereigns thereof.

Article the Second.

Her Majesty the Queen of England confirms and guarantees to the chiefs and tribes of New Zealand, and to the respective families and individuals thereof, the full, exclusive, and undisturbed possession of their lands and estates, forests, fisheries, and other properties which they may collectively or individually possess, so long as it is their wish and desire to retain the same in their possession. But the chiefs of the United Tribes, and the individual chiefs, yield to Her Majesty the exclusive right of pre-emption over such lands as the proprietors thereof may be disposed to alienate, at such prices as may be agreed upon between the respective proprietors and persons appointed by Her Majesty to treat with them on that behalf.

Article the Third.

In consideration thereof, Her Majesty the Queen of England extends to the Natives of New Zealand her royal protection, and imparts to them all the rights and privileges of British subjects.

W. HOBSON.

Now therefore, we, the chiefs of the Confederation of the United Tribes of New Zealand, being assembled in congress at Victoria, in Waitangi, and we, the separate and independent chiefs of New Zealand, claiming authority over the tribes and territories which are specified after our respective names, having been made fully to understand the provisions of the foregoing treaty, accept and enter into the same in the full spirit and meaning thereof.

In witness whereof we have attached our signatures or marks at the places and dates respectively specified. Done at Waitangi, this 6th day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty.

Hokianga.—Treaty of Waitangi signed. H.M.S. "Herald," Bay of Islands, 17th February, 1840.

SIR,—

I have the honour to acquaint your Excellency that, in accordance with the intention I expressed in my letter of the 5th instant (No. 40/8), I proceeded to Hokianga on the 11th accompanied by Captain Nias, the officers of the Government, and the Rev. Mr. Taylor and Mr. Clarke, of the Church Missionary Society.

On arriving at Waihou, a place on the river about seven miles above the mission-station, I was received by the members of the Wesleyan Mission, and all the principal European settlers of the neighbourhood.

From these gentlemen I received every assurance of fidelity to Her Majesty, and the most hearty congratulations to myself.

At the conclusion of this ceremonial I proceeded down the river in boats that were provided for me, attended by the British inhabitants in eight other boats, all displaying the British flag. On passing the Hauraki a salute of thirteen guns was fired, and on my arrival at the Mission-station I was again visited by the resident gentlemen, to whom I addressed a few words expressive of the high sense I entertained of this earnest of loyal zeal in forwarding the views of Her Majesty's Government, and of the honour they had done me by their very flattering attention. I at the same time signified my intention to hold a meeting of the chiefs on the following day, to which I invited all the Europeans of every class and nation.

Meeting held.

Having previously intimated to the chiefs my wish to meet them on the 12th, not less than three thousand Natives had collected at the Mission-station, between four hundred and five hundred of whom were chiefs of different degrees. At the appointed time for meeting I was mortified to observe a great disinclination on the part of the chiefs to assemble. After some delay, however, they began to collect; and at last the different tribes marched up in procession, and took their seats, something in the same order as was observed at Waitangi. Still I could not fail to observe that an unfavourable spirit prevailed amongst them.

The business of the day commenced nearly in the same manner as it had done on a former occasion, the Rev. Mr. Hobbs, of the Wesleyan Mission, interpreting. After a short address to the Europeans I entered into a full explanation to the chiefs of the views and motives of Her Majesty in proposing to extend to New Zealand her powerful protection. I then, as before, read the Treaty, expounded its provisions, invited discussion, and offered elucidation.

This undisguised manner of proceeding defeated much of the opposition, but did not to the extent of my wish or expectation remove the predetermination to oppose me that had already been manifested.

Opposition manifested.

The New Zealanders are passionately fond of declamation, and they possess considerable ingenuity in exciting the passions of the people. On this occasion all their best orators were against me, and every argument they could devise was used to defeat my object. But many of their remarks were evidently not of Native origin, and it was clear that a powerful counter-influence had been employed. Towards the close of the day one of the chiefs, Papa Haika, made some observations that were so distinctly of English origin that I called on him to speak his own sentiments like a man, and not to allow others who were self-interested to prompt him; upon which he fairly, admitted the fact, and called for the European who had advised him to come forward, and tell the Governor what he had told him. This call was reiterated by me, when a person named M—presented himself. I asked his, motive for endeavouring to defeat the benevolent object of Her Majesty, whose desire it is to secure to those people their just rights, and to the European settlers peace and civil government. He replied that he conscientiously believed that the Natives would be degraded under our influence, and that therefore he had advised them to resist; admitting, at the same time, that the laws of England were requisite to restrain and protect British subjects, but to British subjects alone should they be applicable. I asked him if he was aware that English laws could only be exercised on English soil. He replied, "I am not aware; I am not a lawyer:" upon which I begged him to resume his seat, and told the chiefs that Mr. M—had given them advice in utter ignorance of this most important fact; adding, "If you listen to such counsel and oppose me, you will be stripped of all your land by a worthless class of British subjects, who will consult no interest but their own, and who care not how much they trample on your rights. I am sent here to control such people, and I ask from you the authority to do so." This little address was responded to by a song of applause; several chiefs who agreed with me sprang up in my support, and the whole spirit of the meeting changed. Apologies were offered by the opposing party, and the most prominent of them came forward and signed the Treaty. When the example had once been shown, it was with difficulty I could restrain those who were disintituled by their rank from inserting their names. Upwards of fifty-six signatures were given, and at 12 o'clock at night the business closed.

Before the last of the party were dismissed, it was intimated to me that the chiefs were desirous I should attend their feast on the following morning; and, in order to gratify them, I relinquished a visit I had arranged to the lower part of the river.

Feast at Horeke, Captain McDonell's Station.

At 10 o'clock on the 13th I went by appointment to the Hauraki, and there a thousand as fine warriors as were ever seen were collected in their best costume. The Native war-dance, accompanied by those terrific yells which are so well qualified to exhibit the natural ferocity of the New Zealand character, was exhibited for my amusement; the guns from a small European battery were fired; and the Natives discharged their muskets and dispersed, under three hearty cheers from my party. The feast which I had ordered to be prepared, consisting of pigs, potatoes, rice, and sugar, with a small portion of tobacco to every man, was partaken of by all in perfect harmony. It was estimated that, of men, women, and children, there were three thousand persons present.

Character of Opposition.

The influence against me was easily traceable to the foreign bishop of the Roman Catholic persuasion, and to a set of escaped convicts and other low ruffians who have congregated on this river in considerable numbers. These parties, though actuated by different motives, were united in their proceedings, and many of the latter were agents of the former. Mr. M—whom I have mentioned, though not of a degraded class, is an adventurer, who lives with a Native woman, has purchased a considerable portion of land, and, being an Irish Catholic, is an active agent of the bishop.

Another person; altogether of a lower description, known under the name of "Jacky Marmon," who is married to a Native woman and has resided in this country since 1809, is also an agent of the bishop. He assumes the Native character in its worst form—is a cannibal—and has been conspicuous in the Native wars and outrages for years past. Against such people I shall have to contend in every quarter, but I do not despair of arranging matters hereafter with comparative ease. The two points at which I have already met the Natives were the strongholds of our most violent opponents; and, notwithstanding the untiring efforts of the bishop and the convicts, I have obtained the almost unanimous assent of the chiefs. On the whole of the Hokianga but two head chiefs refused their consent, and even from their tribes many chiefs have added their names to the Treaty.

On the morning of the 14th, when preparing to return here, I regret to say that, notwithstanding the universal good feeling which subsisted amongst the chiefs on the day previous, two tribes—of the Roman Catholic communion—requested that their names might be withdrawn from the Treaty. It is obvious that the same mischievous influence I before complained of had been exercised in this instance. I did not, of course, suffer the alteration; but I regret that the credulity of the chiefs should render them so susceptible of unfavourable impressions.

I considered that on the conclusion of the Treaty of Waitangi the sovereignty of Her Majesty over the northern district was complete. I can now only add that the adherence of the Hokianga chiefs renders the question beyond dispute. I therefore propose to issue a Proclamation announcing that Her Majesty's dominion in New Zealand extends from the North Cape, to the 36th degree of latitude. As I proceed southward, and obtain the consent of the chiefs, I will extend these limits by Proclamation, until I can include the whole of the Islands.

I have, &c.,

W. HOBSON.

His Excellency Sir George Gipps, &c.

Bay of Islands.—Visit to Kaitaia to obtain Signatures to Treaty. Kororareka, 6th May, 1840.
SIR,—

I have the honour to inform your Excellency that, according to your directions, I sailed on the 27th ultimo for Kaitaia in the schooner "New Zealander." We touched at Maunganui, where I obtained one of the principal chiefs as a pilot, and on the Saturday following anchored in the river, about sixteen miles distant from the town.

The Rev. R. Taylor and Dr. Johnson immediately proceeded to the Church Mission-station to arrange with Mr. Puckey and the chief Nopera the day of meeting.

On Monday, accompanied by Lieutenant Smart and the mounted police, I went to Kaitaia. At the head of the river we were met by Mr. Puckey and a great many Natives, who escorted us to the town, where we were received by a discharge of musketry, and shortly after were welcomed by a war-dance. The firing continued throughout the evening, and at intervals during the night.

At an early hour the next morning the chiefs commenced preparations, and at ten o'clock assembled on a large grass-plot before the verandah of Mr. Matthews's house, whither I repaired, attended by Mr. Puckey (who acted as Interpreter), Nopera, the principal chief, and the gentlemen by whom I was accompanied.

I opened the meeting by informing the chiefs that your Excellency's illness prevented your personal attendance, but that you had deputed me to meet them, to explain the provisions of the Treaty of Waitangi, and to invite their adherence thereto. I then alluded to the mischievous endeavours of some evil-disposed persons to misrepresent the intentions of Her Majesty's Government, assured them that your Excellency would strictly perform all your engagements with them, and concluded by requesting them to make any statement, or to call for any explanation, on such subjects as they did not fully comprehend.

The Treaty was then read, and the debate was conducted much in the same manner as at Waitangi, with this exception: that there was but very little opposition.

They stated that they had been informed by the pakehas that your Excellency would take away their lands and make them slaves; that you would place their provisions in stores, and distribute only such quantities as you might think proper. They also stated that they had been solicited by some of the Ngapuhis and Hokianga chiefs to join in a conspiracy to cut off the pakehas, but that they had declined doing so; and concluded by expressing their hearty concurrence with your Excellency's views, and their earnest wish to become subjects of Her Majesty. The Treaty was then signed by sixty of the principal chiefs, and the meeting concluded with a war-dance and a general discharge of musketry.

I herewith enclose the speech of Nopera, by which your Excellency will more fully perceive the value of his adherence. I further beg to inform your Excellency that he provided all the food for the entertainment of the Natives, and would not accept any payment for it, although offered by me. He also desired me to request your acceptance of a present of pigs and potatoes, which he sent on board the schooner.

I have, &c.,

WILLOUGHBY SHORTLAND,

His Excellency Lieutenant-Governor Hobson, &c.
Colonial Secretary.

The SPEECH of NOPERA PARAEAKA, Chief of Kaitaia.

"Hear, all of you, pakehas and Maoris. This is my speech. My desire is that we should all be of one heart. Speak your words, openly; speak as you mean to act; do not say one thing and mean another. I am at your head. I wish you all to have the Governor. We are saved by this. Let every one say Yes, as I do. We have now somebody to look up to. I am jealous of those speeches I hear from the pakehas be careful not to listen to them. Some say it will be the pakehas who will offend; but I say No; it will be the Maoris. My grandfather brought the pakehas to this very spot, and the chiefs agreed with what my grandfather did. He went on board the ships, and got trade. He spread it through the land. Let us act right, as my ancestor did. The pakehas went to the Bay of Islands, and were murdered. Let us do them no harm. What has the Governor done wrong? The shadow of the land goes to Queen Victoria, but the substance remains with us. We will go to the Governor, and get a payment for our land, as before. If the Ngapuhi commit evil they will suffer. We have always been friendly with the pakehas. We never went in ships to England or Port Jackson to buy arms to kill our countrymen. If you want to be cut off, go and fight the Governor. Do not, like the chiefs at Hokianga, wish to kill the Governor. Live peaceably with the pakehas. We have now a helmsman. One said, 'Let me steer,' and another said, 'Let me steer,' and we never went straight. Be jealous, look well into your own hearts, and commit no evil. The Natives did wrong at the Bay, and suffered. What man of sense would believe that the Governor would take our goods, and only give us half of it? If you have anything else to say, say it; but, if not, finish; and all of you say Yes.

Say Yes."

Upon this there was a general exclamation of "Ae, ae" (Yes, yes), and they came forward in an orderly manner, and signed the Treaty to the number of sixty.

Transmitting Report on Aborigines. Mauritius, 4th June, 1840.

MY LORD,—

I have the honour to submit to your Lordship a report on the best means of promoting the civilization of the aboriginal inhabitants of Australia, which report is founded upon a careful study of the language, prejudices, and traditional customs of this people.

Feeling anxious to render this report as complete as possible, I have delayed transmitting it to your Lordship until the latest possible period. Portions of it have in the interim been laid before some of the local Governments in Australia, and a few of the suggestions contained in it have been already acted upon.

But as so small a portion of Australia is as yet occupied, and the important task of so conducting the occupation of new districts as to benefit the aborigines in the greatest possible degree yet remains to be performed, I have thought that it would be agreeable to your Lordship to be put in possession of all such facts relating to this interesting subject as are at present known.

None but general principles, equally applicable to all portions of the continent of Australia, are embodied in this report, and I am particularly solicitous that that portion of it which commences at the twenty-first paragraph should receive consideration from your Lordship, as the whole machinery required to bring this plan into operation now exists in the different Australian Colonies, and its full development would entail no expense whatever upon either the Home or local Governments.

I have, &c.,

G. GREY, Capt. 82nd Regt., Commanding Australian Expedition.

The Right Hon. Lord John Russell, &c.

Enclosure.REPORT upon the Best Means of promoting the CIVILIZATION of the ABORIGINAL INHABITANTS of AUSTRALIA.

- 1. THE aborigines of Australia have hitherto resisted all efforts which have been made for their civilization. It would appear that if they are capable of being civilized it can be shown that all the systems on which these efforts have been founded contained some common error, or that each of them involved some erroneous principle. The former supposition appears to be the true one, for they all contained one element, they all started with one recognized principle, the presence of which in the scheme must necessarily have entailed its failure.

- 2. This principle was that, although the natives should, as far as European property and European subjects are concerned, be made amenable to British laws, yet so long as they only exercised their own customs upon themselves, and not too immediately in the presence of Europeans, they should be allowed to do so with impunity.
- 3. This principle originated in philanthropic motives and a total ignorance of the peculiar traditional laws of this people, which laws differ from those of any other known race, and have necessarily imparted to the people subject to them a character different from all other races, and hence arises the anomalous state in which they have been found.
- 4. They are as apt and intelligent as any other race of men I am acquainted with. They are subject to the same affections, appetites, and passions as other men, yet in many points of character they are totally dissimilar to them; and from the peculiar code of laws of this people it would appear not only impossible that any nation subject to them could ever emerge from a savage state, but even that no race, however highly endowed, however civilized, could in other respects remain long in a state of civilization if they were subject to the operation of such barbarous customs.
- 5. The plea generally set up in defence of this principle is that the natives of this country are a conquered people, and that it is an act of generosity to allow them the full power of exercising their own laws upon themselves. But this plea would appear to be inadmissible: for, in the first place, savage and traditional customs should not be confounded with a regular code of laws; and, secondly, when Great Britain insures to a conquered country the privilege of its own laws, all persons resident in this territory become amenable to the same laws, and proper persons are selected by the Government to watch over their due and equitable administration. Nothing of this kind either exists or can exist with regard to the customs of the natives of Australia. Between the two cases, then, there is no apparent analogy.
- 6. I would submit, therefore, that it is necessary that the moment the aborigines of this country are declared British subjects they should, as far as possible, be taught that the British laws are to supersede their own, so that any native who is suffering under their own customs may have the power of an appeal to those of Great Britain, or, to put this in its true light, that all authorized persons should, in all instances, be required to protect a native from the violence of his fellows, even though they be in the execution of their own laws.
- 7. So long as this is not the case the older natives have at their disposal the means of effectually preventing the civilization of any individuals of their own tribe, and those among them who may be inclined to adapt themselves to the European habits and mode of life will be deterred from so doing by the fear of the consequences that the displeasure of others may draw down upon them.
- 8. So much importance am I disposed to attach to this point that I do not hesitate to assert my full conviction that, whilst those tribes that are in communication with Europeans are allowed to execute their barbarous laws and customs upon one another, so long will they remain hopelessly immersed in their present state of barbarism; and, however unjust such a proceeding might at first sight appear, I believe that the course pointed out by true humanity would be to make them from the very commencement amenable to the British laws, both as regards themselves and Europeans; for I hold it to be imagining a contradiction to suppose that individuals subject to savage and barbarous laws can rise into a state of civilization, which those laws have a manifest tendency to destroy and overturn.
- 9. I have known many instances of natives who have been almost or quite civilized being compelled by other natives to return to the bush, more particularly girls, who have been betrothed in their infancy, and who, on approaching the years of puberty, have been compelled by their husbands to join them.
- 10. It is difficult to ascertain the exact effect the institutions of a country produce upon the character of its inhabitants, but it may be readily admitted that if two savage races of equal mental endowments and with the same capacity for civilization were subject to two distinct sets of laws, the one mild and favourable to the development of civilization, the other bloodthirsty and opposed to it, the former might gradually be brought to a knowledge of Christianity and civilization, whilst precisely similar efforts made with regard to the latter might be attended with no beneficial results.
- 11. Again, it would be unfair to consider the laws of the natives of Australia as any indication of the real character of this people, for many races who were at one period subject to the most barbarous laws have, since new institutions have been introduced amongst them, taken their rank among the civilized nations of the earth.
- 12. To punish the aborigines severely for the violation of laws of which they are ignorant would be manifestly cruel and unjust; but to punish them in the first instance slightly for the violation of these laws would inflict no great injury on them, whilst by always punishing them when guilty of a crime without reference to the length of period that had elapsed between its perpetration and their apprehension, at the same time fully explaining to them the measure of punishment that would await them in the event of a second commission of the same fault, would teach them gradually the laws to which they were henceforth to be amenable, and would show them that crime was always eventually, although, it might be, remotely, followed by punishment.

- 13. I imagine that this course would be more merciful than that at present adopted, viz, to punish them for a violation of a law they are ignorant of when this violation affects a European, and yet to allow them to commit this crime as often as they like when it only regards themselves; for this latter course teaches them, not that certain actions—such, for instance, as murder, &c.—are generally criminal, but only that they are criminal when exercised towards the white people; and the impression consequently excited in their minds is that these acts only excite our detestation when exercised towards ourselves, and that their criminality consists, not in having committed a certain odious action, but in having violated our prejudices.
- 14 In the vicinity of towns, where there is a certain judicial force, and where, on account of the facility of obtaining food, the natives always congregate, it would, by a steady and determined line of conduct, be comparatively easy to enforce an observance of the British laws; but even partially to attain this object in the remote and thinly settled districts, it is necessary that each colony should possess an efficient mounted police, a portion of whom should be constantly in movement from district to district, whilst another portion, resident in a central situation, should be ready to act instantly in any direction where their presence was required. I do not apprehend this body need be numerous, for their utility would depend more on their activity and efficiency than on their numbers. It is absolutely necessary for the cause of humanity and good order that such a force should exist, for so long as distant settlers are left unprotected, and are compelled to take care of and avenge themselves, so long must necessarily great barbarities be committed; and the only way to prevent great crime on the part of the natives, and massacres of these poor creatures as the punishment of such crimes, is to check and punish their excesses in their infancy. It is only after becoming emboldened by frequent petty successes that they have hitherto committed those crimes which have drawn down so fearful a vengeance upon them.
- 15. The greatest obstacle that presents itself in considering the application of the British law to these aborigines is the fact that, from their ignorance of the nature of an oath, or of the obligations it imposes, they are not competent to give evidence before a Court of justice, and thence, in many cases, it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to obtain evidence on which a prisoner could be convicted.
- 16. One mode of evading this difficulty would be to empower the Court to receive evidence from the natives in all causes relating solely to themselves without the witness being sworn, only allowing testimony of this nature to hold good when borne out by very strong circumstantial evidence; secondly, to empower the Court always to receive evidence from natives called on by a native prisoner in his defence, such evidence being subject to the before named restrictions.
- 17. The fact of the natives being unable to give testimony in a Court of justice is a great hard-ship on them, and they consider it as such; the reason that occasions their disability for the performance of this function is at present quite beyond their comprehension, and it is impossible to explain it to them. I have been a personal witness to a case in which a native was most undeservedly punished from the circumstance of the natives who were the only persons who could speak as to certain excul-patory facts not being permitted to give their evidence.
- 18. There are certain forms in our colonial Courts of justice, as at present conducted, which it is impossible to make a savage comprehend. I attended one quarter-sessions at which a number of natives were tried on a great variety of charges. Several of them were induced to plead guilty, and on this admission of their having committed the crime sentence was pronounced upon them. But when others denied their guilt, and found that this denial produced no corresponding result in their favour, whilst at the same time they were not permitted to bring forward other natives to deny it also, and to explain the matter to them, they became perfectly confounded. I was subsequently applied to by several intelligent natives to explain this mystery to them, but I failed in giving such an explanation as would satisfy them.
- 19. The natives being ignorant of our laws, of the forms of our Courts of justice, of the language in which the proceedings are conducted, and the sentence pronounced upon them, it would appear that but a very imperfect protection is afforded them by having present in the Court merely an interpreter (very often an ignorant man), who knows nothing of legal proceedings, and can be but very imperfectly acquainted with the native language. It must also be borne in mind that the natives are not tried by a jury of their peers, but by a jury having interests directly opposed to their own, and who can scarcely avoid being in some degree prejudiced against native offenders. From these considerations I would suggest that it should be made binding upon the local Government, in all instances (or at least in such instances as affect life), to provide a counsel to defend native prisoners.

- 20. Some other principal preventives to the civilization of the aborigines, in addition to those I have already stated, are: (1.) The existence of an uncertain and irregular demand for their labour: thus they may have one day sufficient opportunity afforded them for the execution of their industry, while the next day their services are not required, so that they are compelled once more to have recourse to their former irregular and wandering habits. (2.) Their generally receiving a very inadequate reward for the services they render: this, combined with their natural fondness for the bush, induces them to prefer that mode of subsistence which, whilst it is infinitely more agreeable and less laborious, procures for them nearly as great a reward as living with white people. (3.) Their not being taught that different values are attached to different degrees of labour, as well as to the skill and neatness with which it is performed.
- 21. These impediments might all either be removed or modified in some districts by the establishment of native institutions and schools; but, in forming a general plan for their removal which would be equally applicable to all parts of the colony, a very novel difficulty presents itself.
- 22. Imagining that a native child is perfectly capable of being civilized, let it also be granted that, from proper preventive measures having been adopted, this child has nothing to fear from the vengeance of the other natives, so that it stands in these respects nearly or altogether in the position of an European.
- 23. If this native child is a boy who is to pay the individual who undertakes to teach him some calling, the fee usually given with an apprentice? Who will indemnify this person for the time he spends in instructing the boy before he can derive any benefit from his labour, or for the risk he incurs of the boy's services being bestowed elsewhere as soon as they are worth having?
- 24. Until this difficulty is got over, it appears evident that the natives will only be employed in herding cattle, or in the lowest order of manual labour, which requires no skill, and for which the reward they receive will be so small as scarcely to offer an inducement to them to quit their present wandering mode of life.
- 25. The remedy I would suggest for this evil would have another advantage besides a tendency to ameliorate it, for it would give the settlers a great and direct interest in the aborigines, without entailing any expense upon the Government. It is founded on the following facts.
- 26. The Government, in order to create a supply of labour in the colonies, have been in the habit of giving certain rewards to those individuals who introduced labourers into them. Now, it would appear that he who reclaims one of the aborigines not only adds another labourer to those who are already in the colony, but further confers such a benefit on his fellow-settlers, by rendering one who was before a useless and dangerous being a serviceable member of the community, that this circumstance alone entitles him to a reward.
- 27. I would therefore propose that on the production of the hereafter-named documents a settler should receive a certificate entitling him to a certain sum, which should either be allowed to reckon towards the completion of location duties, or else as a remission certificate in the purchase of land, or, in lieu of this, a grant of land; and that this sum or grant should be regulated according to a table specifying the various circumstances that are likely to occur, and drawn up by the local Government of each place where such regulation should be introduced.
- 28. The documents to which I allude are these: (1.) A deposition before the nearest Magistrate to such settler's house that a native or natives have been resident with him constantly for the last six months, and have been employed in stated species of labour. (2.) A certificate from the Government Resident of the district that, to the best of his belief, such statement is true, for that, on his visiting the settler's house, the stated number of natives were there, and were respectively occupied in the kinds of labour described. (3.) A certificate from the Protector of Aborigines that he has visited this settler's house, that the stated number of natives were resident there, and appeared to be pro-gressing in the knowledge of that branch of industry in which they were respectively stated to be employed.
- 29. It would be further necessary that any settler who intended to endeavour to reclaim, natives should give a short notice to the Protector of Aborigines previously to the commencement of the first six months.
- 30. Could this plan be brought into operation, the work of civilization of the aborigines would at once be commenced upon a great scale. It would not be confined to a single institution, but a variety of individuals, endowed with different talents and capacities for this work, would at once be employed on it. It is indeed rather suited and intended for the outskirts of civilization, thinly populated by settlers, than for towns, yet it is applicable to both situations; whilst its direct operation would be to induce the settler adequately to remunerate the native for, as well as to provide him with, a constant supply of labour, and to use every exertion, by kind and proper treatment, to attach him for as long a period as possible to his establishment.
- 31. In considering the kinds of labour in which it would be most advisable to engage natives, it should be borne in mind that in remote districts, where the European population is small, it would be imprudent to induce many natives to congregate at any one point, and the kinds of labour in which they should be there engaged ought to be of such a nature as to have a tendency to scatter them over the country, and to distribute them amongst the separate establishments.

- 32. Whilst in the well-peopled districts, where a force sufficient both to protect and control the aborigines exists, they should be induced to assemble in great numbers, for they work much more readily when employed in masses, and by thus assembling them on one point their numbers are diminished in those portions of the colony which have a small European population, and they are concentrated at a spot where proper means for their improvement can be provided.
- 33. The first of these principles has been strictly attended to in the plan proposed in the 27th and following paragraphs of this report; the second has been carried into successful operation in Western Australia.
- 34. In order that the work on which the natives are employed in the vicinity of towns should be of the most advantageous nature, it is necessary that it should be productive of benefit both to themselves and the Government which employs them, so that it cannot be complained of as a useless expense, whilst at the same time it should be of such a kind as to accord with that love of excitement and change which is so peculiar to this people.
- 35. Both these ends would be attained by employing the aborigines either in opening new roads or in repairing old lines of communication: indeed, this kind of employment is singularly suited to the habits of this people; they might be kept constantly moving from post to post, thus varying the scene of their operations; one portion of the party might be employed in hunting with kangaroodogs, or fishing, in order to supply the others with fresh meat; and the species of labour in which the main body were engaged might, if they wished it, be changed once or twice in the course of the day, to prevent their being wearied by the monotonous character of their employment.
- 36. Among other enactments which I believe would have a tendency to promote the civilization of the aborigines, and which are applicable to those districts in which for some time a great intercourse has existed between the natives and Europeans, are the following:—
- 37. That any native who could produce a certificate (from the Protector of Aborigines) of having been constantly employed at the house of any settler or settlers for a period of not less than three years, should be entitled to a grant of land, the extent of which should be settled by the Government of the colony to which such native should belong, and that, if possible, this grant should be given in that district to which this native by birth belonged. That, in addition to this grant, he should receive a sum of money, the amount of which should be also fixed by the local Government, and which should be drawn from the funds raised by the sale of Government lands, and which sum should be expended in goats, poultry, &c., so as to enable the native in some manner to stock his land. That any native having only one wife, who produced a certificate of the civil-marriage contract having been performed between himself and her by the Resident of the district to which he belonged, should be entitled to a small reward. That any natives who registered duly the birth of any of their children should be entitled to a small reward. That some competent person should be paid to instruct two native boys in such a manner as to qualify them to act as interpreters in Courts of law, and as soon as they are found competent they should be employed for this purpose.

I believe that many other regulations, similar to these, would be found to produce a very beneficial effect.

Reporting Disturbance between American Seaman and Pomare's People. Government House, Russell, 15th June, 1840.

SIR,—

I have the honour to acquaint you that on the night of the 4th June a report was conveyed to me that a desperate disturbance had taken place between some seamen and the people of Pomare's tribe at the pa, about three-quarters of a mile from this, on the banks of the Kawakawa. My informant was the mate of the ship "Achilles," who told me that a sailor had escaped to his ship badly wounded, who stated that he and other seamen on shore had been attacked by Pomare and his tribe, that ten or twelve men had been killed, that two masters of American ships had been detained as prisoners, and their boats had been dragged to the top of the hill.

This alarming account being in some measure confirmed by the report of firearms at the pa, induced me to request Captain Lockhart to send forward a small detachment of troops, with directions to the officer in command to fire a rocket if a reinforcement should be required. It appears by Captain Lockhart's report, a copy of which I have now the honour to enclose, that appearances induced the officer to make the concerted signal; that a reinforcement was sent; that on the arrival of the troops the Natives retired, and immediately consented to give up the boats; and that the report of men having been killed, and two shipmasters having been made prisoners, was a mere fabrication. An affray certainly took place, in which the seaman who fled to the "Achilles" was the principal instigator, and was the only white man who received any injury. One Native was slightly hurt.

At daylight on the morning of the 5th I despatched a letter to Pomare, to desire his attendance here. In obedience to my summons, he made his appearance at 10 o'clock. It may be necessary to inform your Excellency that Pomare is one of the most powerful and influential chiefs in New Zealand. He is connected with Rauparaha, in the South, and with many high chiefs in the Thames and at Kaipara, and any misunderstanding with him might involve us with them all. Feeling that we had been placed in the wrong by the violence and misconduct of the seamen, and by the unsteadiness of a few of the soldiers, as reported by Captain Lockhart, it gave me no small satisfaction to find that Pomare was only desirous to exonerate himself of all blame on the occurrences of the preceding night, stating as his excuse for seizing the boats the provocation he had received, which was sufficiently gross to have occasioned with less enlightened Natives, or at another period of New Zealand history, a scene of bloodshed and destruction; and, so far from feeling resentment at the firing of the soldiers, which he was well aware had happened without orders, that he expressed himself thankful for their interference, saying they were the means of saving many lives by preventing the sailors from burning down the pa, which had in fact been threatened, and would have been attempted had not Captain Lockhart restrained the infuriated mob by whom he was surrounded.

In consequence of exaggerated reports a number of chiefs collected at the pa. I availed myself of the opportunity of assembling them and holding a meeting, at which I mentioned that Pomare might have avoided any collision with the sailors if he had in the first instance informed me of their riotous behaviour; and I explained that my object in employing military was to preserve peace and order by restraining the refractory, whether Native or European. The temper of the meeting was in a spirit that I could have wished; all seemed thankful for the measures I had adopted, and sufficiently over-awed by the promptitude with which they were executed. Pomare has since applied to me for some soldiers to preserve the peace, and promised if I would keep the white men in order he would answer for the Natives. I have on two occasions since employed the mounted police at the pa. Pomare gave them lodging and fed them liberally. The effect of this termination will be felt both here and all over the country. Pomare has shown that he has a proper respect for our power; and the fact of his expressing no resentment at our interference will satisfy the Natives that he was the aggressor.

I have been thus particular in detailing this affair to show your Excellency and Her Majesty's Government the very frail tenure by which peace is maintained with the Native population. A mere drunken brawl might have involved us in a war with half the country. I know it was a dangerous experiment to send military amongst them in the night-time; but it is equally necessary to be firm and prompt as it is to be courteous and forbearing, and if my information had been true inertitude would have been criminal. As this matter has terminated I feel convinced that it will greatly tend to strengthen the influence of Government. The inference to be drawn from these occurrences is that an augmentation of the military is absolutely necessary; it must never be overlooked that the Native population are a warlike race, well armed, and ever ready to use those arms on the slightest provocation.

W. HOBSON, Lieutenant-Governor.

His Excellency Governor Sir George Gipps, &c.

Enclosure. Captain LOCKHART to His Excellency Governor HOBSON.

SIR,—

I have the honour to inform you that having received your Excellency's orders through Ensign Cookson, I embarked a party of twenty men to quell a disturbance between the Natives and some American sailors at Pomare's pa, on the night of the 3rd instant. On arriving there I found the Natives assembled near the chapel with firearms, on which I deemed it advisable to send for a reinforcement. On the appearance of the military the Natives proceeded to the farther part of the pa. I marched the men to that part of the fort where the Natives had, in a row during the course of the day, dragged two whaleboats belonging to American vessels. As I could not induce the Natives to take the boats to the place where they came from, I protected the boats' crew while they did so. On returning to our boats some of the Natives were seen crouching in the scrub above us. An alarm was made by a mob of armed drunken sailors and civilians that the Natives were making an attack. Some of the civilians cried "Fire! fire!" and fired several shots in the direction of the Natives. In the shouting and disturbance which ensued, I am sorry to say three or four muskets were fired by the soldiers without any orders from me. On account of the darkness I could not detect who the particular men were. Luckily no injury was done by the firing.

I have, &c.,

R. LOCKHART, Capt. 80th Regiment, Commanding Detachment. His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, Captain Hobson, R.N., Russell.

P.S.—I should also observe that the reports of several persons having been killed, and of two American shipmasters being detained as prisoners, were mere fabrications.

Approval of Governor Hobson's Proceedings. Downing Street, 17th July, 1840.

SIR,—

I have received your despatches of the numbers and dates specified in the margin reporting the measures which you had adopted, in conjunction with Captain Hobson, for giving effect to the intentions of Her Majesty's Government in establishing British authority in New Zealand, and transmitting the reports which you had received from that officer of his proceedings on his arrival at the Bay of Islands.

Her Majesty's Government entirely approve of the measures which you adopted, and of the manner in which they were carried into effect by Captain Hobson.

I have recommended the appointments notified in your Despatch No. 14 for the sanction of, the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury.

I have, &c.,

J. RUSSELL.

Bay of Islands.—Report of Proceedings of Major Bunbury, in H.M.S. "Herald." Government House, Sydney, 24th July, 1840.

MY LORD,—

With reference to my despatch of the 15th June last, in which I reported that Her Majesty's ship "Herald," having on board Major Bunbury, had sailed from the Bay of Islands for the purpose of procuring the acknowledgment of Her Majesty's authority from the chiefs in the southern parts of New Zealand, I have the honour to inform your Lordship that the "Herald" returned to Sydney this day, and that the duty on which Major Bunbury was despatched by Lieutenant-Governor Hobson appears to have, been very satisfactorily performed. Every point, of importance on the east coast of New Zealand was visited by the "Herald," as far as the southern point of the Southern or Stewart's Island, and Her Majesty's authority established, either by the acknowledgment of the chiefs, or (in the Middle and Southern Islands) by declaration on the right of discovery.

The "Herald" afterwards visited Port Nicholson, where everything was perfectly quiet, the agent of the Company having made full submission to Mr. Shortland, the Magistrate who had been sent to Port Nicholson by Lieutenant-Governor, Hobson. The "Herald" touched at the Bay of Islands on her return from Port Nicholson, and landed Major Bunbury.

I enclose herewith a copy of a letter addressed by Major Bunbury to my Private Secretary, which will explain to your Lordship why I am unable by the present opportunity to forward any, official account of his proceedings.

French Settlement at Akaroa.

One of the places visited by the "Herald" was Banks Peninsula, the spot at which it has been said that a settlement is about to be made by a company formed in France: of this company, however, or of any of its proceedings, I know nothing, save what I have derived from English newspapers. The French discovery ships "Astrolabe" and "Zélée" had been at Banks Peninsula, but made no indications of forming a settlement there.

I have, &c.,

GEO. GIPPS.

Enclosure.

Major BUNBURY to H. PAEKER, Esq., Sydney. Russell, 4th July, 1840.

DEAR SIR,—

You will oblige me by acquainting. His Excellency the Governor with my return from the mission I had undertaken at the request of Captain Hobson, R.N., Lieutenant-Governor of New Zealand, to the Native chiefs and tribes on the eastern coast.

Captain Hobson being absent at present on a tour of duty, I feel a delicacy, in entering into the details of the circumstances attending my visits officially: it may, however, interest Sir George to know, that I visited the harbours of Coromandel, Mercury Bay, Tauranga, Akaroa, Hawke's Bay, Cloudy Bay, Port Nicholson, Ruapuke Island (Foveaux Strait), the Islands of Kapiti and Mana, Otago, and Southern Port (Stewart's Island). From all these places I obtained the necessary, signatures, excepting in one or two places where my mission had been, anticipated by other gentlemen sent by Captain Hobson.

At Southern Port (Stewart's Island), and at Cloudy Bay, (Middle Island), Captain Nias and myself judging it would be for the best interests of the Natives as well as European settlers that further delay, should not take place, we proclaimed the Queen's, authority with the usual ceremonies: at the former place on the 5th of June, where we did not meet with Natives, by right of discovery; and at the latter on the 7th of June, from the sovereignty having been ceded by the Native chiefs. At Port Nicholson I learned that Captain Hobson had also taken a similar view of, the subject by proclaiming the Queen's authority. Here we met with Mr. Shortland, and a subaltern's party from my detachment, who had been sent by the Lieutenant-Governor. The place appeared, tranquil, and well supplied with provisions; and Mr. Shortland as well as the troops had been, I understand, well received on their landing by the inhabitants.

THOMAS BUNBURY, Major, 80th Regiment.
H. Parker, Esq., &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor HOBSON to the SECRETARY of STATE for the COLONIES

Bay of Islands.—Reporting Proceedings taken to obtain Signatures to Treaty. Government House, Russell, Bay of Islands, 15th October, 1840.

MY LORD,—

Referring to my Despatch No. 3, of the 25th May last, I have the honour to report to your Lordship that I have received ample and full reports from all the gentlemen whom I commissioned to treat with the Native chiefs for their adherence to the Treaty of Waitangi; and to enclose to your Lordship copies of those reports, together with a certified copy of the Treaty of Waitangi, both in English and the Native language, with the names inserted of the chiefs and witnesses who signed it, with the exception of some chiefs whose names are affixed to a copy of the treaty intrusted to Mr. Whiteley, as reported in Enclosure No. 5 by Captain Symonds, which has not yet reached me. The originals of these documents are preserved amongst the archives of the colony.

I have, &c.,

W. HOBSON.

Enclosures.(No. 1.)The Rev. ROBERT MAUNSELL, B.A., to the Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Waikato Heads, 14th April, 1840.

SIR,—

You will, I trust, receive with this the document lately forwarded to me to have the signatures of the principal men in Waikato attached to it.

I am happy to inform you that the signatures obtained comprise those of the leading men, excepting perhaps two. Those we hope soon to obtain, and I have already forwarded on to Messrs. Wallis and Whiteley the document left me by Captain Symonds, in order that they may obtain as many more names as they deem expedient. You will learn from Captain Symonds the particulars connected with the distribution of blankets, which we were unavoidably obliged to hasten, as most of the chiefs had come from a considerable distance. To this step also we were compelled by intelligence having reached them after they had signed their names that they were entitled to a blanket on signing—intelligence that would have placed us in a rather awkward situation if it had not been for the timely arrival of your letter to Captain Symonds.

In forwarding the accompanying document, I would beg to observe, in reference to ourselves, that, cordially as we desire to co-operate with Governor Hobson in all measures consistent with our principles, we cannot but state that we feel strongly the responsibility in the eyes of the Natives by the steps we are now adopting. I would beg, therefore, with all deference, to add that, having put ourselves thus prominently forward in obtaining an acknowledgment of the sovereign power of the Queen on the part of the Natives, so we trust that that acknowledgment will never be made, even apparently, the basis of any measure that may hereafter result in their prejudice. The steps we have taken have been taken in full dependence on the well-known lenity and honour of the British Government, and we rest assured that we shall never hereafter find ourselves to have been in these particulars mistaken.

I remain, &c.,

R. MAUNSELL.

(No. 2.)The Rev. JAMES BULLER to the Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Tangiteroria, Kaipara, 5th May, 1840.

DEAR SIR—

I sent you a letter some, time ago by some Natives from Mangakahia; but, lest that should have miscarried, I embrace the opportunity of writing per favour of Captain Heal who has been unfortunately wrecked in going out of this harbour. Tirarau intends going to the Bay of Islands in company with Captain Heald and party, and you will therefore, no doubt have an opportunity of seeing him. I have every reason to believe that he is well disposed towards the Government. I saw Parore the other day, who said that he should do the same as Tirarau, which, I believe, is the sentiment of all the chiefs in this quarter.

Hoping that His Excellency will soon be restored to perfect health, and praying that the Lord direct all the important affairs of this infant colony,

I remain, &c.,

(No. 3.)Major BUNBURY to His Excellency the GOVERNOR.

H.M.S. "Herald," Coromandel Harbour, 6th May, 1840.

SIR,—

I avail myself of the opportunity afforded by the expected departure of a vessel this morning for the Bay of Islands to report to your Excellency our proceedings since Her Majesty's ship "Herald" sailed from the outer harbour of the Bay of Islands, on the morning, of the 29th ultimo. The following day, the ship having anchored at Coromandel Harbour, Mr. Williams and myself went on shore at Mr. Webster's establishment, in order to arrange means for securing the attendance of the Native chiefs and fix a day for them to sign the Treaty. A Native was also; despatched overland to Mercury Bay, with letters from Captain Nias and myself to Mr. Stewart, requesting him to pilot the "Herald," and to notify to the Native chiefs at Mercury Bay, our object in visiting the coast, and to request their attendance with himself at Mr. Webster's establishment on Monday, the 4th instant, that day having been fixed upon for the assembling of the Natives. Mr. Stewart's answer I herewith enclose.

On the day appointed Captain Nias with several officers of Her Majesty's ship, together with Mr Williams and myself, went on shore about 11 o'clock; but no Native chiefs had at that hour assembled. A considerable number of Europeans appear however, to have been attracted by the report of the expected meeting.

Subsequently a number of Natives did assemble with six chiefs of different tribes, and, after a variety of objections on their part, we succeeded in obtaining the signatures of four one of these being the principal chief of the district the celebrated Horeta of Barrier. Island notoriety. The Principal orator, an old chief named Pike, and another of inferior note refused to sign alleging as a reason that they wanted more time to assemble the different tribes of the Thames District, and to consult with them when they would also sign—but that he could for himself see no necessity in placing himself under the common of any prince or Queen, who might govern the white men if she pleased, as he was desirous of containing to govern his own tribe. It was evident they had heard of the occurrences at the Bay respecting the murder of an Englishman by a Native, and, although he did not complain of the injustice of the proceedings, it was evident they had some weight with him, and that he had been tutored by some Europeans. Mr. Williams explained the Treaty its object in consequence of the increasing influence of strangers and that the claim of pre-emption on the part of Her Majesty was intended to check their imprudently selling their lands without sufficiently benefiting themselves, or obtaining a fair equivalent. It was to me very apparent also that a trifling present was expected in payment for his adhesion but in their exalted idea of the Queen's munificence, they at first all refused the present of a blanket, which was offered after their signatures had been obtained, and which I wished them to consider was a gift personally from myself.

It is, I conceive, much to be regretted that objects of ordinary traffic between Natives and Europeans should have been selected as presents for the tribes on the coast: and I fear, therefore, that the blankets, pipes, and tobacco with which I have been furnished most only be employed in payment for messengers, &c sent with letters to the different tribes. Forage-caps and scarlet or blue cloaks "would have been highly appreciated At a bivonac of Natives which I visited I observed no less than six double-barrelled guns outside one of their huts, and those which I examined appeared to be in excellent order and of a very superior quality. Mr. Preece, of the Church. Missions whom I saw yesterday, having told me that a number of influential chiefs were near his station, I have requested Mr. Williams to write to each of them a copy of my communication, which with its translation. I herewith enclose, as it will explain the objects I have in view. I ordered a dinner to be prepared-consisting of fresh pork and potatoes, for the Natives who assembled on Monday: and I have further, at the recommendation of Captain Nias, chartered the schooner of Mr. Bateman, to convey me to Tanranga and Opotiki, on the same terms as when engaged by your Excellency for a similar object, prior to her being driven on shore in this harbour. The expense attending this arrangement being unavoidable, it will, I trust, meet with your Excellency's approval. Captain Bateman has hitherto been of great service to us, from his knowledge of the coast, and Captain Nias speaks of his intelligence as a volunteer pilot in the highest terms.

I have, &c.,

His Excellency Captain Hobson, R.N, Lieutenant-Governor, &c.

(No. 4.)The Rev. "W. WILLIAMS to the Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Poverty Bay, New Zealand, 8th May 1840.

SIR,—

I lately received from the Rev. H. "Williams a draft of a treaty between Her Majesty Queen Victoria and the chiefs of New Zealand, for the approval and signatures of the chiefs living between, the East Cape and Ahuriri, together with a bale of blankets for distribution among the said chiefs. I am happy to inform you that the leading men in this bay have signed the treaty, and there is no doubt but all the rest will follow their example. In about a week I expect to proceed to the East Cape, but it will be the latter end of July or August before I shall again see the Natives of Wairoa, which is to the south of Table Cape." Supposing that it is of importance to obtain the general approval of the. Natives, I shall not transmit the paper until it is complete, but you may in the meantime rely upon prompt attention being paid to it. The blankets have been given at the rate of one to each leading chief, and it will require at least sixty more to complete the bounty throughout.

I take this occasion of sending, for the information of His Excellency the Governor, some account of a most nefarious transaction which took place in January last, being the attempt on the part of a Captain Rhodes, of the barque "Eleanor," from Sydney, to dupe the Natives out of a tract of land extending from Port Nicholson to the northern side of Ahuriri, in Hawke's Bay, and again from the northern, bank of the River Wairoa to the north of Table Cape. For this land, embracing, a cost-line of 160 miles, and intended no doubt to extend as far into the interior as may be convenient, property to the amount of about £160 has been, paid to the Natives. A list of the property I have now in my possession. From this circumstance alone I doubt not but that His Excellency will take measures to set aside the whole transaction; but, in addition to this fact, I am prepared to establish, first, that a large portion of the land was bought from, persons who had no interest in it; secondly, that those persons signing the deeds being proprietors of the land, did not understand; their nature; thirdly, that some of those who signed the deeds expressed their disapproval after their signature was given, by refusing to receive the payment; fourthly, that the most; numerous body of the proprietors were not consulted in the matter; the purchase having been made on boardship, and expressed their most decided disapprobation.

I am, &c.,

WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

(No. 5.) Captain W. C. SYMONDS to the Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Bay of Islands, 12th May 1840.

SIR,—

I have the honour to submit to you, for the information of His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, a report) of my proceedings in the Manukau and Waikato districts in my late mission to obtain the adherence of the principal chiefs on the west coast of this Island to the Waitangi Treaty, and herewith transmit to you a copy of the Treaty, signed by upwards of forty of the most influential chief of that part of the country.

On the receipt of your letter, dated 13th March, I immediately assembled as many of the Manukau chiefs as could be collected on a short notice, and with the assistance of Mr. Hamlin, a catechist in the Church Mission, explained to them the views of Her Majesty's Government and solicited their signatures to the Treaty. Rewa, one cheaf of the Bay of Islands, and the principal follower of the Roman Catholic bishop, was present and exerted all his influence against me; in consequence of which all I effected was to dispel many of the doubts which his misrepresentations had created in the minds of all. At a second meeting, however where many of the Waikato and some of the Tauranga and Taupo chiefs also attended – having come from the southward in the interval between the two meetings – I obtained some signatures and the promise of others from some of the most influential chiefs, who yet had to overcome a feeling of pique at their having been left among the last whose concurrence in the Treaty had been demanded, and among these to wherewhere who is the leading chief or king of Waikato.

I left Manukan on the 3rd April intending to proceed to Taranki taking Waikato, the Waipa and several western harbours in my way. I hauled my boats across the isthmus which divides the Manukau from the waters of the Waikato—a distance of 2,260 yards By measurement – and proceeded down the Awaroa to the Church Mission station at the Waikato Heads, where I was received by the Rev. R. Maunsell with the almost attention. Mr. Maunsell had been furnished with a copy of the Treaty, and had obtained many signatures at a meeting which he had holden in the middle of March for Missionary purposes. On my arrival great excitement prevailed amongst the Natives yet about the Settlement, owing to the report which had reached them of presents having been given by the Government to all to the northward who had subscribed to the Treaty, and they were in the act of remonstrating very angrily with Mr. Maunsell on his having kept them in the dark on the subject, demanding the paper to destroy it. My coming was most opportune. I soon allayed the excitement and distributed a few presents, promising the like to all others who had signed their names. Had I been a day later Mr. Maunsell's influence would have been lost, to the great detriment of the advancement of his Missionary labours. On examination of the signatures obtained by Mr. Maunsell I found that, with the exception of very few, all the leading men of the country as far as Mokau had acknowledged the sovereignty of Her Majesty. These few belonged to the neighbourhood of Aoeta and Kawhia wherefore I determined on proceeding myself no further, being well as assured of the disposition on the part of the Wesleyan Mission to support the Government by every exertion in its power. And I sent a letter, whereof the accompanying is copy, to the Rev, John Whiteley, claiming his assistance in procuring the remaining names.

I returned to Manukan on the 18th April where I obtained the adherence of seven other chiefs to the Treaty, Te Where and several others having objected though they manifested no illwill to the Government. This I attribute partly to the bishop's influence, partly to; the extreme pride of the Native chiefs, and in great measure to my being alone and unable to make that display and parade which exerts such influence on the minds of savages, I labored also under the disadvantage of the want of Mr. Hamlin's services, who was absent on his Missionary duties.

I should not fail to mention that, in personal communication with several chiefs who affixed their signatures to the Treaty, I found the best disposition towards Her Majesty's Government but at the same time their expectations are raised very high as to the immediate benefits which they are to derive from its establishment in their country; and, if I might presume to offer an opinion. I would suggest that, in order that they might not be disappointed, measures might be adopted to put the chiefs in communication with the Government officers to make arrangements for the purchasing of land, &c.

Sub-Enclosure. Captain W. C. SYMONDS to the Rev JOHN AWHITENEY

SIR,—

Waikato heads 8th April 1840

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor having deputed me to obtain the adherence of as many of the principal chiefs of the western coast of this Island to the Treaty of Waitangi as may be induced to affix their names to a signed copy of that Treaty which was furnished me, I have the honour to request; your assistance in Kawhia, and the country about toward that end. The exertions of the Rev R. Maunsell have saved me the trouble of a journey further into the Waikato country and his success in obtaining signatures has been such I have been induced, to forego a visit. I had proposed to Kawhia but; few of the principal chiefs remaining to be gained over. I beg to consign to your charge and copy of the Treaty; and to request that you will take trouble to obtain the cession of their sovereign rights to Her Majesty from as many of the chief as you may deem sufficient, stretching far to the southward as possible among the Ngatimaniapoto. To Ngolli, Pakaru, Warahi; and 'Kirihi,' from your neighbourhood, have given their signatures; and I believe that if Taonui Tarihi, Te Waru, Te Ao, To Wakaka, from Kawhia, and Wiremu and Rawiri from 'Whaingaron, be obtained, they will suffice to extend Her Majesty's 'authority as far south as Mokau. I beg however that you will be guided by your own judgment, and let all the principal chiefs sign who may wish to give over their country to British protection.

Notice of presents given by the Governor to those who signed at Waitangi and Hauraki had preceded me, and many have reached Kawhia every one who has any pretensions to being a chief will flock to sign his name for the sake of obtaining a blanket; consequently it is of the greatest importance that the nature of the cession of rights should be "perfectly explained,-that those chiefs only should be chosen of the greatest authority, and that it should be explained to them that the gifts made to them have in nowise the nature of a bribe or payment for their concurrence. Blankets will be forwarded to you, to be given to those who subscribe their names, and I request you will distribute them, one to each chief, after signature. If you will have the goodness to return the copy of the Treaty to me at Manukau, I will put it in the proper channel to reach His Excellency the Governor.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM C. SYMONDS.

The Rev. John Whiteley, Minister, Wesleyan Mission.

(No. 6.)Major BUNBURY to His Excellency the GOVERNOR.

SIR,—

H.M.S. "Herald," Mercury Bay, 15th May 1840.

Since I last had the honour of addressing you I have, made an excursion in the "Trent," schooner, to Tauranga. She left the "Herald" at Mercury Bay on the 8th instant, late in the evening, and arrived off Tauranga on the Sunday following; but the night was too far advanced to attempt to enter the harbour until the following day, when Mr. Parker, of H.M.S. "Herald," Mr. Williams, and myself, went on shore at the Mission-station, where we were received by the Rev. Mr. Stack, and I was agreeably surprised to learn that most of the Native chiefs in that neighbourhood had already signed the Treaty, with the exception of the principal chief and one or two of his friends at the Otumoetai Pa. This pa we visited the same evening, accompanied by Mr. Stack: it is a very extensive fortification, and appears to contain about a thousand men. The chief who had declined signing it is a very young man, and his manner was timidly reserved, and less prepossessing than most of those I had before seen. On our taking leave he made the usual remark that he wanted to consult the other chiefs, and that he would with them meet us at the Mission-station on the morrow.

On the following day he did not speak until the close of the conference, and then only in private to Mr. Williams after Mr. Stack and myself had left them, and to inquire how much he was to get for his signature. Another chief expressed some indignation, because the Christian chiefs had not, as he said, met them: I presume he meant those from the other pa, where Mr. Stack's influence was supposed to extend more than to his own, and where a Roman Catholic European residentiary and the Catholic bishop were supposed to have more influence. A third chief, the principal orator on this occasion, amused me much. After the Treaty had been read and explained to them he quaintly observed, when his signature was required, "Now, first let us talk a little. Who was the first stranger that visited our shores?" On being answered, Cook; "And who was Cook's king? Was his name George?" On my replying through the interpreter, "Yes," "And who then," he continued, "is the Queen?" "I then informed him that King George had been dead some years, as also his two sons George and William, who had succeeded him on the throne, and that the present Queen was the granddaughter of George. He then adverted to the wars of their tribes and chiefs, particularly with the Natives of Rotorua. I told him that one of the principal objects of my mission was to persuade all tribes at present at war with each other to accept the mediation of your Excellency, and to advise them to abide your decision. He objected strongly to our proposal of visiting at a future period the Natives of Rotorua; and he also observed, "If your nation is so fond of peace, why have you introduced into my country firearms and gunpowder?" He was in reply told that the effects of this trade had been much deplored by the Queen's Government, who were anxious to mitigate its consequences by substituting justice and a regular form of government in their country, and which could only be effected by giving the Queen the necessary powers, and for which purpose they were required to sign the Treaty, which had been before explained to them. He next inquired whether my Queen governed all the white nations. I replied, Not all; but that she was Queen of the most powerful of all the nations. She had, however, acknowledged the New Zealanders to be an independent nation some years ago; but that treaty had proved abortive, in consequence of; the wars of their tribes amongst themselves, and their want of union; and to themselves alone, therefore, were to be attached the evils they had endured. She did not seek the authority of white men, of whatever nation, to govern them; she sought that authority from themselves, as a spontaneous gift vesting her with power for their own good, and to avert the evils which she foresaw, were accumulating around them, by the increasing influence of white men subject otherwise to no law or control. On being told that I was a chief of a body of soldiers, and that I had served under the monarchs already named, he inquired, Should his tribe, agreeably to my request, abstain from making war on the Natives at Rotorua, would the Governor send a portion of my force to protect them? I told them your Excellency desired rather to mediate between them, and only in cases of extreme emergency would you be prevailed upon to act in any other manner; but, if your arbitration was applied for, I had no doubt but that the custom of their country would be complied with, by your insisting on a compensation being made to the party injured by the party offending. On my speaking of the sale of lands, and of the right of pre-emption claimed by the Queen as intended equally for their benefit and to encourage industrious white men to settle amongst them, to teach them arts and how to manufacture those articles which were so much sought after and admired by them, rather than, by leaving the sale of large tracts of land to themselves, they might pass into the hands of white men who would never come amongst them but to hamper by their speculations the industrious. The Queen, therefore, knew the object of these men, many of whom, I had no doubt, had counselled them not to sign the Treaty; but she would, nevertheless, unceasingly exert herself to mitigate the evils they sought to inflict on this country, by purchasing their lands herself at a juster valuation. He said it was useless now to speak of this, as the white men had purchased all their lands; but they appeared quite satisfied, saying it was very just.

Your Excellency is aware of the dilatory habits of the Natives. I therefore told the chiefs, in conclusion, that it was necessary that I should also pay my respects to the chiefs of the neighbouring pa; and I therefore took my leave of them, leaving Mr. Williams for a time to see if they would resolve whether or not to sign the Treaty. He subsequently told me that presents had been demanded, but the chief said he would not believe the word of the missionary when Mr. Williams told him he had little doubt but that I would send some blankets through him for distribution.

I afterwards visited the chiefs at the Maungatapu. Pa, all of whom had previously signed, with the exception of two, who were, I regret to say, absent with their families. We were well received. The chief, a fine, intelligent-looking fellow, named Nuka, said that he had dined but, if we would take some dinner, it would soon be prepared for us. This pa and the tribe are of considerable strength and importance. I was much taken by their chief's manners; and, from the good character he bears, if any mark of distinction is ever to be shown to any of them it would be well to secure the goodwill of this chief, who appears to be well disposed to the Government.

I have deemed it expedient to enter more fully into the detail of this conference, as one which not only shows fully the general character of the Natives, but also the nature of the obstacles I may hereafter expect to meet when principles alien to the Government have been instilled by interested Europeans into their minds, as exemplified also at Coromandel Harbour. Neither will I disguise from your Excellency my regrets that men professing Christianity should, in a country emerging from barbarity, whose inhabitants are scarcely able to comprehend the simplest doctrines of the Christian religion, endeavour to create distrust of its ministers, of whatsoever persuasion; Christianity in any shape with these people being better than the deplorable condition of many of them at present. It is not the specious professions of a religion which asserts itself unconnected with civil government which should blind us to the political disunion it creates; but rather its sincerity should be tested, by its acts and their effects, and whether it seeks to open a new field of labour before uncultivated, or to paralyze the efforts of those who have laboured to improve the soil by establishing themselves upon it. The latter I conceive incompatible with such professions, whilst this country contains so vast a field untried, but still, it is to be hoped, reclaimable.

I have given to Captain Bateman a certificate of having chartered his schooner for eleven days at £2 10s. per diem; also for £9 10s. 8d. paid by him to Mr. Webster, at Coromandel Harbour, for pork and potatoes given to the Natives. We arrived here this morning, having left Tauranga Harbour on the 13th instant. The Native chiefs at Otumotai Pa still display their character for strict observance of previous engagements, until outbidden by the promise of an increased premium.

Thos. BUNBURY, Major, 80th Regiment.

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor of New Zealand.

(No. 7.)The Rev. JAMES STACK to the Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

SIR,—

Church Missionary Station, Tauranga, 23rd May 1840.

In the absence of the Rev. A. N. Brown, I have, agreeably to Major Bunbury's directions, copied the Treaty of Waitangi, and I have now the honour to forward you the original by the "Aquila" cutter, the first opportunity since Major Bunbury left Tauranga.

Two who are considered "high chiefs" have refused to sign the Treaty. Their minds have been disturbed by some evil-minded person trying to prejudice them against Government. They may possibly sign the copy I have taken by-and-by. Major Bunbury told me signatures on the copy would be as good as those on the original document you sent. As Major Bunbury was hindered, in consequence of war between the tribes, from visiting Rotorua, I sent a copy of the treaty to Rotorua to-day to Messrs. Chapman and Morgan, to use their influence to get the signatures of the chiefs. An unexpected opportunity occurring yesterday by the arrival of the schooner "Mercury," with James Fedarb on board as supercargo, I prepared a copy of the Treaty, which I gave in charge to him, with letters to our Native teachers at Opotiki and Te Kaha to do what they could in obtaining signatures of chiefs in that quarter.

Either the Rev. A. N. Brown or myself would feel most happy by personal visitation amongst all the tribes in the Bay of Plenty to forward the views of Her Majesty's Government were it just now practicable, but unfortunately it is not. Mr. Brown being on a missionary visit in an opposite direction, of necessity one of us must remain at home to take charge of the station.

I have distributed the eight blankets left by Major Bunbury to those chiefs who he directed should have them. I have added four others out of our Society's store, Several more blankets may yet be wanting if Tupaia and his friends should sign.

I beg to apologize for the very soiled state of the Treaty, but the Native habits are so filthy it could hardly be avoided.

All the names marked# in red ink are either head chiefs or sons of deceased chiefs of rank. Nuka and Tau are the two greatest chiefs who have signed the treaty in Tauranga as yet.

I have, &c.,

JAMES STACK.

(No. 8.)The Rev. Henry Williams to His Excellency the Goyernor.

SIR,—

Paihia, 11th June, 1840.

I have much pleasure in forwarding to your Excellency the Treaty committed to my care for the signatures of the chiefs in Cook Straits.

On my arrival at Port Nicholson, I experienced some opposition from the influence of Europeans at that place, and it was not until after the expiration of ten days that the chiefs were disposed to come forward, when they unanimously signed the Treaty. The chiefs of Queen Charlotte Sound and Rangitoto, in the neighbourhood of Port Hardy, on the south side of the Straits, as also those chiefs on the north side of the Straits with whom I communicated, as far as Whanganui, signed the Treaty with much satisfaction, and appeared much gratified that a check was put to the importunities of the Europeans to the purchase of their lands, and that protection was now afforded to them in common with Her Majesty's subjects.

It had been my intention to have proceeded to Cloudy Bay, Banks Peninsula, and Otako, whereby the signatures of the whole of the tribes of the Southern Island would have been obtained, for which purpose I felt it important to prolong the charter of the schooner "Ariel" in the service of the Government; but upon my return from Whanganui to Kapiti I received intelligence that Her Majesty's ship "Herald" had left the Bay of Islands for the Southern Island, and that an officer had been appointed to proceed with a copy of the Treaty. I therefore concluded to return to the Bay of Islands.

I have much satisfaction in stating to your Excellency that Captain Clayton rendered me every assistance in his power, and upon my application to him at Port Nicholson to convey me to Otako, &c., he unhesitatingly gave up his vessel for the service of the Government, though to the serious detriment of his private business on the coast.

I have, &c.,

HENRY WILLIAMS.

Bay of Islands,—Approval of the Governor's Proceedings in reference to the Treaty of Waitangi.

SIR,—

Downing Street, 10th December 1840.

I have received your despatch of the 25th May last, reporting your proceedings up to that date, and enclosing copies of three Proclamations which you had issued: the first two for the purpose of asserting the sovereignty of the Queen over the Islands of New Zealand, and the third for the purpose of checking the illegal proceedings of parties who were endeavouring to establish a separate authority. I have given due publicity to the two first-mentioned Proclamations in the London Gazette. As far as it has been possible to form a judgment, your proceedings appear to have entitled you to the entire approbation of Her Majesty's Government.

I shall soon be able to transmit to you Letters Patent under the Great Seal, constituting New Zealand a separate Government, together with your Commission as first Governor, and the Royal Instructions for your guidance in administering the affairs of your Government. I trust that your health will continue to improve, and will enable you to remain in the discharge of the important duties which are intrusted to you.

No. 18. Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor HOBSON to the PRINCIPAL SECRETARY of STATE for the COLONIES

Auckland.—Result of first Land Sale: £24,275 17s. 9d.

MY LORD,—

Government House, Auckland, 5th August 1841.

I have the honour to enclose a Government Gazette showing the result of the land sale, of the 19th April, in which 119 allotments, containing forty-four acres, sold for the gross sum of £24,275 17s. 9d., being at the average of £555 per acre nearly, full reports of which have been forwarded to Sir George Gipps, who was then my official superior.

In drawing your Lordship's attention to this subject, I have the honour to acquaint you that on the 12th day of April eighty-nine suburban or cultivation allotments were advertised for sale by auction in the immediate vicinity of this town. Upon the subsequent receipt of your Lordship's instructions on the 30th April, which superseded those of Lord Normanby, under which I previously acted I immediately postponed the intended sale of allotments from the 12th July to the 1st September, in hopes of receiving by that period further instructions on the subject.

Under these circumstances your Lordship will perceive that I was placed in the unpleasant dilemma of departing from your express commands, or of inflicting a severe injury on the inhabitants of this town, by withholding from them for an indefinite period the means of providing for themselves the common necessities of life, and by occasioning considerable pecuniary loss and inconvenience to persons who might have made arrangements for purchasing these lands at the forthcoming sale.

Having already experienced, in the case of the Town of Russell, the mischievous effect of annulling a sale which had once been advertised, I could not help pausing ere I again exposed the faith of the Government to the blighting effect of doubt. The outcry on the former occasion was most violent, and on this it would be reiterated with tenfold vehemence, owing to the increased inconvenience that would result to those who had resolved to settle in town, or who had already bought allotments there. Governed by these circumstances, I resolved to bring the matter before the Executive Council, and fairly put the question to them whether they considered your Lordship would better approve of a slight departure from your orders, or of the alternative which would inflict so much present inconvenience and pecuniary loss on the settlers of this town and neighbourhood. The Council were unanimously of opinion that your Lordship would consider the absolute wants of the colonists as paramount to all other considerations, and advised me accordingly to sell the few allotments I had advertised; fixing the upset price at such a rate as to deter any one from purchasing except those who were likely to become bond fide settlers, and who would, by their presence and their industry promote the health and comfort of the inhabitants of the town generally.

I should be sorry to convey to your Lordship, by any reasons I have assigned for my proceeding, the idea that I was wholly unprepared for your Lordship's instructions in regard to the sale of land in this colony, the fact being otherwise. I did fully believe that your Lordship would deal with the lands of New Zealand as you had done with those at Port Phillip, and I determined accordingly to confine my operations to a space of five miles round this town, that I might not embarrass any arrangements your Lordship might establish.

It might be supposed that the settlers would be better pleased to obtain their lands near the town at a fixed price, on so low a scale as that which your Lordship seems to contemplate. I much fear that this theory, when brought into practice, will prove beneficial to jobbers only, who, devoting their whole attention to that one object, will afford no chance of competition to industrious settlers, or to persons unacquainted with official business.

As a proof to your Lordship how the system of fixed prices would have affected the financial concerns of this colony in the sale of Auckland, I enclose the copy of an application forwarded to me by Mr.—, which, had the fixed system been in operation, would have engrossed sixty town allotments for the benefit of himself and his friends, persons who can have no idea of settling in New Zealand; and if he had had the earliest selection, which from his activity in these matters he most probably would have had, he and those he represents would have realized from £20,000 to £25,000. Even as the case stands, and high as the land sold, Mr.—and others have made considerable sums by the resale of choice allotments.

The sale by lot is subject to less objection, because it offers no exclusive advantage to jobbers, or to the officers of the Government, who might profit by their early knowledge of land to be sold, especially at the commencement of the system. I object, however, to this method of gambling, which encourages jobbing instead of colonizing.

I hope I have not intruded my opinions too far on subjects which your Lordship has probably decided, but I have taken the liberty of impressing these examples on your Lordship's notice whilst there remains an opportunity of modifying a plan that admits of practices which I consider to be in the highest degree prejudicial to the interests of the colony.

I have, &c.,

W. HOBSON.

Manukau.—Report of the Death of W. C. Symonds, H.M. 96th Regiment.

MY LORD,—

Auckland, 16th December 1841

It is with extreme regret I have to report the death, by drowning in the Manukau, of the late Captain Symonds, of the 96th Regiment, which occasions a vacancy in the office of Deputy Surveyor-General of this colony. The loss to New Zealand of so valuable an officer as the late Captain Symonds will be long felt as a public calamity. His energy, zeal, and manly bearing are qualities much wanted in a new colony, and these he possessed in an eminent degree; in addition to which, his urbane manners secured for him the affection and respect of all classes, both Native and European.

I have the honour to enclose a paragraph, cut from a newspaper, which describes more particularly the melancholy event which consigned this excellent officer to a premature grave.

I have, &c.

W. HOBSON.

Enclosure.

[Extract from Auckland Herald, dated 27th November 1841.]

Captain W. Cornwallis Symonds was drowned on Tuesday, in Manukau Bay. The following particulars of this melancholy occurrence will, we believe, be found substantially correct: Mrs. Hamlin, wife of Mr. Hamlin, the missionary at Manukau (who was absent from home), being very ill, sent a message to the "Brilliant," lying in the Bay, to request that if there was a surgeon in the ship he would attend her. Captain Symonds, having heard the circumstances, and knowing there was no surgeon on board, did that which those who knew him might have calculated upon, for, with the active kindness and benevolence which so distinguished him, he immediately resolved to procure medicines from the ship and cross the Bay to Mrs. Hamlin's residence. He accordingly proceeded on board the "Brilliant," and, Having made his arrangements, he, by the advice of the captain of that vessel, in consequence of the day being gusty, and there being at the time a considerable sea, took the ship's long boat instead, of his own; he was accompanied by Mr. Adam, a gentleman who came out from Scotland in the "Brilliant" and settled at Manukau, two European seamen, and a Native. Shortly after leaving the vessel a violent and sudden squall struck the boat, which was observed to go down head foremost, about a mile from the ship. Two boats were immediately lowered from the "Brilliant," but we understand that, owing to the dangerous sea running, it was found impracticable to proceed to the unfortunate men, and those in the ship were compelled to witness their unhappy fate. The two seamen disappeared almost immediately; Mr. Adam swam for a long time, in company with Captain Symonds, but at length sank. Captain Symonds, who was an expert and powerful swimmer, was observed to make the most extraordinary exertions: he swam more than an hour and twenty minutes, encumbered with a particular heavy kind of nailed boots and two thick pea-coats (which latter he was seen attempting to take off), and had nearly gained the shore when he disappeared. He had done much for New Zealand, and from his talents and energy much more was expected. He was public-spirited and independent in the highest degree, and this event is a great calamity to the colonists of this country, as well as to the infant company of which he was so able a director. The Native who accompanied them, through the interposition of Divine providence, alone remains to relate the melancholy event.

Proclamation-by His Excellency Robert Fitzroy, Esquire, Captain in Her Majesty's Royal Navy, Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Colony of New Zealand, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c., &c.

From this day, until otherwise ordered, I will consent, on behalf of Her Majesty-the Queen, to waive the right of pre-emption over certain limited portions of lands in New Zealand, on the following conditions:—

- 1. Application is to be made in writing to the Governor, through the Colonial Secretary, to waive the Crown's right of pre-emption over a certain number of acres of land at or immediately adjoining a place distinctly specified, such land being described as accurately as may be practicable. '
- 2. The Governor will give-or refuse his consent to waive the Crown's right of pre-emption to a certain person, or his assignee, as His Excellency may judge best for the public welfare, rather than for the private interest of the applicant. He will consider the nature of the locality; the state of the neighbouring and resident Natives; their abundance or deficiency of land; their disposition towards Europeans, and towards Her Majesty's Government; and he will consult with the Protector of Aborigines before consenting, in any case, to waive the right of pre-emption.
- 3. No Crown title will be given for any pa or Native burying-ground, or land about either, however desirous the owners may now be to part with them; and, as a general rule, the right of pre-emption will not be waived over any land required by the, aborigines for their present use, although they themselves may now be desirous that it should be alienated.
- 4. The Crown's right of pre-emption will not be waived over any of that land near Auckland which lies between the Tamaki Road and the sea to the northward.
- 5. Of all land purchased from the aborigines in consequence of the Crown's right of pre-emption being waived, one-tenth part of fair average value as to position and quality is to be conveyed by the purchaser to Her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for public purposes, especially for the future benefit of the aborigines.
- 6. All transactions with the sellers, all risks attendant on misunderstandings, on sales made improperly, or on incomplete, purchases, must be undertaken by the buyers until their respective purchases have been allowed and confirmed by grants from the Crown.
- 7. As the Crown has no right of pre-emption over land already sold to any person not an aboriginal native of New Zealand, and whose claim is or may be acknowledged by a Commissioner of Land Claims, no grant will be issued to any other than the original claimant, or his representative, whose claims have been-or may be investigated by a Commissioner, and recommended by him to the Governor for a grant from the Crown.
- 8. As a contribution to the Land Fund, and for the general purposes of Government, fees will be demanded in ready money at the rate of 4s. per acre for nine-tenths of the aggregate quantity of land over which it may be requested that the Crown's right of pre-emption may be waived. These fees will be payable into the Treasury on receiving the Governor's consent to waive the right, of pre-emption. And on the issue of a Crown grant after an interval of at least twelve months from the time of paying the above-mentioned fees, additional payments will be required at the rate of 6s. per acre, in 'ready money, to be applied to the Land Fund, and for the general purposes of Government.
- 9. Land so obtained is to be surveyed at the expense of the purchaser by a competent surveyor, licensed or otherwise approved of by Government, who will be required to declare to the accuracy of his work, to the best of his belief, and to deposit certified copies of the same at the Surveyor-General's Office previous to the preparation of a Crown grant.
- 10. Copies of the deed or deeds conveying such lands are to be lodged at the Surveyor-General's Office as soon as practicable, in order that the necessary inquiries may be made; and notice given in the Maori as well as in the English Gazette that a Crown title will be issued, unless sufficient cause should be shown for its being withheld for a time, or altogether refused.
- 11. 'The Government, on behalf of the Crown and the public, will reserve the right of making and constructing roads and bridges for public purposes through or in lands so granted, the owners being fairly compensated by other equivalent land as settled by arbitration.
- 12. No Crown grants will be issued under the foregoing arrangements to any person or persons who may be found to have contravened any of these regulations; and the public are reminded that no' title to land in this colony, held or claimed by any person not an aboriginal native of the same, is valid in the eye of the law, or otherwise than null and void, unless confirmed by a grant from the Crown.

Given under my hand, and issued under, the Public Seal of the Colony at Government House, Auckland, this twenty-sixth day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand 'eight hundred and forty-four.

ROBEET FITZROY, Governor.

By command. ANDREW SINCLAIR, Colonial Secretary. GOD SAVE THE QUEEN!

No. 23. Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor FITZROY to Lord STANLEY.

Waiver of Right of Pre-emption.

Auckland, 14th October 1844.

In the Gazette which I have the honour of transmitting with this despatch, and the enclosed Minutes of Council, is a Proclamation respecting the purchase of land from the aboriginal natives of New Zealand, which I have deemed it not only prudent but absolutely necessary to issue, in order to prevent insurrection.

During the last two years there has been a growing desire on the part of the Natives to dispose of their own lands at their pleasure, irrespective of all interference or control. This desire has been industriously stimulated by settlers, who have not only reminded them of the Treaty of Waitangi, but have continually taunted them with being no better than slaves while the provisions of that treaty remain unexecuted. The Natives have been repeatedly told that they gave to the Queen of England "te hokonga," the "option of purchase," but that they did not, in their own language, give Her Majesty the sole and exclusive right of purchase; that the words in the English treaty, "exclusive right-of pre-emption," were not translated correctly, and have a meaning not generally understood by the Natives, who never would have agreed to debar themselves from selling to private persons if the Government, on behalf of Her Majesty declined to purchase. The attention of the Natives has also been repeatedly—I may say, frequently and purposely—drawn to the last article of the Treaty of "Waitangi, by which Her Majesty "imparts to them all the rights and privileges of British subjects";" and they have been told that while unable to sell their own land that article is not executed, and that they are no better than slaves (taurekareka) taken in war, who have not the disposal of their own lands while occupied by their conquerors.

Unfortunately the facts of the case go far to support the above assertions; and to such an extent has the feeling grown among the Natives excited in every part of the country by designing persons, some of whom are aiming at the expulsion of the Government which interferes with their individual objects, that I am absolutely certain that a serious interruption of tranquillity, tending to destroy confidence "and bring on hostilities, would be the consequence of a course of conduct different from that which I now believe it my duty to pursue, however startling and unauthorized such a course must appear to your Lordship until explained.

To show further how this mischief has been fomented, and would be much increased, I have to state that a number of persons have lately subscribed a large sum as a reward for whomsoever should do most towards stirring up and informing the Natives how to act together on this subject. During my visit to the southern settlements it was intended to agitate in the northern parts of the country, in order that on my return I might find the stream of popular feeling too strong to oppose effectually.

I have known of the existence and growth of these feelings for some time", as your Lordship is aware; but I hoped that answers might have been received by me to my despatches of April last, before taking so important a step as that of allowing the aboriginal natives of New Zealand to sell their lands without the payment of any concurrent fee to Government.

I have ventured, my Lord, to take this step in the fullest appreciation of all the consequences. It may be right that I should individually be censured for what I have done, and even—that I should be forthwith superseded. At such a decision I shall not be surprised. But, discarding personal considerations, let me entreat your Lordship to dismiss from your mind the thought of its being possible to maintain a pacific and friendly policy towards the New Zealanders without allowing them to sell their land to private persons. By the restrictions hitherto-imposed on this-sensitive, jealous, and warlike people in respect of trade, and the unexpected barrier raised against their sale of their own lands, a general rebellion against the authority of Her Majesty has—been already well nigh caused; and would unquestionably be raised from one end of the country to the other, if a stop were put to the limited, sale of land to private individuals, or if the restrictions of Customs regulations were re-established.

I have, &c.,

ROBERT FITZROY. Governor.

The Right Hon. Lord Stanley, &c.

General Report on the Land Question.

MY LORD,—

Auckland, 15th October 1844.

With the Blue Book of this colony for the year 1843 is an explanation of the reasons which have hitherto delayed its transmission, and which have prevented its contents from being satisfactory. Although not in the colony during the period referred to, I have collected some authentic information respecting the past and existing state of the colony and its prospects, some of which I will now place before your Lordship in as succinct a form as possible.

Referring in the first instance to the state of the colony at the end of 1843, and during the previous time: At the first establishment of British authority in New Zealand the most extravagant notions were entertained of the expense to be incurred and the forces to be employed by Great Britain. Examples of extravagance were too readily followed. Money was then abundant at Sydney, and speculators were very sanguine. The consequences to this young colony were most pernicious. Every one lived beyond his means; and many borrowed money at exorbitant rates of interest in order to buy land, especially town allotments and water frontages: Speculations of the most absurd kind prevailed for a time, and numerous were the allotments purchased at high prices by persons who thus exhausted their means, and then found themselves utterly unable either to build or cultivate. Houses were built which could not be used; farms were bought which could not be stocked; and of course great distress has been the consequence. Had the land been bought at a cheap rate, the means exhausted in purchase might have been employed in cultivation, and the colony would have been self-supplied with most things, in a very short time, after which there would have, been exports.

I should be wanting in candour did I not acquaint your Lordship that the system of selling land here at a high upset price did, much to augment these evils. A temporary supply of funds was undoubtedly raised, which made a show of prosperity; but my Lord, how precious was, that show? The thousands: of pounds drawn from thoughtless, settlers, who believed a thriving, city was to be raised by some immediate process, were, the, very seeds of prosperity, which should have been scattered on the land. Had the Government; retained possession of a considerable quantity of valuable land, and let it on lease, as at Singapore, a moderate, but certain and increasing, revenue, might, have, been - raised. I am also found, to inform, your Lordship that the measures adopted to wards, those earlier settler so who had-really acquired tracts, of land by; fair purchase tended to much harm. Those speculators who assumed to have purchased many thousands, nay, millions, of acres never could have substantiated any claim, because they never had made valid purchases; but there were many whose purchases seemed large on paper, however valueless much of their land might be, who had fairly acquired a few hundred, or a few thousand, acres of land, with the full consent of: the aboriginal owners; and these persons not only suffered much from delay, expense, uncertainty, and inability to make any progress during three years, but the Natives who had sold to them became exceedingly irritated, taking up their cause and saying, "If the Queen acts thus towards her own people, what will she do to us?" The interference, for instance, with Mr. Fairburn's property, however necessary in his case, raised acommotion among the Waikato tribes, which caused great alarm, but was hushed up although they were then so irritated as to be on the point of rising against the local Government; and they are the most powerful tribes in New Zealand.

While it was the object of the local Government to raise as much money as possible by the sale of lands, irrespective of the real interests of the settlers and the colony, it was of course an object to take as much as possible from the old settlers, with the view of those lands (not reverting to their original owners, but) becoming disposable for sale by the local Government. Such a step as selling those excess lands was happily never attempted, however generally contemplated. The Natives would never have allowed it to take place; and the attempt to do so would have injured the character of the Queen's Government very seriously, if not irretrievably, so tenacious are the Natives of what they consider to be strict justice. As yet it is quite impossible to make them comprehend our strictly legal view of such cases.

Owing principally to these causes above mentioned, there was a great stagnation in the colony after the first two years of excitement had passed. The public revenue diminished rapidly. Trade diminished, because there were then neither exports nor funds. People lived on the remains of whatever capital or property they had not expended. No titles to land were issued. Government payments became tardy and uncertain; salaries were allowed to be several months in arrear, the local Government having neither money nor credit; and to this unhappy condition was the colony reduced, notwithstanding its extraordinary natural resources, at the termination of the year 1843. The prospects of the colony at the end of that year were very gloomy. The value and extent of mineral resources were then unknown. The fertility of the soil and the excellence of the climate were comparatively useless without capital and without a market. Salaries of Government officers were four months in arrear. Contingent payments were overdue by Government for an equally long period and the feelings between the two races were not merely questionable, but becoming daily less satisfactory.

ROBERT FITZROY Governor.

The Right Hon. Lord Stanley, &c.

No. 25. Copy of a (Confidential) DESPATCH from Governor FITZROY to Lord STANLEY

Bay of Islands.—Military Protection required throughout the Colony.

MY LORD,—

Auckland, 19th October 1844.

It was my intention to have left Auckland in Her Majesty's ship "Hazard" on the 7th of this month, but another disturbance at the Bay of Islands obliged me to remain within reach.

In apprehending a notoriously bad character—an Englishman named Byars—a Native woman was accidentally hurt by one of the constables and, according to the old customs of the aborigine, compensation should be given. The Police Magistrate treated the affair as too trifling to be noticed; upon which some turbulent Natives took the law into their own hands and drove away eight horses belonging to an unoffending and respectable settler named Wright, saying they would keep them until satisfactory compensation was made for the injury done, not by Mr. Wright, but by a European, to one of their relations. The annexed documents will show more in detail the nature and origin of this occurrence, which, taken by itself, is not of much consequence, but taken as additional evidence of the unsettled and lawless, if not insurrectionary, disposition of many Natives about the Bay of Islands, assumes a character of real importance.

On the 13th instant Her Majesty's ship "North Star" arrived here, on her way to Van Diemen's Land, and Sir Everard Home, with his usual readiness to forward Her Majesty's service, consented to remain until this matter could be arranged. Yesterday Her Majesty's ship "Hazard" returned from Russell (Kororareka) with the Chief Protector of Aborigines, bringing intelligence that the affair was amicably settled, but also warning me that the influence of the well-disposed chiefs is becoming weaker, and that there are designing persons at work there, whose object is to create disturbances in order to bring the English—especially the Government and the Missionaries—into disrepute. In my last confidential letter to your Lordship I spoke of both and as intriguers. I have no doubt that the frequent and open assertions of the former respecting the British flag, and the quiet though continual efforts of the latter, have already done great mischief; and, had they but sufficient fulcrum on which to place their lever of agitation, they would succeed in their object—that of bringing about a resistance of British authority and an open unqualified denial of Her Majesty's sovereignty. Heke, Kingi, Pure and others are but tools in the hands of these designing men, who visit them and fill their minds with accounts of what England has done to the aborigines of Van Diemen's Land and New South Wales—places they know well—keeping out of view what has been done by other nations in America and Africa.

Having removed the restrictions of: the Customs establishment, and allowed the Natives to sell their land under such restrictions only as are undeniably and palpably for their own advantage, I feel satisfied that the foundation on which British authority rests in New Zealand is secured; and, by giving small salaries, with dresses or distinctive marks, to the principal chiefs, so as to, uphold their influence as much as possible, I do not doubt that the peace of the country will be generally maintained if your Lordship will materially strengthen both the military and the naval force. I urge this the more earnestly on the attention of your Lordship, because each succeeding month brings stronger conviction to my mind of the very great political importance and of the immense value of this country.

I feel fully how apt all men are to overrate things in which they themselves are personally interested; but, my Lord, I have seen much of other countries; I have only a temporary, perhaps a very temporary, immediate interest in New Zealand; but, as a faithful servant of Her Majesty should greatly neglect my duty did I not again and again set forth in the strongest language the extraordinary resources of this country, and the extreme importance not of conquering and exterminating—God forbid—but of preventing any hostile collisions among the Natives, of overawing evil disposed Europeans as well as Natives, and insuring the peace of the country (the only sure key to its ultimate prosperity and the preservation of the aboriginal race) by keeping such a force in sight as will completely check attempts to disturb the peace.

It is necessary I should state to your Lordship that the great danger to be apprehended in New Zealand is retaliation on unoffending persons, settlers in the interior, or at a distance from the principal settlements. Among the heathen Natives, and among many who profess Christianity, blood-revenge is still their practice, if not their law. Were a conflict to take place in which the lives of Natives were lost, in all probability the lives of persons unconnected with the affray would be taken, and a personal quarrel, or mere chance-medley, might lead to a general rupture between the races. There is no doubt that upon sufficient cause the tribes of New Zealand, however inimical to each other under ordinary circumstances, would, in case of hostilities with Europeans, unite and act in concert. The only means, under God's providence, of avoiding such a "consequence of the benevolent efforts of Great Britain in behalf of the New Zealanders, and in support of her own settlers at the antipodes, is to be most cautious in all our proceedings; to take care that our conduct and policy towards the aborigines is so undeniably correct and just (that it will stand their most searching scrutiny; and that we maintain so large a military force in the colony that organized resistance to it may be quite hopeless.

It is the opinion of all the military men with whom I have conversed in this colony, and it is the opinion of those who are most competent to advise with me on this subject, as well as my own, that the organization and employment of a militia would not only be useless; but dangerous; and on this account the Militia Bill which I laid before the Legislative Council, in obedience to your Lordship's instructions, was postponed. There is so much rancorous feeling towards the Natives among some of the settlers that arms cannot be trusted in their hands unless in a case of the most extreme emergency. The fact of the settlers arming and training would alarm the Natives and destroy their confidence in our ultimate intentions, whereas the presence of additional troops does not do so while the settlers remain unarmed: the Natives understand that the soldiers are to support our law and defend our property; they are accustomed to the soldiers, and treat them not only with respect but confidence, because they have never abused the power they are known to possess. Towards armed settlers there would be a very different feeling, and, if called out, awkwardness or fear might bring on a collision, which need not occur if well disciplined troops were employed: then would follow retaliation upon the settlers. It is the presence of force, not the employment of it, that is so much required in the present state of the colony. The good effects of the timely visits of Her Majesty's ships "North Star" and "Hazard" together with the prompt military aid afforded by Sir George Gipps have been as marked as opportune.

There are now very strong reasons for the presence of a regiment of the line and at least two ships of war in New Zealand. The speedy appearance of such a force may save years of misfortune, misery, and bloodshed. The influence of the elder chiefs is impaired; some of the young aspiring chiefs are desirous of making a name for themselves, and having nothing to do, wish for war. They deride and oppose the old men and Christian Natives.

Were there a military power in the country sufficient to guarantee the safety of the well-disposed, we should, in the event of hostilities, have the majority at least of the Native population on our side, and actively our friends; but, as the case now stands, they would remain neuter. A shrewd chief, of much influence in the interior of the country, said to Mr. Shortland (the Protector), "When you have five hundred soldiers in New Zealand besides those at Auckland and Wellington, I will acknowledge the Queen's authority and act under your Governor; but till you have strength enough to defend me against my enemies I must not take part with you and expose myself."

The greatest benefit that England could now confer on New Zealand would be to place such a force in the country as would encourage and protect the old friendly chiefs, the Christian Natives, and the well-disposed of all classes, while it would effectually prevent disturbances of a serious or lasting character. More than one ship of war is necessary, because the settlements are so remote that her visits can be but transient and occasional. The prosperity of the colony, if not its tenure by Great Britain, depends on decisive and efficient measures taken in time, before the now growing evils become fully developed.

ROBERT FITZROY, Governor.

Auckland.—Waiving Crown's Right of Pre-emption.

Protector's Office, Auckland, 5th November 1844.

Referring to the letters of applicants to His Excellency the Governor for waiving the Crown's right of pre-emption over portions of land they are desirous of buying from the Natives, I have the honour to submit to you whether a form of application (something after the enclosed), printed in the Government Gazette, would not tend very much to assist proposed purchasers, facilitate my giving the necessary information relative to purchases, and prevent much future embarrassment to the Government. It would at the same time prove a considerable check upon both buyers and sellers.

I am induced to bring this subject under the consideration of His Excellency from having observed how defective in describing the land most of the applicants have been, and from the fact that there is manifested in many of the Europeans a disposition to treat with the young Natives for land rather than with the elder chiefs; thus tending to destroy the chiefs' influence, as well as defraud them of their lands. Both should be treated with, but an especial deference paid to the elder chiefs. To prevent the chiefs from taking advantage of Europeans in selling them lands which do not belong to them, I would suggest that in such cases those chiefs should thereafter be considered and treated as ineligible for further disposing of lands.

I have; &c.,

GEORGE CLARKE, Chief Protector.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

Responsibility of Natives to British Laio.

To each Authority in New Zealand.

SIR,—

Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 15th September, 1845.

I am directed by the Governor to send you the following extracts of despatches, in order that you may be acquainted with the opinions of Her Majesty's Government with respect to the application of British law to the aboriginal inhabitants of New Zealand.

In a despatch dated 21st June, 1843, Lord Stanley remarks that he cannot perceive a necessity that the Natives of New Zealand should be liable to all the penalties and amenable to all the tribunals of. English law. His Lordship's words are: "I cannot perceive the necessity; there is no apparent reason why the aborigines should not be exempted from responsibility to English law, or to English Courts of justice, as far as respects their relations and their dealings with each other. The Native law might be maintained, and the Native customs tolerated, in all cases in which no person of European birth or origin had any concern or interest. An exception should indeed be made of such customs as are in conflict with the universal laws of morality, such, for example, as the customs of cannibalism and human sacrifice. But, with this exception, I know not why the native New Zealanders might not be permitted to live among themselves according to their national laws and usages, as is the case with the aboriginal races in other British colonies." In a despatch dated 10th February, 1844, Lord Stanley observes that he knows "of no theoretical or practical difficulty in the maintenance, under the same Sovereign, of various codes of law for the government of different races of men. In British India, in Ceylon, at the Cape of Good Hope, and in Canada the aboriginal and European inhabitants live together on these terms. Native laws and native customs, when not abhorrent from the universal and permanent laws of God, are respected by English Legislatures and by English Courts; and, although problems of much difficulty will occasionally arise out of this state of things, they have never been such as to refuse all solution, or as to drive the local authorities on the far more embarrassing difficulty of extending the law of England to persons wholly ignorant of our language, manners, and religion." And in a despatch dated 13th August, 1844, Lord Stanley states, in reference to the aboriginal natives of New Zealand, that "it may be necessary to temper the strict application of the penalties of British law with much discretion and forbearance. Under certain circumstances indeed I am afraid it may even be inevitable to consider, before interfering with Native customs which are in themselves objectionable, how far the means of coercion at your disposal may render it prudent for you to take steps for that purpose, which, in case no resistance was apprehended, you would not hesitate to adopt."

ANDREW SINCLAIR, Colonial Secretary.

Kaipara.—The Governor's Departure to England

MY GOOD FRIEND PARORE,—

Government House, Auckland, 10th November 1845.

I salute you. Your letter has been read by me which was dated the 14th October, and I have been waiting to answer it. It is correct respecting my going to England Many falsehoods have been uttered by some people respecting these Islands, and also respecting the people of these Islands. They have also uttered many falsehoods respecting myself, but before long I shall be able to tell the truth. Although Europeans may speak wickedly, the Queen and the Governor will be the friends of you all. It is well that I should go quickly to England, in order that I should make known the whole truth, for we cannot say much by letter.

To be succeeded by His Excellency Governor Grey.

I have been reflecting about the Governor who is coming hither. He is a good man. His work towards the Natives will be that of kindness, protection, and justice. His name is Grey. I shall tell him of your quiet, friendly disposition. I shall be your friend in England as I have been your friend here, and shall make known what is true on the other side of the sea. Perhaps I shall sail in January.

From your friend,

R. F., Governor.

To Parore, Kaipara.

Auckland.—General Affairs of the Colony.

MY LOED,—

Government House, Auckland, 10th December 1845.

Rights of Pre-emption.

In the first place, as regards the aborigines, I have directed that no further applications for the direct purchase of land from them by private individuals should be received by the Government until I have had time to inquire into the subject, and to determine what line of policy, in reference to the sale of lands, shall be adopted and referred for your Lordship's definite instructions upon this point. I am inclined to think that it would be most unwise on the part of the Government to waive the right of pre-emption secured to the Crown by the Treaty of Waitangi, as no more certain means of controlling the Natives could be found than refusing to purchase any lands from those who conducted themselves improperly, and in whose intentions of surrendering their lands no confidence could be placed. I find, moreover, that various complicated disputes have already arisen between the Natives and various persons who have purchased lands from them under the terms of my predecessor's Proclamation waiving the Crown's right of pre-emption. These persons all look to the Government, under whose sanction these purchases were made, to put them in possession of their lands, and a series of new land claims have arisen which are likely to prove more troublesome than those which have already, been so perplexing to the Government. I have therefore refused, at least for the present, to sanction any purchase made from the Natives by private individuals.

Arms and Ammunition.

I am also about to introduce into the Council upon Friday next a measure to enable me to prohibit, for the present, the importation of arms and warlike stores, and to regulate the sale of them in this colony. The immediate effect of this measure will be to render those who possess arms and gunpowder very unwilling to part with them; and I have no doubt that the tribes in rebellion will very soon be unable to make any use of their arms, from their positive inability to procure ammunition and percussion-caps.

Enrolment of Native JForce.

The next measure I have adopted is the enrolment of a Native force, composed of the inhabitants of New Zealand, and officered by British officers, upon the plan of the Cape and Ceylon Rifle Corps. I have given the necessary authority for the enrolment and disciplining of sixty men, who will receive rations and pay. So soon as I find how the experiment succeeds with this small body, I will, if I think it advisable to do so, continue gradually to increase the strength of this force.

Rations to Friendly Natives.

I have also directed that the followers of those Native chiefs who are engaged in active operations against the rebels in conjunction with the British troops in the field, should daily receive a ration, which they have not hitherto done. They will thus be brought more completely under the control of the British officer in command; they can be collected in larger and more efficient bodies; and the rebel chiefs, who can confer no such advantage on their followers, will find it much more difficult to keep their forces together, and their service, now that they are pressed for supplies, will not be nearly so popular as it has hitherto been.

Treaty of Waitahgi

I think it only necessary to add, in reference to the Natives, that I have in the most public manner, in the strongest terms, and upon repeated occasions, assured them that. I had been instructed by Her Majesty most honourably and scrupulously to fulfil the terms of the Treaty of Waitangi; that their welfare and happiness was an object of the most lively concern to the Queen, and that it would be my most earnest desire to carry out Her Majesty's most gracious wishes in their favour; and I am satisfied that these declarations upon my part have produced a favourable impression upon many of the most influential of the chiefs.

Bay of Islands.—'Enrolment of Native Corps.

MY LORD,—

Government House, Auckland, 11th December 1845.

In the despatch which your Lordship addressed to me upon the 13th June last (no. 1), I was informed that no discussion had hitherto taken place upon the possibility of embodying a local force in which the aborigines of New Zealand might serve jointly with others, but that your Lordship could not finally abandon the idea of the enrolment of such a force, without full proof that the adoption of it would be either impossible or unwise. I now beg to state that the knowledge I have up to this period obtained of the nature of this country and of its inhabitants leads me to believe that if it should be found possible to embody such a force as is alluded to by your Lordship a large expenditure of British money would be annually saved, and that a far smaller proportion of British troops would suffice to hold this country. I find that those persons best informed on these subjects, with whom I have conversed, all agree with these views, and the only doubt which exists as to the practicability of the scheme arises from the volatile and independent character of the New Zealanders.

Upon the whole, however, I have thought that the plan ought to be fairly tried, and that an attempt should be made to embody a force somewhat analogous to the Rifle Corps of Ceylon; and as I found that Colonel Despard, who is in command of the forces of this colony, took the same view of the subject that I did, and that he was disposed to render me every assistance in establishing such a corps, and in selecting an intelligent officer to command it, I authorized him, in a letter a copy of which I have the honour to enclose, to organize a Native corps, consisting of sixty men, who were to be employed under a British officer in the operations now carrying on. No more favourable opportunity than the present could have presented itself for trying this experiment, as there are now with the troops many active young Natives who have already for several months co-operated with the British forces.

Your Lordship will perceive that I have authorized the issue of a ration daily to the men who may serve in this corps, in addition to their pay, which is to be at the rate of 10s per month for each man; whilst any young chiefs who may serve as non-commissioned officers will receive such extra pay as Colonel Despard may think necessary and proper.

Your Lordship will observe that the men composing this corps will be required in the first instance to provide their own arms and clothing. The reason of my enforcing this regulation was that the New Zealanders are generally better armed than our, own troops, their usual weapon being a double-barrelled gun. Moreover, did I find them in arms, sixty additional guns would at once be thrown into the hands of the Natives; and, if any desertions took place, the men who deserted would carry off the arms with which we had supplied them.

I will not fail to keep your Lordship fully informed of the degree of success with which this experiment may be attended.

Bay of Islands.—Position of our Native Allies.

MY LORD,—

Government House, Auckland, 11th September, 1845.

In the various despatches I shall have occasion to, address to your Lordship upon the subject of the line of policy I may adopt for the settlement of the disturbances at present, existing in the northern part of this Island, I shall have frequently occasion to allude to the Native tribes which are here termed "Native allies," and your Lordship will find that my proceedings will be influenced by the desire of securing the interests of these tribes. I think it necessary, therefore, to state briefly to your Lordship who these Natives are, and what is the nature of our relations with them.

In January, 1845, before the flagstaff was, for the second time, cut down at Kororareka, and again previously to the attack in March on that settlement, the tribes who are under the control of the chiefs Walker, Macquarie, Moses, Noble, and Rewa interfered, by remonstrance and otherwise, to prevent Heke and his adherents from adopting the course they intended to pursue. Walker in particular, and other friendly chiefs, offered at the time to some of the authorities their services for the suppression of the then threatened disturbances, but they were not accepted.

Subsequently to the destruction of Kororareka in March, 1845, when Heke, emboldened by his successes, was threatening to commit further depredations in the North, and to march upon Auckland, which was in a very unprotected state, Walker, Macquarie, and other chiefs rose, and created a diversion in favour of the Europeans by falling on Heke's rear:—their first skirmish, which took place early in April, when they were completely successful, having driven him from the field. They had other skirmishes with him previously to the arrival of the troops at the scene of operations; and in every instance were successful, thus not only creating a diversion in favour of the Europeans, but greatly diminishing Heke's influence by injuring his reputation as a commander. They also, by their own influence, detached many of Heke's and Kawiti's followers from them. When our troops reached the scene of operations in the month of May last, these friendly chiefs joined them with their followers, and they have ever since remained in active co-operation with them. They had at one time nine hundred men in the fields and the average number of their followers under arms may be stated at from three to four hundred men; but they were unable to keep a large number in the field for want of supplies.

These friendly chiefs have never hitherto received pay, rations, arms, or ammunition for themselves or their followers, and have received no remuneration, except some presents of rice, flour, and sugar, and occasional supplies of ammunition. Since the commencement of hostilities they have lost about twenty-five men killed, and have had about seventy-five men wounded, some of them very severely. Their loyalty and active attachment to the British cause have drawn down upon them the hatred of the rebels and their friends and no doubt can be entertained that, if their interests are not carefully considered before hostilities are allowed to cease, they will be placed in a position of great danger. Your Lordship may, however rely upon my not neglecting fully to provide for the future safety of these chiefs, who have established such strong claims upon the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

Auckland.—Regulation of Arms Ordinance.

MY LORD,—

Government House, Auckland, 13th December 1845.

I have the honour to transmit, in order that Her Majesty's pleasure may be taken thereon, an ordinance, which I have enacted with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council of this colony (No. 1, Session VI.), entitled "An Ordinance to empower the Governor to regulate the Importation and Sale of Arms, Ammunition, and Gunpowder.

This ordinance confers, upon the Governor of New Zealand the power of regulating by Proclamation everything relating to importation and sale of warlike stores. I have yet only exercised this power to the extent of directing that no gunpowder or munitions of war should be imported at Auckland; but I am now, with the advice of my legal adviser, preparing a Proclamation which will, for the present, prevent both the importation and sale of gunpowder and other warlike stores, except under those regulations which the circumstances of the colony appear to me absolutely to require. I will not fail to forward to your Lordship a copy of this Proclamation as soon as it is issued, and your Lordship may rely that I will promulgate it and enforce its provisions in such a manner as to give the least offence, and to create the least possible apprehension in the minds of the Natives; whilst they shall 'at the same time clearly see that I am both able and willing, if any necessity should arise; to enforce their observance of it.

In proof of the necessity of the immediate adoption of some such measure as that which I have the honour to enclose, I beg to state that the Natives are at this moment carrying on a war amongst themselves within twenty miles of Auckland, regarding a dispute relating to a piece of land and that a report has just been sent to me that three have been killed upon one side and one upon the other, besides a large number who have been severely wounded. Your Lordship may, moreover, depend that, from the system which has been here adopted of allowing the Natives to sell their lands to Europeans upon the payment; to the Government of 1 d. per acre, their cupidity and love of immediate gain have been so strongly excited that numerous and bloody disputes will take place amongst themselves regarding their lands, until it is thoroughly understood that this system will not for the future be permitted by the Government. I beg further to state that our own forces have necessarily been disheartened by seeing that the rebels purchased through their friends openly in the shops of Auckland, and throughout the colony, whenever they pleased, the arms and ammunition which were immediately afterwards employed against our troops in the field. I understand that such large supplies of ammunition have been procured by the Natives within the last six months in exchange for kauri gum that a long period of time must elapse before the effect of the measures I am adopting will be perceptible; but I trust that their ultimate result will be a gradual disarming of a large portion of the Native race and the permanent establishment of peace and tranquillity throughout the country.

Some of the members of the late Government stated in their place in Council that the reason why some restrictions were not at an earlier period placed upon the sale of gunpowder and warlike stores, by which so large a loss of life as has already taken place and will probably yet take place amongst our own forces might have been prevented was the knowledge they possessed that such measures might have excited, evil-disposed Natives to acts of violence and outrage, which the Government had no means its disposal of controlling or preventing; and which might have been more disastrous than the events which have resulted from permitting the sale of gunpowder and warlike stores.

A Free Pardon to be offered to the Rebels.

MY LORD,—

Government House, Auckland, 26th January, 1846.

In reference to my Despatch. No.8, of the 22nd instant, in which I reported that I had, upon their complete submission, granted a free pardon to all persons concerned in the recent rebellion, and that I had informed the friendly Native chiefs that they must forego any claims they might have, upon the lands of the rebels arising out of promises made by my predecessor, I have now the honour to report exactly what those promises were, and the influence which they necessarily exercised upon the adjustment of the disturbances in the northern part of the Island, which it has been my duty to carry out.

Upon the very morning that Walker Nene arrived, at-Auckland with a message from the rebel chiefs, I had been discussing the details of the terms upon which I intended to pardon those concerned in the late rebellion when they had sent in their complete submission to the Government, which it was evident they must soon have done after the occurrences which had taken place; and I. proposed to give them at once security for their persons, and to leave the question as to the forfeiture of their lands to be decided in England, merely stating that, from Her Majesty's great regard for the welfare and happiness of Her Majesty's Native subjects in New Zealand, it was certain that nothing would be more pleasing to Her Majesty than ultimately to give them a full and unconditional pardon, if their future conduct was such as to entitle them to this indulgence. The objects in my contemplation when I was considering this line of policy were, firstly, to retain some hold over the future conduct of those who, had been concerned in so many outrages; and, secondly, to show the Native population generally throughout the Islands that, in the event of their engaging in active rebellion, they would forfeit their properties, and that I would certainly for the future severely punish those who were guilty of this crime; thirdly, I was anxious that the gracious act of a free and unconditional pardon should have proceeded directly from the Queen. The effect of it would then have been greater, and Her Majesty would have been placed in a position in reference to the chiefs generally which would have been extremely advantageous to Her Majesty's honour and the interests of Her Majesty's subjects.

It was, however, pointed out to me that I was precluded from concluding an arrangement of this nature by my predecessor's instructions to Colonel Despard of the 6th June; 1845, a copy of which is enclosed, under the terms of which an assurance had been given to the friendly chiefs that the lands forfeited by the rebels would be divided amongst them, and that no land would be taken by the Government.

Upon perusing these instructions, I felt that the Government was bound by them up to the date of my arrival in the colony; but, although I had never revoked these instructions, because I was not aware of their existence, I felt that my repeated declarations to the Natives, that I would never permit them to acquire land from each other by conquest, fairly exempted me from considering myself, after my arrival, bound in this respect by any promise of my predecessor. As the rebellion had, however, been one continuous act, it would practically have been impossible to decide what lands should be regarded as having been forfeited before the date of my arrival, and what lands were to be considered as having been forfeited subsequently to that date.

In reference to the degree in which I was to consider myself bound by the promise of my predecessor, I have no hesitation in saying that I considered that promise to have been so impolitic, so little advantageous to the persons it was intended to benefit, and as one so likely to be regarded by foreign nations, and in other times, as essentially unjust, that I was afraid that ultimately no distinction might be made between the officer who made the promise and the officer who had carried it into execution because he felt himself bound by it; and I therefore determined to be in no way connected with a line of policy which I felt to be inconsistent with the course which I thought Great Britain ought to pursue.

When, therefore, Walker Nene made me acquainted with the complete submission of the rebels, and the unconditional surrender of the whole of their lands, which they regarded as forfeited, I felt that, if I retained these lands at the disposal of the Crown until Her Majesty's pleasure upon the subject was known, the friendly Natives would distrust my motives in not fulfilling my predecessor's promise that the Crown would take none of these forfeited lands, but divide them amongst the loyal Natives, and they would probably think that, in not dividing the lands among them, I was consulting the interests of the Government and not theirs. I therefore resolved frankly to tell Walker Nene that I would at once give the rebels a free pardon, and that I would not fulfil my predecessor's promise of dividing the land forfeited by the rebels amongst the loyal Natives, because I believed that my doing so would be injurious to the reputation and interests of himself and the, other friendly chiefs; for that the moment I adopted such a course every one would cease to believe that the loyal Natives had been contending for the re-establishment of peace and good order, and would think that their real object had been to obtain possession of the lands of others. I, moreover, pointed out to him that if I did bestow these lands upon the friendly chiefs the war must become one of utter extermination, because there could be no, doubt that, as soon as the British force was withdrawn, the original possessors of these lands would attempt to recover them by force of arms, and that it would, moreover, be impossible so to divide it as not to give rise to quarrels and feuds amongst the loyal chiefs themselves. I added that, in order that it might be clearly seen that I did not refuse to give the lands to the loyal Natives from a desire to obtain them for the Crown, I would give a free and unconditional pardon to the rebels, leaving it to Her Majesty to determine in what manner the services of the loyal Natives should be rewarded; and I asked him to explain these my intentions and my views to the other chiefs. He at once assented to this reasoning, and to the policy of the course I intended to pursue, merely remarking, after some moments of thought, "You have saved us all."

I feel, therefore, convinced that the friendly chiefs will be fully satisfied with these arrangements; and your Lordship will see that in granting a free pardon to the rebels I was influenced by many motives, although I believe that, viewing the matter simply as an act of generous open policy, it is in every way entitled to your Lordship's sanction and support, and will tend to secure to Her Majesty the affection and attachment of her Native subjects in these Islands.

Auckland:—Military Force requisite to be maintained.

MY LORD,—

Government House, Auckland, 14th May 1846.

Upon the 12th instant I addressed a despatch to your Lordship (No. 46) in which I stated I would take an early opportunity of reporting upon the strength of the military force which I considered at present requisite for the maintenance of British supremacy in these Islands. I have now the honour to transmit copies of the correspondence which has passed between the Lieutenant-General Commanding the Forces in New South Wales and myself upon this subject. Your Lordship will find, from this correspondence, that I consider that a force of 2,500 troops of the line should for the present be stationed in New Zealand.

I find that my predecessor, in his Despatch No. 27,. of the 9th of April, 1845, stated it as his opinion that two regiments were required for the maintenance of these Islands, which would amount to a force, of about 2,000 men; but, after having now visited many portions of the Islands, I should recommend that the force here should be increased to 2,500 men. I make this recommendation under the belief that in four or five years time this force might be reduced to a single regiment, and that it would be advantageous to continue as rapidly as possible the formation of a local police force, composed in a great measure of Natives; which force I am now organizing with apparent success; The expenses of this force could, at the end of a few years, be defrayed from the revenues of the colony, and it would be one in every way suited to the service of this country. Indeed, I think it would in New Zealand be found more advantageous than any European force.

I beg to state to your Lordship that, however limited in number may be the force which Her. Majesty's Government may be able to place at my disposal, I will; do my utmost to conduct the service in such a way as to merit Her Majesty's approbation; but my fear is that, if a sufficient force is not at once stationed in the country, sanguinary and expensive, yet petty, wars may take place, which will entail on Great Britain a large and useless expenditure of blood and money, and retard the advancement of this country almost indefinitely; whilst on the other hand, should a sufficient force be at once sent here, I feel satisfied that no further disturbance of any consequence will take place, and that in a few years the country will be able to defray the expense of its own establishments.

Bay of Islands.—Respecting Compensation for War Losses.

SIR,—

Downing Street, 10th June 1846.

I have received your predecessor's despatch, marked "Separate," of the 30th October last, accompanied by a memorial from above forty persons, formerly resident at Russell, in New. Zealand, soliciting compensation for the losses sustained by them in consequence of the destruction of that town by the Natives in March of last year.

This claim raises, or involves, a general principle of great practical extent, and of very wide and general application. It is the principle that British subjects who have settled themselves in the immediate vicinity of uncivilized tribes of men, and who may subsequently become the victims of their hostility, are entitled to throw on the British Treasury the losses consequent on any such attacks, if they can show either that there was not sufficient military force at hand for their protection, or that a sufficiently vigorous and skilful use was not made of that force, or that the British Government or its officers were guilty of any such error or oversight in their transactions with the tribes in question as may possibly have provoked or increased their hostility to the settlers. It is alleged in the memorial that such has been the invariable rule or practice in all such cases.

To this general assertion it is impossible to subscribe. The memorialists have quoted no solitary instance of the kind they mention, and I am not aware of the existence of any. Neither the ancient British settlers in North America, nor those who in recent times have settled in Western or in South Africa, ever received from the Government compensation for the losses they incurred by the devastation and plunder of their settlements by the savages in their immediate vicinity. They emigrated not in the service of their country, but with a view to advantages, real or imaginary, and included, or ought to have included, the danger of barbarous invasion as one of the most serious risks of that speculation.

In the present case the claimants cannot even allege that their settlement in New Zealand was encouraged or approved, or even known, by their own Government. They resorted thither before the Treaty of Waitangi, and before the Government was reluctantly compelled by the unauthorized emigration of British subjects to that country to negotiate for a sovereignty which they had deprecated as an undesirable, if not injurious, acquisition. When at length that sovereignty was assumed, the Government gave the utmost possible publicity to the fact that it was impossible to withdraw from the British Army a garrison adequate to the protection and defence of the settlers.

If errors, either civil or military, were subsequently committed in the administration of the Government of the colony, I cannot admit that to those errors alone, or chiefly, are to be attributed the attacks of Heke and his followers on the Town of Russell; and, even if I could make that admission, I could not assent to the inference that the British Treasury are bound to pay both for the expense of the warfare and for the losses of the settlers. The Government and their local officers, civil and military, were all placed in a situation in which it is scarcely probable that any degree of foresight, skill, or courage could have averted all risk of such evils. They were drawn into that situation by the precipitancy of others, not by any ill policy of their own. Besides, it is a new and startling doctrine that the Queen's subjects are individually entitled to compensation for any losses in which the honest errors, political or military, of the Queen's Government may involve them.

No Compensation to be awarded.

For these reasons I must decline to advise Her Majesty to award any compensation to the memorialists, however deeply Her Majesty has been concerned to receive this intelligence of their misfortunes. I abstain from tendering that advice the more carefully because the great stress laid in this memorial on supposed precedents of similar grants reminds me of the hazard and possible inconvenience of now establishing a precedent of that kind, to which reference might under any corresponding circumstances be made hereafter.

No. 36. EXTRACT from Governor GREY'S ADDRESS [New Zealand Gazette] to the LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

As Introduction of British Law amongst the Aborigines.

THE most important measures relating to the Natives which it is my intention to submit to you have for their object the introduction into this country of such modifications of the British law as appear adapted to the present state of the Native population, and at the same time calculated to accustom them by degrees to take an active part in the administration of the laws of their country: a great step in advance, which, if it can be made, appears to me more likely, than any other I am acquainted with to attach them, by the ties of interest and a sense of benefits received, to those institutions which we have introduced amongst them. Already some progress has been recently made in the attainment of this object, as the Natives when employed in the police force, and paid, fed and treated in all respects in the same manner as Europeans, have not only proved active and valuable constables, but have so completely emancipated themselves from their former prejudices as not to hesitate to assist in the apprehension of offenders of their own race, whatever might be their rank or influence.

I shall also recommend to your consideration measures which will secure to the Natives the expenditure for their advantage of a fair share of the proportionate amount which they contribute to the revenue; either for the support of hospitals, the education of orphan children, or for purposes of a similar character. And, above all, I trust that you may be able to devise some means which will prevent European fathers from abandoning, and leaving in a state of destitution and misery, families of children whom they may have had by mothers of the-Native race.

The latest accounts which have reached me from the northern and southern portions of this Island, in which disturbances have at various times prevailed, are of the most satisfactory character but I must confess that I, in my own mind, attach now but comparatively little importance to these disturbances. What can be effected in this country by the gallantry of the officers and men composing Her Majesty's forces has now been fully evinced upon many occasions; it has also been ascertained that the settlers are willing and able (far beyond what I had expected) to protect their homes and families and to drive off an invading foe; and, above all, we have in every instance found that the great mass of the Native population have not only invariably declared themselves upon the side of the Government, but have also by their services in the field given practical proof of the sincerity of their declarations, and of their warm attachment to the British race. Undoubtedly they have always shown an anxiety that the local Government should evince, by the strength of the force at its disposal, that it had the means of securing the permanent tranquillity of the country and of assuring the ultimate safety of those tribes who might come forward upon the side of good order; but it was to be expected that tribes just emerging from a state of barbarism, subjected to various prejudices and dreading the animosity of their own excited countrymen, would hesitate to commit themselves against those chiefs whose names have been for years a terror to the country, unless they saw that the Government was determined to support them, and that it had at its disposal a force which would enable it to give effect to those determinations.

Auckland.—Respecting Changes in the Constitution.

SIR,—

Government House, Auckland, 7th October 1846.

I had the honour this morning of receiving your despatch, marked "Separate," of the 26th May last, and, as a vessel sails in a few hours direct for England, I am unwilling to lose this opportunity of making some few remarks upon the changes Her Majesty's Government propose to introduce into the Constitution of this colony; although I write under the disadvantage of being compelled to make these remarks in a very hurried manner, and with no certainty whether or not they may reach England in sufficient time to be of any use to Her Majesty's Government.

I suppose, in the first place, that Her Majesty's Government intend to divide New Zealand into two distinct colonies: whether they are both to be placed under one Governor-in-Chief, in the manner proposed in my despatch of the 27th January last, marked "Separate," or whether two totally distinct colonies are to be formed, is not material to my present purpose. I suppose also that it is the wish of Her Majesty's Government that representative institutions should be introduced into each of these colonies with the least possible delay, but that they should be so introduced as to insure, in as far as possible, harmony between the executive and legislative bodies, and thus to render these institutions available from the first moment of their erection, instead of a period of inutility and bitterness elapsing, during which disputed points would be contested between the Executive Government and the legislative body, and all the really essential business of the colony would be disregarded. In this view I beg to state that I would recommend that, in the first instance, the Officer Administering the Government in each colony should be permitted to appoint a Legislative Council composed, as at present, of official members and of nominees of the Crown.

I am not at present aware of any circumstance which need then prevent the immediate introduction of the representative institutions into that colony which would comprise the settlements in Cook Straits and in the Middle Island. All questions of a vexatious nature between the Government and the settlers in that part of the colony have now been finally set at rest; and, with a considerable acquaintance with British settlements, I can have no hesitation in recording it as my opinion that there never was, a body of settlers to whom the power of local self-government could be more wisely and judiciously intrusted than the inhabitants of the settlements to which I am alluding.

But there are a number of questions connected with the introduction of such institutions which I confess I think can only be properly determined by inquiry upon the spot, such as the limits of the various electoral districts, the proportion of members from town and country districts, the precise qualification of electors, the places for polling, and questions of a like nature. These questions I think the Officer Administering the Government in that colony should be required to determine, with the assistance of a Legislative Council constituted in the usual manner. If the number of members in that Council was extended to ten, five official and five unofficial, and the members were judiciously selected, as I have no doubt they would be, the Officer Administering the Government would have the benefit of the best possible advice; and these questions of a really practical nature would be discussed upon the spot, and under such circumstances as would, I have no doubt, secure the efficient and satisfactory working of the institutions which might be introduced, and which; when thus settled, would provide a legislative body which would forthwith replace that which had previously existed.

But, with respect to the northern of the two colonies, I beg to state that, until the questions connected with the land-claims which have arisen from the grants of land extended in opposition to the opinions of the Commissioners who heard them have been finally and conclusively set at rest, I do not think that any attempt should be made to introduce representative institutions into it. I feel quite satisfied that, if such an attempt were made before these questions were disposed of efforts would be made to return representatives, not to transact the real business of the country, but to agitate these claims; and, from the number of Government servants who are directly or indirectly connected with them, from the influence of some of the Missionaries who claim such large tracts of land, and from other circumstances, I fear that a period of confusion, probably of renewed rebellion, expensive both in blood and money, must under such circumstances inevitably take place.

I would therefore recommend that, in the northern colony of the two, some period of time should yet elapse before any attempt should be made to introduce representative institutions. Probably a period of two years may suffice to settle the question to which I have alluded, and to prepare the colony for the contemplated change; but this would soon be ascertained from the reports of the Officer Administering the Government.

I should perhaps add that it is not in the least my wish to reflect upon the inhabitants of the northern portion of New Zealand, or to draw any invidious comparison between themselves and the people of the southern settlements: on the contrary, there are in the northern part of the Island many gentlemen for whom I entertain the highest respect and esteem; and I would yield to no one in my desire to promote, in as far as practicable, the prosperity and happiness of the colonists in this part of New Zealand. But, the troublesome questions to which I have alluded having arisen, and there being every probability, from the number, and character of the Native population, that disturbances may arise from them, I believe that in making these representations to you, and in basing, such recommendations upon them, I am taking the most certain means of securing the true interests of the inhabitants of this part of the Northern Island, and at the same time performing a paramount duty to Her Majesty's Government.

No. 38. Copy of a DESPATCH from the Right Hon. Earl GREY to Lieutenant-Governor GREY.

Auckland.—Military Force requisite.

Downing-street, 24th; November 1846.

I have had the honour of receiving your despatches of the dates and numbers noted in the margin, and in which, after giving an account of the events which have recently taken place in New Zealand, you state that a military force considerably larger than that which is now stationed there will in your opinion for some years to come be required to guard against the recurrence of petty but expensive wars with the Native tribes, and that you consider not less than 2,500 men to be necessary for this purpose.

I have too much reliance upon your judgment to doubt that you have good grounds for your demand for this large increase of force, and therefore, though the no less urgent demands from various other quarters for the services of Her Majesty's troop render it a matter of some difficulty, measures will immediately be adopted for supplying, with no more delay than is inevitable, the additional troops you have called for. It will not, however, be in the power of Her Majesty's Government to supply the whole of this reinforcement from the regular army. A part of it will consist of a force of a different description to be formed for the purpose, as to which in another despatch of this date you will find all necessary information. This force will be designated as the Royal New Zealand Fencibles, will consist of about 500 men, and will be sent direct from this country to Auckland. The additional regular troops to be employed in New Zealand will be 900 men from the regiments now serving in New South Wales. Orders will be sent at the same time with this, despatch to the Governor and to the Lieutenant-General Commanding in that colony to forward to Wellington with the least practicable delay detachments of the above strength, for whose reception you will therefore lose no time in making the best preparations in your power by taking measures to provide them upon their arrival with the necessary supplies, and with such quarters as you can obtain at the different places at which you may consider it most advisable that they should be stationed. By the above arrangement, as detailed in the margin (now in New Zealand, according to the last returns. 1,100; from New South Wales 900; New Zealand Fencibles, 500: total, 2,500), the amount of force you have named as being required will for the present be provided; but you will not fail to recollect that it is impossible permanently to keep so many as 2,000 men of Her Majesty's regular army in New Zealand without very great inconvenience. I have therefore to instruct you to direct your most serious attention to the means which should be adopted to enable you as soon as possible to dispense with a portion of this force. With that view the formation of a well-organized Militia, and of a force composed of Natives in the service of Her Majesty would appear to be the measures most likely to be successfully adopted.

I have &c;

Lieutenant- Governor Grey, &c. Grey

SIR—

Downing Street, 1st March 1847.

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch No. 101, of the 6th October last, in which, with reference to a suggestion which has been submitted to you by the Commanding Royal Engineer in New Zealand, that convict mechanics should be sent to that colony with the view of being employed on military works and buildings, you take occasion to recommend that a company of Sappers and Miners should be detached from this country for the performance of that service.

Auckland.—Pensioners to be employed as Mechanics.

I am aware of the inconvenience which must be felt from the want of mechanics; and in fact arrangements had been made, previously to the receipt of your communication on the subject, which will in some measure supply that difficulty, care having been taken that, in selecting the military pensioners who are enrolled for service in New Zealand, a selection should be made of about fifty men who have worked as carpenters, sawyers, bricklayers, masons, blacksmiths, painters, glaziers and miners; and I have instructed the Master-General of the Ordnance to send out a sergeant and twelve Sappers and Miners, who from their superior qualifications will be able to superintend the labours of the persons in question.

Introduction of Convicts.

The employment of convicts in New Zealand, under the effect of a general measure of transportation, would be entirely out of the question; but it may be deserving of consideration whether a limited number of men of that class, whose good conduct under confinement may render them fit objects of the Royal clemency, might not be sent to New Zealand with conditional pardons, in which, in addition to the ordinary conditions of such instruments, there should be one introduced requiring the persons to whom they should be assigned to work for the Government for a period of two years.

The Regular Troops shortly to be withdrawn.

I have to add that I do not contemplate the maintenance of any considerable force of regular troops in New Zealand for more than a very short time, as when emigration from this country shall be resumed, as I trust it soon will be, the increase of the European population will enable you to organize a Militia sufficient for all purposes of defence. I have, therefore, to instruct you to abstain from incurring any expense in the erection of permanent barracks which can possibly be avoided.

I have &c; GREY

Governor Grey, &c.

No. 40. EXTRACTS from a DESPATCH from Governor GREY to Earl GREY.

Auckland.—Respecting the New Constitution proposed to be introduced. Government House, Auckland, 3rd May, 1847.

Since I had the honour of receiving your Lordship's private letter of the 27th November last, transmitting the drafts of the papers relative to the introduction of a new Constitution into this colony which had been printed for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, I have felt much concern lest any want of care upon my part in omitting to forward sufficiently detailed information of the circumstances of this portion of the colony should have left Her Majesty's Government in ignorance of various points which, I fear, were not under their consideration at the time they determined to introduce immediately into the Province of New Ulster a Constitution of the nature of that which is proposed. Should I have fallen into this error, the only excuse I can have to offer is that, from the tenor of previous despatches from your Lordship's department, I did not think that any change would for some years be introduced into the form of government of this portion of New Zealand and I did not imagine that, in the first instance, the form of government now proposed would have been introduced into any part of this colony.

My reasons for entertaining the apprehensions above stated are that Her Majesty's Government will, I fear, by introducing the proposed Constitution into New Ulster, not do that which from your Lordship's despatch forwarding the charter, I understand, them to intend to do, but something different from it, and for which I believe (referring to the large number and present state of the Native population in this colony) no precedent has been established, either by Great Britain or any other country: that is, by the introduction of the proposed Constitution into the Province of New Ulster Her Majesty will not confer, as is intended, upon her subjects the inestimable advantages of self-government, but she will give to a small fraction of her subjects of one race the power of governing the large majority of her subjects of a differing race. She will not give to her subjects the valuable privilege of appropriating as they may think proper the funds raised from themselves by taxation, but she will give to a small majority of one race the power of appropriating as they think proper a large revenue raised by taxation from the greater majority of her subjects of another race. And these further difficulties attend this question: that the race which is in the majority is much the more powerful of the two; the people belonging to it are well armed, proud, and independent; and there is no reason that I am acquainted with to think that they would be satisfied with and submit to the rule of the minority, while there are many reasons to believe that they will resist it to the utmost. And then it must further be remembered that the minority will not have to pay the expenses of the naval and military forces which will be required to compel the stronger and more numerous race to submit to their rule, but that, on the contrary, these expenses must be paid by Great Britain.

Before stating the reasons upon which these views are founded, I think it proper to mention that Her Majesty's Native subjects in this country will certainly be exceedingly indignant at finding that they are placed in a position of inferiority to the European population. They will undoubtedly argue, as they now frequently do, that they not only cheerfully ceded the sovereignty of their country to the Queen, but that when attempts had been made by some discontented tribes to throw off the sovereignty of Great Britain, and that at a period when, from the smallness of the British force in the country, they had apparently some hopes of success, the principal chiefs came forward, and freely gave the services of themselves and their people and shed their blood in assisting to maintain for Her Majesty that sovereignty which they had yielded to her; whilst, on the contrary, they would justly regard the European population of this portion of the colony as having been attracted here solely by motives of personal benefit, such as a desire of carrying on trade with the numerous Native population, or of benefiting by the expenditure of the parliamentary grant in aid of the civil Government, or by the naval and military expenditure.

In illustrating the reasons which have induced me to form the opinions I have stated, I will take the population returns, published by my predecessor, for the year 1845, No great change has taken place in either the European or Native population since that period: in fact, the distresses of the country induced many European settlers to quit the colony, and no corresponding immigration has taken place. With the exception therefore of the troops and naval force which have been brought into the country, the European population does not much exceed in amount that which it was in 1845, although some changes have taken place in the relative population of the British settlements from persons having repaired from one settlement to another. And as Auckland has been, as the seat of Government, the chief point of attraction, the population of that place, exclusive of the military, may perhaps be stated at nearly 4,000 souls. In 1845 the European population of the territory which would form the proposed Province of New Ulster was about 4,500 souls: the details are stated in the margin (Auckland, 2,754; New Plymouth, 1,115; Bay of Islands, 534; Hokianga, 179: total, 4,582). But in point of fact, from circumstances connected with the position of the other settlements, the only persons who would have any real share in the proposed Constitution would be the settlers in the neighbourhood of Auckland.

The returns of Native population published at the same time would give, for the probable Native population inhabiting the proposed Colony of New Ulster, about 100,000 souls, the whole of whom would be excluded from all share whatever in the representation of the country by the proposed proviso in the instructions, "that none should be capable of exercising the elective franchise who cannot read and write the English language."

I do not know one Native who can read and write the English language.

At the same time, under the present system of taxation, the large Native population (which, even if it has been over-estimated by Mr. Clarke at 100,000, and is taken at only 60,000, although I believe this latter supposition is below the true amount, still forms the vast majority of the population) contributes largely to the revenue, and each year, as they continue to advance in civilization, will contribute still more largely to it, so that the proportion paid by the European will form but a small part of the whole revenue.

Then it must be borne in mind that the greater majority of the Native population can read and write their own language fluently; that they are a people quite equal in natural sense and ability to the mass of the European population; that they are jealous and suspicious; that they now own many vessels, horses, and cattle, and are altogether possessed of a great amount of wealth and property in the country, of the value of which they are fully aware; that there is no nation in the world more sensitive upon the subject of money matters, or the disposal of their property, and no people that I am acquainted with less likely to sit down quietly under what they may regard as injustice. A great change has also recently taken place in their position: the mutual jealousies and animosities of the tribes have greatly disappeared, and a feeling of class or race is rapidly springing up, and has been greatly fomented by the efforts which have been made by designing Europeans, to obtain their lands from them for a merely nominal consideration. This feeling of nationality has been extended by many other causes. Some of their young chiefs of the highest birth, and of great personal ambition, have now received good educations; they have acquired the habit of letter-writing, which is a favourite custom with them, and they are in a constant state of movement; so that their intercourse, and power of forming extensive conspiracies, and of executing combined and simultaneous movements upon different points, is daily increasing.

Out of 67 Natives who have been employed by the Ordnance Department, 66 can write their own language, and the whole of them can read it.

It is, I think, doubtful, therefore, if it would be prudent to hazard the attempt to force upon a nation so circumstanced a form of government which would at the same time irritate their feelings and, I think, insult their pride, and which there can be no doubt would separate them from the Europeans, placing them in an inferior position as a race, and thus at once create this feeling of nationality, the consequence of which would, I fear, be so hurtful

I beg further to point out that, although I entirely concur in the advisability of compelling the Natives as soon as possible to learn to read and write the English language, and will omit no means within my power of promoting these benevolent intentions of your Lordship, yet I think that, with a view of promoting this object, a necessary preliminary to giving such extensive powers over the funds raised by the taxation of a large Native population into the hands of the representatives of so small a British population, would be to require by law that a certain sum should annually be devoted to the maintenance of schools for the instruction of the Native population in the English language, and that some extensive system of national education should be introduced before the new Constitution is brought into operation, the permanency of which system should be secured by such a provision as I have above mentioned.

The foregoing arguments have been applied solely to the great Native population throughout the country, and to the general revenue raised from duties of Customs; but they apply equally, perhaps, even with more force, to the Natives who would reside within the limits of boroughs, and who would be subject to direct taxation in the form of assessments, &c., which I fear might often be collected in a manner highly offensive to them, and who would speedily become discontented and exasperated if they had no voice upon the subject. The same arguments apply also equally to the naturalized Germans, who are likely to become a very numerous and important portion of the population, and who are at present contented and good citizens, whom I should be very sorry to see excluded from any privileges accorded to the rest of Her Majesty's subjects; whilst the inhabitants of the French colony at Akaroa, whom Her Majesty's Government have directed to be naturalized, will in like manner be wholly excluded from any share in the management of their own affairs, and will be placed in a position of inferiority in reference to the rest of Her Majesty's subjects.

I think it right to mention to your Lordship that even in the southern portion of this Island I did not contemplate immediately so extensive a change in the Constitution of the colony. I thought that a Council in which the Governor presided, and which was composed of official and unofficial members, the unofficial members being elected by the inhabitants of the colony, would, viewing the peculiar circumstances of the Colony of New Zealand, particularly in reference to the Native population, have been the form of government which for the present was best suited to the wants of the people, whilst I do not think it would have been in any respect repugnant to their feelings. This form of government would also, as soon as the land questions have been adjusted, suit the circumstances of Auckland, particularly if the Government were empowered from time to time to name certain Natives who should have the privilege of voting at the elections for the return of representatives.

Whatever form of government it may, however, be determined ultimately to bestow upon the Northern colony of New Zealand, I beg to suggest that it would be desirable in the first place that it should not be such as to render it doubtful whether the large Native population will submit to it; and, secondly, that, so long as the Governor has so formidable and numerous a race to control, it is necessary not only that he should have the power by his negative of preventing any measures being passed which might result in rebellion, but that he also requires to be in possession of the active power of carrying such measures as are essential for the welfare and pacification of the Native race. For your Lordship will see that under the proposed Constitution any refusal of the Governor to comply with, perhaps, very impolitic demands of the Lower Chamber may involve a stoppage of the machine of government, which will entail much evil not only upon those who return the representatives, but upon the large body of Natives who will be wholly unrepresented.

At present the Natives are quite satisfied with the form of government now existing; and as the chiefs have always ready access to the Governor, and their representations are carefully heard and considered, they have practically a voice in the government, and of this they are well aware; but under the proposed Constitution they would lose their power, and the Governor would lose his influence over them: in fact, the position of the two races would become wholly altered, and the Governor would, I fear, lose that power which I do not see how he can well dispense with in a country circumstanced as this is. The Natives are at present certainly not fitted to take a share in a representative form of government, but each year they will become more fitted to do so, and each year the numerical difference between the two races will become less striking, so that a great advantage would be gained by delaying even for a few years the introduction of the proposed Constitution into the northern parts of New Zealand.

The concluding passage of the despatch which your Lordship proposes to address to me leaves to my own discretion the power of fixing the time at which I should promulgate the new charter, with, however, so distinct an intimation of Her Majesty's pleasure that no unnecessary delay should take place in my doing so that I think it better to promulgate it with as little delay as possible after its arrival in this country; but that portion of the instructions which relates to the introduction of representative institutions into the country cannot, under any circumstances, be carried into effect for nearly twelve months from this date, upon account of the numerous preparatory steps which, in the terms of the instructions, must first be taken. And, as I am apprehensive that any attempt to introduce such a form of government as that proposed into this portion of the colony would shortly give rise to renewed rebellion, I shall, under all circumstances, deem it my duty to refrain from giving effect in the northern portion of New Zealand to that portion of the proposed instructions until I receive your Lordship's reply to this despatch. In the meantime, however, all the other portions of my instructions shall be carried out as rapidly as possible, and no care nor exertions upon my part shall be wanting to render them as beneficial to the inhabitants of this country as your Lordship desires them to be; whilst the delay in the introduction of representative institutions for a few months will at all events so strengthen the position of the British in this country that, if Her Majesty's Government should, with the information contained in this despatch before them, still deem the introduction of the new Constitution into the Province of New Ulster indispensable, less probability will exist of extensive injury to British interests resulting from any discontent upon the part of the Natives. All my own experience in this country leads me, however, earnestly to request your Lordship to advise Her Majesty for the present to revoke that portion of the charter which contemplates the introduction of the proposed form of representative institutions into the Province of New Ulster.

Auckland.—New Zealand proposed to be divided into Two. Colonies. Government House, Auckland, 13th May, 1847.

I think that perhaps, until this country is a little more settled down, your Lordship's views with regard to the government of it might be fully met if it were, as proposed, divided into two colonies with such a general executive Government, and executive Government for each colony, as is now provided for in the recent charter and instructions; whilst for the present the legislative body of each colony should consist of one Chamber, composed of the Governor and official and unofficial members, the latter of whom might in the southern colony be at once elected by the people. The General Assembly might then in like manner consist of one Chamber composed of all the members of the Legislative Council of each colony, and its meetings, mode of proceeding, &c., might all be conducted in the manner which is proposed. If your Lordship should, under the disturbed circumstances of the colony, think proper to send out modified instructions to this or some similar purport, they would yet reach me in sufficient time.

I feel very great diffidence in making such suggestions to your Lordship; but at the present moment the great mass of the Native population is on our side, as the fact of their seizing the murderers at Whanganui and giving them up to justice fully shows, and I think, if nothing occurs now to alarm the Natives, that after two or three more years of peace and tranquillity the colony may be regarded as quite safe, and the lives and properties of the settlers would be in a state of complete security; whilst upon the other hand I cannot but view with the greatest alarm and anxiety the possibility of the frequent and extended recurrence of such scenes as that which recently took place at Whanganui.

Until your Lordship's further instructions reach me, I will proceed, as rapidly as is practicable, with the adjustment of all those difficulties which have arisen from the penny-an-acre Proclamation, and from the extended grants of land. I will also introduce, in the most conciliatory manner, all those portions of the new form of government which confer real and lasting advantages upon this country of the most undoubted and obvious kind, such as the division of the colony, &c.; so that, even in the event of your Lordship determining upon the immediate and complete introduction of the whole of the proposed new form of Constitution, every preparation in my power shall be made for such a measure, and it is certain that, after so many difficulties have been removed, the country will be in a much better state for such an experiment than it is at present.

Auckland.—Respecting Illicit Sale of Arms to the Natives. Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 19th May, 1847.

The Lieutenant-Governor directs it to be notified that the Government have recently obtained the most convincing proofs that some of the inhabitants of the Town of Auckland are still in the constant habit of selling to the Natives arms, gunpowder, and other warlike stores, thereby affording the uncivilized tribes of this country the means of carrying on wars amongst themselves, as also of destroying Her Majesty's subjects in this territory, and of overwhelming the isolated and unprotected British settlements which exist in various portions of these Islands. The Lieutenant Governor now earnestly entreats the whole of the respectable inhabitants of Auckland and its vicinity to use every exertion in their power to discountenance and put an end to such, unprincipled and disgraceful proceedings, which must entail the most frightful and distressing calamities upon their fellowcountrymen, and will certainly be viewed with horror and indignation by the whole civilized world.

By His Excellency's command.

Secretary.

Auckland.—Transmitting Sale of Spirits Ordinance.
MY LORD,—
Government House, Auckland, 1st October, 1847.

I have the honour to transmit, in order that Her Majesty's pleasure may be taken thereon, an ordinance which I have enacted with the advice and consent of my Legislative Council, intituled An Ordinance to prohibit the Sale of Spirits and to regulate the Sale of other Intoxicating Liquors to Persons of the Native Race."

The objects of this ordinance will, I think, be admitted to be sufficiently laudable and proper; and as the opinions of the most influential of the Native race are with me upon this subject, as well as of all those of the European population who are likely to have most influence over the Natives, I entertain little doubt of being able very generally to give effect to its provisions with the cheerful consent and concurrence of the Native population. Should Her Majesty, under such circumstances, be pleased, by sanctioning this ordinance, to permit the experiment to be tried, your Lordship may rely upon my carrying it out in such a way as not to give any just cause of complaint or discontent to the Natives.

I should remark that, for the safety of the European population, it is required that such a law should be in force within the limits of towns, for the use of ardent spirits continues to increase amongst the Native race, and on several occasions chiefs of some importance, and who could bring a large number of armed followers into the field, have been drunk in the streets. By their customs also the circumstance of their apprehension for drunkenness would be regarded as an insult which would require to be revenged, and at any moment most serious disturbances might be created from such a cause. Our own safety therefore requires that we should, in as far as possible, prevent the occurrence of such a casualty

Auckland.—The Constitution to be partially suspended.

Downing Street, 20th November, 1847.

I have had the honour of receiving your two confidential despatches of the 3rd and 13th May. The reasons which you have urged in support of the conclusion to which you had come, that the Colony of New Zealand is not yet ripe for the enjoyment of representative government, are such as at once to command the assent of Her Majesty's servants; and, deeply as we lament the necessity of doing so, we will not fail to adopt the steps which are required for suspending for a time the operations of so much of the Letters Patent and Instructions transmitted to you in my despatch of the 23rd December last as relates to the establishment of representative bodies having the power of general legislation. With this view, it will, however, be indispensable that the aid of Parliament should be invoked, nor is it in my power, without further time or deliberation, to inform you what will be the precise arrangements which Parliament will be invited to sanction; but-I think it would be advisable to take the earliest opportunity of acquainting you that we are prepared to act upon your advice, by suspending the operation of the Constitution granted to New Zealand to the extent I have mentioned, and that it will therefore be inexpedient that, until you can receive further instructions, you should take any steps beyond those you have already adopted to carry into effect those previously transmitted to you on this subject.

No. 45. Extract from a Despatch from Governor Grey to Earl Grey.

On the Instructions received to maintain Good Faith with the Natives.

Government House, Auckland, 15th May, 1848.

In reference to the discussion which took place in Parliament in the month of December last upon the subject of the instructions regarding the lands of the Natives of this country, which your Lordship had issued to me in your despatch of the 23rd December, 1846, I have the honour to state that it did not, at the time I received those instructions, appear necessary to me to address any observations to your Lordship upon the subject, because I distinctly understood those expressions of your Lordship which have been objected to as not being intended by you to be applicable, to the present state of New Zealand.

In the same manner, when some of the inhabitants of this colony petitioned Her Majesty, representing that your Lordship's instructions were opposed to the principles of equity and justice, and positively impracticable, and fraught with the most imminent danger to the lives and property of the colonists, and when the same petitioners complained to Her Majesty of the injurious effect of the silence I maintained as to whether I would or would not carry these instructions out, I felt it my duty to refrain from admitting that the tenor of your Lordship's instructions was such as they maintained; and I would not state that the local Government would not act in any manner opposed to the principles of equity and justice, because such a statement on my part would have been an admission that I had received instructions of such a nature from your-Lordship. Whereas, as I stated to various of the petitioners, your Lordship had expressly instructed me most scrupulously to fulfil whatever engagements had been contracted with the Natives, and had at the same time declared it as your opinion that no apparent advantage should be suffered to weigh against the evil of acting in a manner either really or even apparently inconsistent with good faith.

The simple question in reference to these instructions appeared to me to be, Did I clearly understand your Lordship's intentions, and had you spoken in language which, made clear to me your views upon the very difficult subject of the lands claimed by the Natives of this country? I felt that your Lordship had done this, and a positive proof is afforded that I did understand your Lordship, because; after the lapse of eighteen months from the issue of those instructions no one can point to a single act opposed to the principles of equity or justice which has been done in fulfilment of them, or under the pretext of being in any way sanctioned by them. And at the present moment, not, only have none of those evils fallen upon this country which it was predicted would flow from these instructions, but, on the contrary, I believe that New Zealand was never before in so peaceful and prosperous a state as it is now.

I should also state that I understood your Lordship's instructions of the 23rd December, 1846, as conveying to me your Lordship's ideas as to the strict limits within which the law applicable to such cases confined in each direction the authority which, upon behalf of the Crown, I was to exercise over the lands of the Natives. I also understand that by the principles there enunciated by your Lordship the strict legality of any acts of mine in reference to these lands would be tested, but that to my own discretion was left the task of deciding in how far these strict legal principles were applicable, to the existing state of things in New Zealand; and I did not understand your Lordship as in any degree absolving me from the very serious responsibility of not permitting acts of cruelty and injustice to be committed under the colour of such proceedings being justified by strict rules of law. Indeed, there was an evident necessity of considering the principles enunciated by your Lordship in reference to the peculiar state of New Zealand; for, even, if those principles were admitted to be abstractedly true they related to the rights of two parties, one of which parties it would have been impossible to have induced to assent to them; and as this party was a very powerful one, and composed for the most part of very loyal subjects who were disposed to make very great concessions to meet; the views of the Government, the question which would always arise would really be, "Would it be better to endeavour at all hazards to enforce a strict principle of law, or to endeavour to find out some nearly allied principle which should be cheerfully assented to by both parties, and which would fully secure the interest and advantages of both?"

I think that such a principle may now be considered as having been found. Your Lordship is aware that on my arrival in this country I found that the Crown's right of pre-emption over the lands belonging to the Natives had been waived; that a reckless spirit of bargaining for lands between the Natives and European speculators was in progress; that rebellion prevailed in several portion of the country; that it was asserted that the Natives would never submit to the Crown resuming its right of pre-emption, and would never permit it to exercise such rights; that I conceived it my duty, at all hazards, to resume and enforce this right; that various opinions were formed by opposing parties as to the policy and wisdom of this step; that for a long period of time the public here seemed to doubt whether the local Government could or would dare to persevere in such a line of policy; that petitions upon the subject were addressed to Her Majesty; that efforts were made to obtain the disapproval of the Home Government to the line of policy which I had pursued; that notwithstanding these representations Her Majesty's Advisers afforded me their warmest approval and support; that the local Government continued steadily to adhere to this line of policy, and that the result has been constantly increasing prosperity for the colony, and almost daily augmented confidence in the Government upon the part of the Native population, and, I believe, a perfect conviction in the mind of every sensible man in the country, not only that the Government can maintain the Crown's right of pre-emption but that the strict maintenance of this right is the best guarantee for the future welfare of the Natives, and is even recognized as such by themselves.

As far, therefore; as I can understand the, position of the country in reference to the lands of the Natives it is this: that the Native population would, to the best of their ability, resist the enforcement of the broad principles which were maintained by Dr. Arnold; but that they will cheerfully recognize the Crown's right of pre-emption, and that they will in nearly all—if not in all—instances dispose, for a mere nominal consideration, of those lauds which they do not actually require for their own subsistence. Even further than this: in many cases, if Her Majesty requires land, not for the purpose of an absentee proprietary, but for the bona fide purpose of immediately placing settlers upon, the Native chiefs would cheerfully give such land up to the Government without any payment, if the compliment is only paid them of requesting their acquiescence in the occupation of these lands by European settlers.

In opposition to the opinions which have been so generally expressed to your Lordship by such high authorities in the northern part of this Island—that there is no waste land in this colony which can be appropriated to the Crown without purchase—I beg to state that it is my belief that even in the most densely inhabited portions-of the northern part of this Island there are very large tracts of land claimed by contending tribes to which neither of them have a strictly valid right; and that, when these tracts of country come to be occupied by Europeans, the Natives will chiefly relinquish their conflicting and invalid claims in favour of the Government, merely stipulating that small portions of land, for the purposes of cultivation, shall be reserved for each tribe. An instance of this kind has recently occurred, in which an extensive and valuable tract of country has been in this manner ceded to the Government.

The only instances in which I have known the Natives either to resist the occupation of their lands by the Europeans, or to demand exorbitant prices for them, are those cases in which the lands were not validly purchased before a considerable European population was placed upon them; and the Natives, thus becoming aware of the value that had been given to their lands, and actuated by motives of self-interest, refused to part with them for a nominal consideration, but insisted on receiving a price bearing some slight relation to the actual value of the lands at the time the purchase was completed. The obvious means of avoiding this difficulty for the future is for the Government to keep its purchases of-land sufficiently in advance of the spread of the European population. Moreover, these cases almost naturally and inevitably, took «"place upon the first sudden pouring-in of a large European population into a country with whose language, customs,, and laws relating to land they were almost wholly unacquainted; and I do not think there is any probability whatever of "the recurrence of such difficulties for the future.

The other cases in which I have seen the Natives resist the occupation of their lands by the Europeans were evidently unjust, or in those cases in which the Natives, relying upon their own power and despising the strength of the Europeans, have acted from the feelings of the love of plunder and war which are common to all barbarous or semi-civilized people, and, actuated by these motives, have attempted to take the lands of the Europeans from them, and subsequently have pillaged their property, destroyed their villages, &c. It is quite obvious that upon the first occupation of this country by Europeans some excesses of this kind must, have been anticipated, and that they must even still be occasionally looked for.; but that each recurring one will cause less anxiety to the Government than those which have, preceded, and that after a very "few years it is "to be hoped that such" events will wholly cease to take place.

I now proceed to state how I have endeavoured, in practice, to give effect to your Lordship's intentions, as contained in the 13th chapter of the Royal Instructions, headed," On the Settlement of the Waste Lands of the Crown." In the first place, I have strictly maintained the Crown's right of pre-emption. Secondly, although I am fully conscious of the wisdom of the regulations which have been issued by your Lordship regarding the registration of the land of the Natives, I have thought it more expedient to make this matter of registration of the lands of the various. Native tribes a work of much time, rather than to hurry it on too rapidly.

To require at once the whole of the Native tribes to come in within a certain period to register their claims to land would be to raise throughout the entire Island the question of the territorial limits of the various tribes; which limits ever since Europeans have had any knowledge of the country have been the frequent source of their international disputes and wars. Such a step would also excite their suspicions in reference to the intentions of the Government. Many of the distant chiefs would also probably deem a compliance with such a demand as a virtual renunciation of their power and rights, and would therefore refuse to comply with it; and, having once thus, placed themselves in a position of hostility to the Government, would be very slow to give it their confidence again. Without a general survey also of the Island, and without the boundaries of the claims of the different tribes being in some way marked upon the ground and mapped, the mere registration of these claims would afford but little information, and would be productive of but slight utility.

I have therefore deemed inexpedient to disturb the present tranquillity of the country by calling upon the Natives generally to register their claims to land; but I have taken care, in as far as possible, to keep the land purchases of the Government so far in advance of the wants of the European settlers as to be able to purchase the lands required by the Government for a trifling consideration. What has been done was to extinguish absolutely the Native title to the tract purchased, but to reserve an adequate portion for the future wants of the Natives, which reserves were registered as the only admitted claims of the Natives in that district; and they have been furnished with plans of these reserves, and with certified statements that they were reserved for their use, which documents are somewhat in the nature of a Crown title to the lands specified in them, are much esteemed by the Natives, and accustom them to hold land under the Crown, which is an extremely desirable object to attain. This mode of proceeding also renders the labour of registration very trifling, secures the perfectly accurate registration of all such claims as are entered, and gives to the act of registration the appearance of a boon conferred by the Government, instead of clothing it with a compulsory character. I have also no doubt that, in process of time, when the Europeans require the more distant districts of the country, the Natives will have wholly forgotten and have abandoned many invalid claims to tracts of country which would now be urged.

The only instances under this system in which the Government has had to pay any large price for the lands are those in which the settlement of a large European population in the district, before the purchase of the lands had been fully completed, had given a value to them, of which the Natives were well aware; but proper precaution on the part of the Government will prevent such circumstances occurring again, and the Natives are every day becoming more and more aware of the fact that the real payment which they receive for their waste lands is not the sum given to them by the Government, but the security which is afforded that themselves and their children shall for ever occupy the reserves assured to them, to which a great value is given by the vicinity of a dense European population. They also gradually become aware that the Government spend all the money realized by the sale of lands in introducing Europeans into the country, or in the execution of public works, which give employment to the Natives and a value to their property, whilst the payment they receive for their land enables them to purchase stock and agricultural implements.

I think that these principles of proceeding are well suited to the present circumstances of the country, and to the probable future wants of an agricultural population, such as the Maoris are. They also present these advantages: that all questions relating to lands which are settled by them are finally adjusted, and that they create no embarrassments which would preclude the Government from adopting any better system that may be devised.

General Report.

Auckland, 27th June, 1848.

I have the honour to state that the confusion which has resulted from the destruction of Government House and my office by fire upon the 23rd instant, prevents me from forwarding my despatches by this opportunity; but it may be gratifying to know that the "Calliope" arrived yesterday from the Bay of Islands, reporting that portion of New Zealand to be in a completely tranquil and prosperous state; and that a few days since I received despatches from Lieutenant-Governor Eyre reporting that the southern district continued perfectly tranquil, and that it was advancing rapidly in prosperity.

Through the exertions of Mr. McLean the land question at Whanganui had also been finally adjusted, which will enable the Government at once to put the New Zealand Company in possession of the land which they claim in that district, and puts an end to the only question which appeared likely to cause disturbances at that place.

In the neighbourhood of Auckland perfect tranquillity prevails, and this portion of New Zealand is in a very prosperous state. Under such a favourable state of circumstances in the colony, I trust, therefore, that the non-transmission of my despatches by this opportunity will not cause your Lordship any anxiety or inconvenience.

Letter of Waikato Chiefs to the Queen acknowledged by her.

My Friend Te Wherowhero,—

31st October, 1848.

I received last night from England a letter written to me by Lord Grey, in which he informed me that he had received and laid before the Queen the letter which yourself and the other chiefs of the Waikato wrote to the Queen. Lord Grey has requested me to let yourself and the other writers of this letter-know that the Queen had commanded him to express the great satisfaction with which she had received so loyal and dutiful a letter. Lord Grey was also commanded by the Queen to inform you all that there is not the very least foundation for the rumours relative to the taking-away of your lands, to which you allude, and that it never was intended that the Treaty of Waitangi should be violated by dispossessing the tribes which are parties to it of any portion of the land secured to them by the Treaty, without their consent. On the contrary, Her Majesty has always directed that the Treaty of Waitangi should be most scrupulously and religiously observed.

My good friends, I have thus delivered the Queen's message to you. I now say these few words: You thought you had a grievance to complain of, and you wrote a letter full of loving thoughts to the Queen, laying before her your fears. Without delay the Queen heard your complaint and has removed your fears, speaking to you words of lasting love and kindness, as her return for your love to her. Let this teach you that although the Queen is distant her love can reach you, her power protect you from injustice. If, therefore, you ever think that any oppress or intend to oppress you, be patient, be long-suffering, and, without letting anger carry you away, send your complaints to your Queen, who has thus shown you that she will listen to your words.

From your friend the Governor-in-Chief,

G. Grey.

Auckland.—Respecting Memorial of Settlers urging Immediate Introduction of Representative Form of Government.

SIR,—

Downing Street, 5th December, 1849.

I have received your Despatch No. 90, of the 7th July last, enclosing a copy of a memorial addressed to me by 168 inhabitants of the Town of Auckland, containing a statement of grievances against the local Government, and suggesting the immediate introduction of a representative form of government into New Zealand.

Having considered the memorial, I have found in it nothing to impair, the confidence which I feel in your administration of the Government of the colony. The reasons you have assigned in your despatches for delaying for a short period the introduction of representative institutions, with a view of preparing the colony, and especially the Native race, for so important a change in the form of government, appear to me entitled to the greatest weight.

The extraordinary progress which New Zealand has made in prosperity, the tranquillity which has been successfully maintained, and the progressive civilization of the Natives, afford the best proof of the wisdom of the policy you have pursued, and the most complete answer to the statements of the memorialists; and, when I consider the condition in which you found the colony at the period when you assumed the government, the difficulties with which you have had to contend, and its present state, there can in my judgment be no doubt of your title to the respect and gratitude of the inhabitants, whether of Native or of European race.

No. 50. Memorandum relative to Organization of the Native Land Purchase Department.

Reorganization of Native Land Purchase Department.

In the present state of the colony it appears to be a matter of primary importance to its prosperity that land should be acquired from the Natives, not only to meet the increasing demand of the present European population, but also to provide for the numerous immigrants arriving from Great Britain, America, and the neighbouring colonies. While the demand for land was comparatively limited, it might have sufficed to purchase merely what was required for immediate settlement, but it is found that something more is urgently required to provide for the influx of immigration, and wealth that may be expected to these Islands, and that a system of purchasing which provides only for the exigency of the moment is not sufficient to promote, on an extended scale, the great objects of colonization.

It is estimated that the North Island of New Zealand contains twenty-eight millions of acres. Of this extent not more than four millions and a half have been acquired by purchase from the Natives, notwithstanding the various efforts that have been used by private individuals, public associations, and the Government for this object.

The details of a purchase comprising about one-fourth of the Middle Island, chiefly in the Provinces of Nelson and Canterbury, have yet to be completed before the land can be thrown open for selection. An instalment of £2,000 was paid to the principal chiefs, on account of this purchase, before Sir George Grey left Wellington, and a further instalment of £700 was recently paid on account of the same purchase at Taranaki.

It is quite obvious that the purchase of land from the numerous tribes inhabiting this Island must be a matter of considerable difficulty, arising not only from the complicated nature of their claims, but from their jealousies of each other, their superstitious objections to the alienation of the lands of their ancestors, and their doubts (which are now being partially removed by the facility afforded them of acquiring land under the regulations of the 4th March, 1853) that no portion of their country, when once disposed of, could be again repurchased for their children. It seems necessary, therefore, that in order to meet those difficulties officers should be appointed to certain districts, whose duty should be to acquire a knowledge of the Native tribes of their district, to ascertain the extent and nature of their claims, and to give their undivided energy and attention to the purchase of land, not only to meet the present requirements of the country, but to prepare their districts, as far as they possibly can, for the introduction of European settlers. The districts which seem to be more immediately required are—Auckland, Waikato and Waipa, Mokau and Kawhia, Taranaki, Bay of Plenty, and Wellington Province. It is not only in the purchase of land that the services of these officers will be found valuable, but they will also, from their knowledge of Native character and language, be the means of settling disputes and adjusting any differences that may arise in their respective districts, or wherever their duties may call them.

It may also be stated that, in the acquisition of every block of land, the Natives residing thereon become virtually incorporated with the European settlers, become amenable to English law, and imperceptibly recognize the control of the Government in their various transactions.

The longer the purchase of land is delayed the more will be the expense and difficulty of acquiring it. Therefore it becomes the more necessary that an efficient department for this service should be organized, and that ample funds should be provided, so that whenever the Natives are prepared to sell their land there should be as little delay as possible in concluding arrangements with them for that purpose.

As no other subject has embarrassed the Government in its dealings with the Natives or retarded the progress of the colony so much as the adjustment of the Native land question, I have every reason to hope that the arrangements and support for conducting this important branch of the service will be so provided for as to avoid not only a repetition of similar difficulties, but be the means of opening up the country for steady and progressive colonization.

I might adduce various other reasons in favour of establishing a steady and well-regulated system of acquiring land from the Natives, so as to keep the purchase if possible in advance of the requirements of the settlers; but this subject has of late been so frequently brought under the notice of the Government, and is so obvious to the colonists generally, that I believe it is unnecessary to add anything more in reference to it, beyond again noticing, the necessity of organizing an efficient staff of officers to negotiate with the Natives, and of surveyors to mark off the external boundaries of the several blocks or districts that may be from time to time purchased, and of the reserves requisite for the Natives within such purchases. The staff, therefore, which appears necessary should consist of a principal commissioner, whose duty it should be to instruct and direct the purchasing operations of the district commissioners, and to keep the Government fully informed of the several negotiations in progress throughout the Islands, of the funds necessary for such purposes, and, in fact, as he should reside (except when inspecting the several districts) at the seat of Government, he should be ready to give every information respecting his department. There should be also a deputy-commissioner to act for the principal commissioner, and keep up the correspondence with the Government and the Natives in his absence.

The duties of the district commissioners have been already alluded to, and in addition to those district officers, who should acquire a knowledge of land-surveying, there should be in the meantime a staff of surveyors and parties to mark off the external boundaries of such blocks of land as may be immediately acquired from the Natives. Those surveyors would be necessary under any circumstances, and therefore the expense of them should not be considered as exclusively connected with the land-purchasing so much as forming a part of the general surveys of the colony.

Commissioner.

As to Occupation of Native Lands by Europeans.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 28th October, 1854.

I have the honour to inform you that His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government considers that for the future the Government should resist the occupation of Native lands by Europeans before the Native title has been extinguished; otherwise endless disputes and differences, besides great losses of property, will be the result, and the general progress of the colony materially checked.

Respecting the Purchase of Native Lands.

Sir,—

Land Purchase Department, Auckland, 30th August, 1855.

Before the close of the present session of the General Assembly of New Zealand. I conceive it to be my duty to bring under the consideration of His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government the necessity that exists for providing a sum, either by loan or otherwise, of not less than £50,000 a year, which might be from time to time raised, to enable the Government to carry on arrangements for extinguishing the Native title to lands in these Islands.

The necessity for such a loan is so generally apparent to the colonists at large that my adducing any reasons in support of it may appear almost superfluous. I shall, however, briefly allude to a few which may not be out of place in making this application. First, the successful colonization of this Northern Island of New Zealand has been greatly retarded, chiefly in consequence of the unsettled state of the Native land question, involving many of the early settlers in ruin, besides entailing a debt of £268,000 on the colony. Secondly, the difficulties arising out of the unsettled state of the land question have been within the last few years gradually removed by the acquisition of territory from the Natives; but owing to the increased demand for land arising from the numerous arrivals of immigrants (many of them possessed of wealth and energy) from Great Britain and the neighbouring colonies, a sufficiency of land has not yet been acquired, more especially, in the Auckland Province, to meet this demand. Any check, therefore, to the acquisition of land, when it can be obtained from the Natives, must be highly injurious to the present and prospective prosperity not only of any particular province, but of the colony at large, as the influence that those purchases produce, is not confined to provincial limits, but extends throughout the different tribes in both Islands. In illustration of this, I may remark that the presence of some chiefs from the Wellington Province, who have sold and are still desirous of selling more land to the Government, has recently encouraged several of the chiefs in this province hitherto averse to the sale of land to come forward and offer some valuable tracts to the Government. The Natives regard the transfer of their land as an act of great national importance, and their pride is easily injured if advantage is not taken of their offer to dispose of it, more especially as they conceive, notwithstanding the many advantages they derive from doing so, that they have not till then entirely yielded their own independence, laws, and customs in exchange, for the restraints which their elder men, with the jealousy natural to them, apprehend they must submit to by the introduction amongst them of English law and authority, which is generally as much respected in districts acquired from them as it is disregarded in many of the unpurchased portions of the country.

Within the last few weeks a great number of Natives have visited me from different parts of this province, many of them chiefs of great influence, who are particularly anxious to enter into arrangements for the cession of some very valuable tracts of land. Should these chiefs be disappointed by not effecting their purpose, there is every probability, from their fluctuating disposition, that they might hereafter decline to sell their land, even at a greatly advanced price. Instances of this kind have been of such frequent occurrence in New Zealand that every care should be taken to guard against a recurrence of them, as well as of the complications and difficulties that arise from inability to conclude purchases with sufficient promptness.

Regarding the measure in a pecuniary point of view, it is better to use some exertion to provide funds without delay, while the land can be obtained on moderate terms, than to run the risk of not obtaining it at all; or, if eventually obtained, to be compelled to pay an enormously high price for it.

In Auckland within the last eighteen months about 600,000 acres of land in different parts of the province have been negotiated for. Of this extent about 300,000 acres have been partially surveyed, so as to prevent future disputes in reference to boundaries with the Natives. The various details connected with the purchases have also been so far adjusted that on the payment of a few instalments still due to the Natives the negotiations will be completed. From two of these purchases alone—the one in the vicinity of the town, near Orakei, and that at the Waiuku—it may be estimated that for an outlay of about £6,000 a revenue will be realized of not less than £50,000 or £60,000, independent of the more permanent revenue that would accrue from the occupation of the land by European colonists. As an investment, therefore, independent of the political importance of the question, I think there can be no doubt as to the expediency of providing funds for this service.

I have &c;

Donald McLean, Principal
Commissioner The Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

New Zealand.—Present State of Native Land Purchases.

Sir,—

Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 21st April, 1856.

I have the honour to lay before you, for the information of His Excellency the Governor, a general report on the present state of the Native land-purchasing operations throughout the colony.

Middle Island.

- 1. In my letter of the 7th instant the arrangements made for the extinction of the Native title to the unpurchased portions of the Middle Island are so fully detailed that I need not again advert to this subject further than to remark that, with the exception of D'Urville Island, a dispute at Akaroa, and certain reservations essential for the subsistence of the Natives, the claims to that Island may be now considered as finally settled.

Province of Auckland.

- 2. In the Auckland Province the districts where purchases are at present carried on by officers of this department are the Bay of Islands, Whangarei, Auckland, and Whaingaroa on the West Coast.

Bay of Islands.

At the Bay; of Islands, arrangements for the purchase of lands by this department were not commenced until the 1st of June, 1855, when Mr. Kemp was instructed to carry on this duty. He was subsequently recalled to Auckland, so that he has only, as yet, been enabled to complete the purchase of 10,000 acres, at a cost of £700. The Natives of that district have offered to dispose of several blocks of land to the Government, varying in extent from-1,000 to 8,000 acres each.

On the 17th November, 1855, instructions were issued to Mr. Kemp (a copy of which is herewith enclosed) to proceed to Mangonui, and use every exertion to acquire such lands in that vicinity as would be eligible for the location of a body of immigrants expected from Toronto, if sufficient inducement could be held out to them to establish themselves in this colony. From what I can gather from Mr. Kemp's reports, which I have already furnished, the Native chiefs were not inclined to dispose of the Victoria Valley, which from its fine rich soil and situation would be the most eligible site for such a settlement; but, at the same time, Mr. Kemp expresses an opinion that the valley might be obtained if certain reserves were made for the Natives, and a sum of £2,000 placed at his disposal to effect the purchase.

I estimate that 100,000 acres might be obtained in the Bay of Islands District during the ensuing year at an outlay of £6,000.

Whangarei.

In the Whangarei District, which is situated between the Bay of Islands and Auckland, 230,000 acres have been acquired, from the 13th February, 1853, to the 31st March, 1856, at a cost of £9,910. There are several blocks of fair average quality, which may be altogether estimated to comprise upwards of 100,000 acres, offered by the Natives, which might be obtained at an expense of £5,640. As this district is being settled by Europeans it is very desirable that purchases of the more desirable blocks for agricultural purposes should be carried on during the present year.

Auckland District.

In the Auckland District a sum of £5,000 could be judiciously expended in the purchase of several blocks of land which are, from their proximity to the town, much required for settlement.

Eastern District.

Several extensive tracts in the Thames, Piako, and Bay of Plenty Districts might also be, purchased in the course of the present year if an officer to negotiate with the Natives, and others to carry on the surveys of the several blocks they may offer to sell, could be stationed there.

Whaingaroa and Mokau.

In the Whaingaroa and Mokau District 59,000 acres of land have been acquired for £1,905. The purchase of 39,830 acres, on which instalments to the amount of £917 have been paid, can be finally settled for an additional sum of £2,215.

There are several settlers from Auckland and Taranaki locating themselves at Whaingaroa, and the purchases there are being gradually carried on towards the Waikato and Waipa Districts; but, from the report of the District Officer, I expect it will be some considerable time before any extent of the interior portions of those districts will be alienated by the Natives, as it is with considerable reluctance they even dispose of the homesteads for the few Europeans who have for many years resided in that part of the interior.

Province of Taranaki.

- 3. The whole of the land acquired from the Natives in the Taranaki Province may be estimated at 60,000 acres. Of this extent there are about 3,000 acres in the Waiwakaiho Block, exclusive of reserves, of which the Natives have not yet given up possession to the Government.

In consequence of the continued feuds among the Natives at Taranaki, I do not anticipate that there is any prospect of acquiring land there during this year. At the same time some provision should be made to enable the Government to do so whenever the Natives are disposed to sell. A sum of £3,000 would be adequate to meet this contingency.

Province of Wellington.

- 4. In the Province of Wellington there are above 700,000 acres of land at Ahuriri and Manawatu still unpurchased. Of this extent, 300,000 acres, a portion of which is situated in the valuable Ahuriri Plains, near the harbour, might be acquired in the course of the ensuing eighteen months, if funds and survey assistance are afforded to effect this object. A considerable portion of the land is adapted for agricultural and most of it for pastoral pursuits.

From the changeable disposition of the Natives in reference to their land, it is impossible for me to furnish more than an approximate estimate of the sums that may be required. The amounts may be either over or under what is stated, but I would submit that it is most advisable to be provided with funds to complete purchases when the Natives are disposed to treat for the sale of their land.

I have &c;

Donald McLean, Chief
Commissioner. Captain Steward, Private Secretary.

No. 54. THE CHIEF COMMISSIONER to Mr. C. W. Ligar, Auckland.

SIR,—

Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 19th May, 1856.

There are some subjects in connection with Native affairs which I should offer as a supplement to the evidence I have already given on land-purchasing to your Board.

- 1. The first of these is in reference to the pensioning of certain chiefs as a means of preserving the tranquillity of their districts, and attaching them to the interests of the British Government. It is clearly my opinion that it would be most judicious and advisable that a sum of £500, in addition to what is already paid as pensions, should be placed at His Excellency's disposal for this purpose, as it might be the means of averting a war with the Natives, the expense and injury of which to the colony it would be difficult to estimate, more especially when it is considered that the British Government might in the course of no very distant period recall the force now in the country, and leave the colonists to their own resources for defence.
- 2. I believe that another means of insuring more permanent and friendly relations with influential chiefs would be secured by enabling some of them to acquire lands in the vicinity of Auckland, as it is evident that if they had an interest in lands near a town, where the value of property is likely to increase, they would feel bound, from the motives of self-interest, to protect the town and its inhabitants.

The amount advanced in the shape of loans for mills, vessels, horses, agricultural implements, in the Auckland Province since 1851, has been £4,806. Of this sum, £2,768 has been repaid, and it may be estimated that £1,556 15s. 2d. will be repaid during the present year, leaving a balance outstanding of £482, of which the date of payment is uncertain. Judging from what the Natives have done with those loans, the faithfulness with which they have been repaid, the stimulus it has given to industrial pursuits, the influence it has given the Government over them, and the addition it must have made to the revenue of the colony, points out this system of giving loans as very desirable, and I would submit for the consideration of your Board whether it would not be advisable to recommend the placing, in addition to what is now outstanding amongst the Natives, a further sum of £2,500 at His Excellency's disposal to enable the Government to purchase lands in the vicinity of Auckland for such chiefs as might wish to have a landed property, which would, tend so much, to identify their interest with our own.

When it is considered how largely the Natives contribute to the revenue of the colony, and how much the peace of the colony depends on their improvement in the arts of civilization, I would submit these suggestions for the favourable consideration of your Board, in the hope that you may embrace those subjects for the consideration of His Excellency in your report.

I have &c;

C. W. Ligar, Esq. Donald McLean, Chairman, Native Board of Inquiry. Chief Commissioner.

No. 55. Memorandum on Legal Acquisition of their Homesteads by Europeans.

The pre-emptive right in favour of Europeans residing in certain districts, to be proclaimed for the purpose, to purchase homesteads, is very deserving of consideration, and one for which some provision appears necessary by way of enactment of the General Assembly, in order that such right of pre-emption may be legally exercised. I submit that such purchases should not be indiscriminately allowed, but that they should be confined to certain districts that might from time to time be proclaimed, parties residing in which districts, and acquainted with the Native customs and language, might be allowed to negotiate with the Natives for their own homesteads, and make the payment to the Natives in the presence of a Government officer, whose duty it should be to witness the transaction and see the boundaries defined. In some instances the person who surveyed the homestead might, if an accredited agent of the Government, perform this duty. The question of price would be settled between the European and the Natives concerned. The price to be charged to the purchaser before issuing a Crown grant should, I think, be 10s. an acre, less a sum equal to the average price paid by the Government for adjoining lands in the same district; or a fixed deduction of, say, 3s. an acre; without reference to the price paid by the European settler to the Natives. In case of the Government acquiring the homestead from the Natives, the settler would of course have to pay the Crown 10s. an acre for its grant, with the addition of such sum in excess of 3s. an acre as the Government may have paid for the land. The size of such homesteads should not probably exceed 640 acres, and care should of course be taken that the pre-emptive right was not exercised so as to interfere with future town-sites, or necessary public reserves or ferries. The pre-emptive right should only apply to actual occupants who have made certain improvements and resided at least three years on the land, as without some such provision the right might be open to abuse.

In the Waipa and other districts which I have visited in the Auckland Province, there are persons residing on lands which they obtained from the Natives upwards of twenty years ago. On these lands some of them have made considerable improvements, but they have not as yet any legal title to it. I am aware that the Government incur a certain amount of responsibility in issuing such grants, as the Europeans might, in the event of any difference with the Natives, expect the Government to maintain them in possession. In most cases, however, where Europeans have resided a long period of years on their homesteads they have married Native wives, and their chief object in obtaining a title would be to enable them to leave the land with an undisputed title to their children; so that difficulties with this class of occupants need not be so much apprehended as if they obtained a grant with a view of disposing of the land afterwards to other Europeans, who might in many instances be strangers to Native habits and customs, and might therefore have frequent quarrels and disputes with the Natives, which in remote districts beyond the protection of British law would probably embarrass the Government. These difficulties may no doubt be obviated by the Governor's reserving the option of issuing such grants on the respective merits of each case only, and in such districts as may be from time to time proclaimed.

DONALD MCLEAN, Chief Commissioner.

Land Purchase Department, Auckland,

23rd June, 1856.

Whangarei.—Reporting Visit to that District and Kaipara.

SIR,—

Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 20th March, 1857.

I have the honour to report, for your Excellency's information, some particulars connected with my late visit to the Whangarei and Kaipara Districts.

The District of Whangarei, situated between Auckland and the Bay of Islands, contiguous also to the valleys of the Kaipara, the Wairoa, and the Hokianga, lies in a most desirable position for settlement. The main estuary forms a safe harbour, navigable for vessels of large tonnage for a distance of fifteen or sixteen miles. The country on each side presents at first sight a broken and hilly aspect. The curiously-formed Manaia rocks, rising boldly from the water at the northern side of the entrance in irregular chasms, give a wild and romantic character to the scenery, which is very much heightened by the contrast with the tame and monotonous appearance of the low, sandy country around the town-site of Marsden at the south-eastern entrance of the harbour. Numerous small rivers and creeks, navigable for canoes and boats, empty themselves into the main estuary. On the banks of these streams are some Native villages, and on the Crown lands a few well-selected farmsteads are springing up. The soil is chiefly of a rich volcanic description, intercepted with belts of timber alternating with flats of open country. Here and there are occasional patches of poor white clayey soil which have been dug over for kauri gum: such, however, is the influence of a genial climate upon even the poorest of New Zealand soil, that with slight culture it can be rendered wonderfully productive.

Lands acquired or under Negotiation.

The extent of land already acquired by purchase from the Natives in this district may be estimated at 268,000 acres; lands for which negotiations are now pending at 58,210 acres.

In addition to the districts in the immediate vicinity of the Harbour of Whangarei, the Government is now in treaty for the purchase from the Natives of extensive tracts upon the Kaipara and Wairoa Rivers, from which places some valuable cargoes of kauri spars have been exported for the British navy. These districts, intersected with fine navigable rivers, which swarm for thirty miles upward from their mouths with mullet and other fish, are capable of maintaining a large and flourishing population, and still carry magnificent forests of kauri timber, easy of access, which have never yet been touched with the axe, and which might be worked with great advantage both to the European colonists and also to the Native population, who from long experience are very expert in dragging out the spars and preparing them for export. The settlers of Whangarei are of a highly respectable class, and already thriving, though it is only within the last few years that they have established themselves there.

Nova-Scotian Settlement at Waipu.

At Waipu, about twelve miles from the south head of Whangarei, a party of emigrants from Cape Breton, North America, have formed a settlement, and in the short space of twelve or fifteen months have converted the primitive wastes and forests into comfortable homes and farmsteads. Without any other aid than that of the axe and the hoe they have cleared and brought under cultivation much more than sufficient land to raise crops for their own subsistence, and from their hardihood and previous skill in contending with the heavy forests and capricious climate of North America there is every reason to expect that, in a country like New Zealand, which they regard as a comparative paradise, by a continuance of their present industry and perseverance, they will contribute greatly to the material advancement of the province. Thousands of their countrymen would follow these first pioneers from Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, and other parts of British North America, if inducements were held out to them to do so. These inducements need not be of any extravagant character: all that they ask is that we should give them land in localities suited to their requirements, allowing them the usual privilege to which other immigrants are entitled by way of remission in land for their passage-money, and a credit for five or seven years for such additional quantity as it may be advisable to assign to them, under a pre-emptive right of purchase.

By these means the Government would insure a steady flow of immigration to the province of well-trained, hardy, and experienced bush-men and sailors; whose loyalty and devotion to British authority, joined with their clannish spirit and unanimity of action, would be found most important elements in the formation and early settlement of a new country situated like New Zealand. Such colonists, moreover, derive a peculiar value from the manner in which they transplant themselves to these shores, bringing along with them their religious and educational establishments already in operation: no chance-collection of men, but an active and organized community possessing many of the characteristics of the early pioneers of colonization in North America. Nor ought this opportunity to be overlooked by either the General or Provincial Governments, lest the stream should be diverted to other colonies, the Cape of Good Hope, for instance, which are fully sensible of its value, which a liberal administration of the waste lands, valueless and unproductive without capital and labour, might secure for New Zealand—a population which would so materially contribute towards the wealth, the stability, and the progress, not only of any one province in particular, but also of the colony at large.

A glance at the map of the northern peninsula of New Zealand will show your Excellency the peculiar advantages which it offers for English colonization. In addition to the main harbours of the eastern coast—Auckland, Whangarei, the Bay of Islands, and Whangaroa (likely to be so important in case of the establishment of the Panama line of steamers)—there are numerous well-sheltered coves and smaller anchorages; while the Kaipara and Hokianga on the western side, if more dangerous from the bars across their mouths and the stormy character of the coast upon which they open, yet lead up into navigable streams which must tend to form a hardy and skilful race of seamen, invaluable to our insular position in the Southern Hemisphere.

Colonizing Steps to be taken.

Means should now be adopted to resuscitate and promote upon a permanent basis the colonization of this portion of the Northern Island, so materially valuable, and historically so interesting as the seat of the earliest European settlement of New Zealand. To effect this it will be necessary to adopt liberal and comprehensive measures contemporaneously with the extinction of the Native title to the extensive districts of waste land that as yet remain unpurchased in this peninsula.

The first step which I would recommend would be the resumption by the Crown of all the lands which have been already alienated by the Natives to different individuals, and which have been subsequently exchanged by those individuals for Government scrip. There should be no delay in taking possession of these lands while some of the older Natives who sold them are still alive, and can point out to a surveyor the locality and limits. From what I have observed among the northern tribes, they are most anxious that this should be done, and they are almost all of them particularly honourable in pointing out the exact boundaries of what they have sold. Two intelligent surveyors and parties, acting in concert with the Land Purchase Commissioners, could in twelve months determine with sufficient accuracy the extent of these lands, which should be declared open for sale and selection whenever the boundaries are defined. The next step, and one which is now in successful progress is to acquire larger tracts of land by purchase from the Natives, out of which blocks, varying in extent from 100 to 2,000 acres, should be reconveyed under Crown grants to the principal chiefs upon the extinction of the tribal title, such blocks consisting not only of culturable but also of forest land, in order to secure to them a continued revenue proportionable to their rank.

In order to do away with present or future dissatisfaction on the part of the Native sellers at the price they receive for their land as compared with the value it acquires when in the hands of the Government, unable, as yet, to comprehend the reasons that influence comparative value, it would be most desirable to expend a certain definite proportion (and that no inconsiderable one) of the moneys realized by the waste-land sales on roads and other improvements exclusively within those districts from which they have accrued, and from time to time to publish the balance-sheets of such expenditure in the Maori Messenger.

Correct Native Census should be taken, and Assessors appointed.

No correct return of the Native population of this northern peninsula has yet been taken. This should be done without delay, and the territorial limits of the four leading tribes—the Aopouri, the Rarawa, the Ngapuhi, and the Ngatiwhatua—should be ascertained, and as nearly as possible, defined. Estimating the population at 8,000 souls, it would not be difficult to ascertain the names of the principal chiefs whose co-operation would be essential for carrying out the views of Government, and who should, in return for their exertions, when efficiently rendered, to preserve the peace of their respective districts, be rewarded with marks of approbation and fixed annuities for their services. These chiefs should be designated Assessors, and have commissions issued to them defining as nearly as possible the nature of their duties. They should also be invited to take part with the settlers in framing by-laws for adjusting cases of trespass, disputes, and other local cases. They should also be invested with powers of jurisdiction in some measure analogous to those exercised by the English Courts of Petty Sessions. It is quite evident that the English law cannot be strictly carried out without the agency of the Natives. It is therefore obvious that they should be invited to take part in the administration of justice, in order that executive authority, instead of diplomatic bargaining, may attend the decisions of the District Magistrates, who are at present placed in a most anomalous position when attempting to enforce against the Maoris that law to which all British subjects are amenable; and, if this result can be more certainly effected by calling in the aid of the chiefs, it appears a most reasonable, just, and expedient means of effecting so highly desirable an object.

I am quite aware that time, patience and perseverance, mutual forbearance, and reciprocity of good offices, are required to reconcile the Natives to our forms of government, but I am nevertheless fully confident that if they are once made to feel that the aim and object of the Government is to promote impartially the permanent advancement of both races of Her Majesty's subjects, irrespective of any temporary expedient for gaining some particular object, they will soon-adapt themselves with zeal and loyalty to such changes as their natural acuteness of observation may prove to them as in reality conducive to such a consummation.

If your Excellency and your Excellency's Government concur in the general views which I have cursorily sketched out in this communication, I will afford further and more explicit information on the detailed means of carrying them into practice, as I should rejoice to see our relations with the Native population, in at least one portion of this province, placed on so firm a footing as to preclude all probability of future rupture between the races. Nor, from the high standing and commanding influence of the tribes inhabiting it, could I suggest a district where this could be done with greater prospect of success than that to which I have been referring. The Natives of all other portions of the colony would look on with imitative zeal and interest, while the Government would have the satisfaction of having laid a firm foundation upon which a more extended fabric of settlement and civilization throughout the Island might be gradually erected.

I have &c;

Donald McLean, Native
Secretary. His Excellency Governor Gore Browne.

Minute by Colonial Treasurer.

I fully concur in the desirability of taking an accurate census of the population of the northern peninsula, with a view to a more systematic treatment of that portion of the Native race than has hitherto been attempted. The census should be by pas, so as to show the location, as well as the number, of the population. The Native Secretary should be requested to report what arrangements he would recommend for testing the census. If possible, the officers of the Land Purchase Department should be employed for this purpose, and much useful information might be obtained from Archdeacon Williams, Mr. Busby, Mr. Atkins, and other old settlers.

Minute by Governor Gore Browne.

I concur in all that the Native Secretary says. I am satisfied that the time has arrived when some permanent arrangement for the better government of the Native districts must be made; and I have long been of opinion that a portion of the money obtained by the sale of land over which the Native title has been extinguished ought to be expended in the locality from whence it is derived.

No. 58. Extract from Memorandum of the Hon. C. W. Richmond.

General Principles of Native Policy.

The policy of the British Government in relation to the aborigines of these Islands might on the first settlement of the country have assumed either of two shapes: it might have addressed itself to the maintenance of the Natives as a separate race under distinct institutions and a Government wholly or in great measure independent of the ordinary Colonial Government; or, on the other hand, it might have been directed to promote the eventual absorption of the Maoris into the European population.

Under the former policy it might naturally have been sought rather to maintain than to obliterate such Native customs as were not repugnant to humanity; and it would have been essential to set up and rigidly to guard a territorial division between the races. The neglect of this latter precaution has for ever rendered such a policy impossible in New Zealand. All the principal maritime ports of the colony are in the hands of the settlers, who, year by year, extending themselves towards the interior from twenty different centres, come in contact with the Natives at fresh points; so that there no longer remains any other alternative than the extinction of the Maori race, or its union under one Government with the European settlers. However difficult, therefore, the latter enterprise, the mode in which the country has been colonized leaves no choice but to attempt it.

There are some who, considering what a chasm intervenes between civilization and barbarism, and how impassable the boundaries of race have generally proved, are of opinion that the fusion of the two peoples is a moral and natural impossibility. These persons refer to the statistics of population, which, according to the most accurate estimates hitherto made, show a decrease in the numbers of the Natives at the rate of about 20 per cent, in every period of fourteen years., They point to the relative paucity of Maori females, and to the abnormal mortality of the race, especially amongst the children, as facts which make certain its extinction within a short period. Such considerations induce to the abandonment of the work of civilization as hopeless, and favour the adoption of a merely temporizing policy. The race, it is said, is irredeemably savage. It is also moribund. All that is wise or safe to attempt is to pacify and amuse them until they die out—until the inscrutable physical law at work amongst them shall relieve the country from the incubus of a barbarous population, or at least shall render it practicable to reduce them to the condition, for which Nature has intended them, of hewers of wood and drawers of water. An exclusive reliance on the personal influence with the Natives of particular individuals, and on the effect of gifts and flattery upon the more powerful or more turbulent chiefs, would be the natural features of such a policy; which, by its demoralizing influence, would realize the expectations of its advocates, and render the annihilation of the Maori race both certain and speedy.

To the present Advisers of the Crown in New Zealand such a policy appears false, cowardly, and immoral. In common with the whole intelligence of the community whose opinions they represent, they believe it to be at once the interest and the duty of the colonists to preserve and civilize the Native people. Though not blind to the indications of physical decay which the race exhibits, nor to the great difficulties in the way of policy and fusion, they do not permit themselves to despair. And they believe that the true course—a course which, however small, the prospect of success, the British Government would still in honour and conscience be bound to pursue—is to take all possible measures for bringing the aborigines as speedily as may be under British institutions.

In order to the correct apprehension of the position of the Native question it ought to be fully understood that the British Government in New Zealand has no reliable means but those of moral persuasion for the government of the aborigines. It is powerless to prevent the commission by Natives against Natives of the most glaring crimes. Within the last twelvemonth blood has been spilt in Native quarrels in at least four different places in the Northern Island,—at New Plymouth, the Bay of Plenty, Hawke's Bay, and the Whanganui River,—in one instance within the limits of a British settlement. In the cases, which happily are not numerous, in which aggressions are committed by Natives against settlers, the Government is compelled to descend to negotiation with the Native chiefs for the surrender of the offender. The development of the material resources of the extensive wilderness still in the hands of the Natives, which comprises nearly three-fourths of the total area and some of the most fertile portions of the Northern Island, depends absolutely on their will. Without their consent it is impossible to survey, or even to traverse, the country; much less could the Government undertake the execution of roads, bridges, or other public works in Native territory. Considerable difficulty was lately experienced in the establishment of a mail route between Auckland and Napier, though the mail-bags were carried by Maoris. And, it was very recently represented by the chief permanent officer of the Native Department that it would be inexpedient, and even dangerous, for the Government to make a gift to certain Waikato Natives of a few bags of clover-seed, lest the present should give rise to disputes respecting the ownership of land, and the Government be blamed by the Natives for having introduced among them a cause of dissension. These instances may serve to illustrate the nature of the present relations of the Colonial Government with the Natives.

Whether a Government reduced to such timid shifts, and with nothing beyond a moral hold upon the allegiance of a self-willed, suspicious, and warlike race, can succeed in subjecting that race to the salutary restraints of law, and in preserving it from the destruction which must result from a continuance of its own barbarous usages, is a problem which remains to be solved. There can be no doubt that the presence of an increased military and naval force of sufficient strength to command respect for the British power—now very lightly esteemed by the New Zealanders—would greatly forward any efforts for the permanent amelioration of their condition. In the legislative measures proposed and carried by the present Government it has, however, been assumed as a condition, and steadily kept in view, that the colony will remain practically destitute of any force available for the maintenance of law and order amongst the Natives, and that reliance must be placed solely on the good sense of the people and their innate capacity, under wise guidance, for self-government.

Accordingly nothing more has been attempted than to facilitate the voluntary acceptance by the Natives of English" institutions. And, fortunately, many Maoris are sufficiently intelligent and far-sighted to perceive the necessity for promptly taking advantage of such a facility. The old Maori regime is falling into decay, whilst a substitute is naturally sought in a spontaneous imitation of British usages. Native chiefs in various places affect to administer justice with the forms which they have observed to be used in the Police Courts of the colony, and attempts have been made at many Native villages to enact and put in force local regulations on various subjects. The leaders in the movements are mostly young men of standing, educated at the Mission, schools, who, though they appear destitute of requisite knowledge, judgment, influence, and force of purpose to effect, unaided, the needed reforms, may yet, it is hoped, be counted upon to second the endeavours of a European Magistrate.

The policy of the British Government in New Zealand has generally been identical in its main purpose with what is now proposed. It seems, however, to have been expected that the Natives in the neighbourhood of European settlements would naturally aggregate themselves about the centres as so many nuclei of civilization, adopting the laws and usages of the settlers, and resorting to the European tribunals for the settlement of their differences. This expectation, if such there were, has been in a great measure disappointed, and the social organization of the two races remains as distinct as ever, even in the immediate vicinity of the towns. In a few cases Magistrates have been stationed in purely Native districts. But placed there independently of the will of the people, and utterly without power to enforce their own decisions, their position has been a false one, and they have done nothing to supply the needed reconstitution of Maori society. It appears to the present Advisers of the Crown that there has been no proper adaptation of British institutions to the present condition of the aborigines. It is unreasonable to expect that they should accept our laws without those local modifications of detail which even British citizens require. It is now therefore proposed to attempt to operate from Native centres by means of institutions English in their spirit, if not absolutely in their form, devised to supply the peculiar necessities of the Native tribes, and to secure their confidence and support.

No. 59. MEMORANDUM by the Hon. Mr. RICHMOND on NATIVE LAND PURCHASES.

In accordance with the Governor's request, conveyed in a memorandum dated 2nd July, His Excellency's Responsible Ministers submit the following observations on the heads of a Bill prepared by Mr. Sewell, and transmitted with the memorandum referred to.

The distinctive feature of Mr. Sewell's proposal is the constitution of a Board of Commissioners appointed by the Crown, having the Governor at its head, to which are to be transferred the important functions—First, of conducting land-purchasing operations; secondly, of regulating the sale and disposal of land acquired from the Natives; thirdly, of supervising the survey and preparation for settlement of such lands. Under existing arrangements the first of these functions is exercised by the Governor, who acts upon the advice of his Responsible Ministers as to what blocks shall be purchased and what prices shall be paid, subject however to His Excellency's right of veto, if political reasons render it, in his opinion, inexpedient to make a particular purchase. Practically the Chief Land Purchase Commissioner (over whose appointment and removal the Governor retains a personal control, and who is the sole medium of communication on the subject of land purchase between the Government and the Native) exercises a very large influence over the conduct of land-purchasing operations. The second function at present belongs to the General Assembly, and the third and last to the Provincial Governments.

His Excellency's Responsible Ministers are decidedly of opinion that the union of these powers in a permanent Board would not fail to excite strong public dissatisfaction, and that the proposal cannot be made to the Legislature with a chance of success. It appears improbable that such a system could work in harmony with the representative institutions of the colony. Nor, looking at the scheme abstractedly, without reference to popular opinion or to the congruity of the scheme with the existing institutions of the colony, does it seem calculated to secure greater stability or efficiency of administration than the present system. Ministers are aware that the existing system is by no means unexceptionable in theory or in its practical operation. The changes required, however, are not, in the opinion of Ministers, in the direction of Mr. Sewell's proposal.

By clause 13 of the heads of Mr. Sewell's Bill, it is provided that the Governor shall lay out districts for purchase with reference solely to their suitability for systematic colonization, excluding consideration of the state of tribal title and of the disposition of the Natives to release their rights. Ministers are in general opposed to the plan of buying piecemeal whatever small and inconveniently-shaped blocks the caprice of the Natives or the state of their titles may from time to time induce them to offer. At the same time they are of opinion that it would be in the highest degree impolitic for the Government to bind itself rigidly by the rule laid down by clause 13. It is often impossible to acquire footing in a Native district, or to disentangle the complications of Native land disputes, otherwise than by operations which the clause in question would altogether prohibit. Besides which, the plan is absolutely inapplicable to all that portion of the Northern Island which lies north of Waikato Heads, where, from the way in which Native lands and Crown lands are already intermixed, it is quite impracticable to proceed by such extensive operations as Mr. Sewell contemplates.

No one can doubt the desirability of operating only upon large blocks, but it is often quite impracticable to do so, and the difficulties are of a nature which no lapse of time would remove, without the intervention of the Land Purchase Department. Though the Government may, in certain cases, find it expedient to purchase small blocks, it does not follow that these should be thrown open for immediate settlement. The advantages of systematic colonization are undeniable, but those advantages may be secured by retaining the blocks required, until the extent of territory at the disposal of the Crown in a given district is sufficient for the formation of a regular settlement.

To many of the minor features of the Bill Ministers see no objection. Under the Bay of Islands Settlement Bill, 1858, a settlement is to be formed somewhat on the plan which Mr. Sewell's scheme appears to contemplate, where Maori proprietors holding Crown grants will be intermixed with the European immigrants. Ministers consider that this system may be advantageously extended, and that the prospect of obtaining the advantages which such a plan secures would be found a strong inducement to the Natives to release their territorial rights.

No. 60. MEMORANDUM by the Hon. Mr. SWAINSON on the GOVERNMENT of the NATIVE RACE.

It has been repeatedly acknowledged that to the Imperial and not to the Colonial Government the care of the Natives properly belongs, and that the Imperial Government would not be justified in abdicating the responsibilities which rest on it with regard to the Native people. But when the principle of Ministerial responsibility was adopted no provision was made for their special government by the Crown, and on the ground not only of justice and humanity, but of policy and economy, it is important that the necessary measures for that object should be taken without delay.

Before the Constitution was brought into operation the Governor of the colony had an influential voice both in the legislation of the colony and in the appropriation of the public funds, and he was intrusted not only with the responsibility, but with the power of securing the interests and of promoting the welfare of Her Majesty's Native subjects. But when the Constitution came into operation the power of the Governor, both over the Legislature of the colony and over the appropriation of its revenues, was greatly diminished, and his influence for good, especially with reference to the government of the Native race, was materially impaired.

Though the Constitution is called "Representative" it has been decided that it does not confer the elective franchise on the Natives: they have consequently no voice in the Colonial Legislature, and at the present moment they are subject, under the so-called Representative Constitution, to the government of a Ministry in whose election they have no voice, and (saving the Native Civil List) their contributions to the general revenue are controlled by a Legislature over which they have no control.

It is a remarkable feature in the Native character that, while they are jealous of any interference from their equals, they are accustomed to yield a ready obedience to a really powerful chief, and, having ceded their independence to the Queen of England, they are not unnaturally impatient of being governed by their fellow-subjects. They know little, and they care less, about a Responsible Ministry—here to-day and gone to-morrow—the members of which they hardly know by name, and for whom they can have no respect. But they are for the most part disposed to yield obedience to the representatives of the Crown, and for this reason it is expedient for the interests of both races that the prestige of the Governor should be carefully maintained; and looking at the tone of a portion of the public Press, and to the amount of latent bitter feeling towards the Native race which has recently been brought to light, it is obvious that the duty of promoting their interests cannot safely be intrusted to the colonizing race, and that, if the Home [unclear: government] would not abdicate their responsibilities, measures should be taken to provide for the [unclear: government] of them by the Crown alone, to whom, and not to the English settlers, they were induced to their independence.

In any measures which may be adopted for government, the Natives would value permanence and stability; while they would be [unclear: distressful] of "a change of system consequent on a change of Advisers." They have little conception of government in the abstract, but, to be appreciated by them, it must be distinctly personified; and, to be beneficial, it must not only be personal, but powerful and paternal; and to secure and to maintain a real influence over the Natives, it is essential that constant instruction and friendly communication should be kept up with them.

With this view of the Native character, it seems to me to be desirable that a definite line of policy to be pursued towards the Natives should, in broad outline at least, be formally prescribed, with the deliberate sanction of the British Cabinet; and that, it should be the duty of each successive Governor, on arriving in the colony, to make a formal proclamation of this policy as a deliberate message from the Crown; that each successive Governor should understand that to carry that policy into execution is the principal duty of the Queen's Representative in New Zealand, and that in the performance of that duty he may confidently count upon the support of the Crown and Parliament.

As the government of the New Zealanders has been recognized as a responsibility especially belonging to the Imperial, and not to the Colonial, Government, the Governor for the time being should be advised in the management of Native affairs, not by the Ministry representing the colonists, and responsible to the colonists, and liable to be frequently changed, but by a Council of advisers appointed by the Crown, responsible to the Crown, and holding their offices by a permanent tenure. And there should be placed at the disposal of the Governor, independently of an annual vote of the Assembly, such a fixed portion of the general revenue of the colony as may be sufficient for the maintenance of an efficient department for the management of Native affairs, for the payment of Native Magistrates and Assessors, and for the outlay which may be necessary for the gradual introduction of law and order amongst the Natives, and for their internal government in their relations with each other.

But, with a view to harmonize the action of two different authorities in the government of the same country, it is essential that the persons to be appointed as the Governor's advisers should be men not only of character and ability, but of high and social standing, neither having nor being supposed to have any partial or undue leaning in favour of the Natives, but by their impartiality, prudence, and good sense, and by their interest in the welfare of the colony at large, likely to earn the respect and confidence of both races. Invested with the power and means befitting his position, the Queen's Representative may exercise almost unbounded influence over the Natives, and, assisted by a permanent body of advisers of high character and social standing, it is no exaggeration to affirm that, for purposes of peace and good order, the Governor would form a power in the country fully equivalent to a regiment of the Queen's troops. But the government of the colony cannot be carried on regardless of the interests, the feelings, or the prejudices of either race without detriment to both; and it should be clearly understood from the outset that a separate government is established for the conduct of Native affairs, not with a one-sided object or in antagonism to the interests of the colonizing race, but to save, in truth, the Natives from themselves, and to serve as a useful agent in promoting the peaceable and successful colonization of the country.

The influence of both chief and priest, once all-powerful in New Zealand, is rapidly decaying, and neither the new religion nor the new Government yet exercise the same degree of influence over the people; and in their present transition state the Maoris are governed with more difficulty than when under the control of a powerful heathen chief; and, until we have some better influence to bring to bear upon them, the power of the chiefs should as far as possible be maintained. With reference to the dissatisfaction which is believed to exist amongst certain of the tribes, and to the desire which is being shown, by them for a more active and efficient power to control, them in their relations with each other, I would suggest that the invitations; to the principal chiefs to the approaching meeting should be as inclusive as possible, in order that advantage may be taken of the opportunity to ascertain what amount of dissatisfaction really exists among them, what is the ground of it, and to what extent it prevails amongst them. That the occasion may be turned to profitable account, the meeting should be constantly attended by a small body of persons commissioned to represent the Government, and who, from their high standing and their acquaintance with the Native character and the Native language, may be likely to exercise a beneficial influence over its proceedings. They should be fully instructed in the views of the Government; ready to meet objections, to correct misapprehensions and misrepresentations, to explain difficulties, and to enforce what may be reasonable and just.

Before attempting to apply a remedy, the first great object should be to ascertain what is really the state of the Native mind upon the subject. Assuming the invitations to be general, and that they are generally accepted, it will probably be found that the assembled chiefs may be divided into three classes—(1) Those who, at first sight, may appear to entertain views hardly consistent with the maintenance of British rule; (2) those who may desire some better and more efficient system than they have at present for their own internal government; (3) those who desire no change. If met by reason and argument, applied in a patient and friendly spirit, and assured that they may establish any system for their own internal government not inconsistent with the general interests of the rest of the community, I believe that those of the first class who may still desire to live independent of British rule may be reduced to a very insignificant minority. As to those of the second class who may desire our guidance and assistance, no attempt should be made either to establish, as to details, any uniform plan for all the different tribes, or to impose any particular system in any particular case, but rather to assist each particular tribe to organize a system which may be agreeable to themselves.

Nothing, it is presumed, in the way of legislation will be done or attempted at the general meeting of the chiefs; but it appears to be desirable that a rudimentary sketch of a simple system of Native local self-government should be prepared by persons competent to the task, to be laid before the meeting for their consideration. Much will be gained if they leave the meeting with the conviction that, whenever they desire some better system than they now possess, the Government will be ready to aid them with advice in framing it, and with contributions towards the support of Native Magistrates to carry it into effect.

If judiciously dealt with, I believe that the present movement in the Native mind may be turned to good account, and that few of the chiefs who have ever formally acknowledged it will continue to be desirous of throwing off the sovereignty of the Crown.

The Native land question remains to be considered, and on its satisfactory solution the ultimate fate of the Maori race no doubt materially depends. The true principle of dealing with the waste lands of the colony is, of course, to acquire and dispose of them in such a manner as may be most conducive to the permanent interests of both races, and to the successful colonization of the country. But the practice which has commonly prevailed, but without any intentional injustice, has been to obtain land from the Natives for the smallest possible price, and to dispose of it in such a manner as might seem most advantageous to the colonizing race. The natural consequences of this one-sided, short-sighted policy are now beginning to be felt: seeing their own race about to be outnumbered by our countrymen,—seeing the larger part of the territory, of which they were once the absolute masters, already in the hands of the stranger,—seeing that they have added nothing to their permanent advantage by disposing of it, but being sensible, on the contrary, of their rapidly-waning power, some of the chiefs in the central part of the Northern Island have formed a league among themselves to hold fast the land which still remains to them. And if it were consistent with the Native character to persevere steadily, for any length of time, in any particular line of action, this combination against the sale of land would threaten to prove a formidable obstacle to the peaceable occupation of the country. And the very eagerness of the settlers to obtain possession of the land of the Natives has a direct tendency to defeat their object. But, if, instead of being urged to sell their land, the Natives were positively prohibited from doing so, they would soon become as clamorous to dispose of it as they are now determined to retain it.

With a view to facilitate the acquisition of the surplus lands of the Natives for purposes of colonization. I have already suggested in a previous memorandum (6th September, 1859) that the partition of land held by them in common should be encouraged; and when the ownership shall have been ascertained after careful inquiry by a competent tribunal, and when it shall have been divided amongst them by mutual agreement amongst themselves, that it should be competent for the Governor and Council nominated by the Crown, (and either with or without an intermediate transfer from the Natives to the Crown) to issue Crown grants to each member of the tribe of his own allotted portion, either in fee-simple absolutely, with full power to dispose of it, or under such limitations and restrictions, and with such power of leasing, &c., as to the Governor and Council may, in each case, seem meet.

A grant in fee-simple to the individual members of a tribe of a specific portion of the common land would confer a title much more valuable in every respect than that which they possess while holding the land in common under the Treaty of Waitangi. For, so long as it is held in common-by the tribe, it cannot be sold even to the Crown without the consent of all the claimants; and even when all are willing to sell, it can be disposed of to the Crown alone; and, there being but a single buyer and no competition, the price given is below the market value. But when the land is divided in severalty by grants from the Crown, each claimant receives both a better holding title and a better selling title. While he continues to hold he has the security of a grant from the Crown, and he may not only sell when he pleases, and without reference to the other members of the tribe, but he may sell not only to the Crown, but to any of Her Majesty's subjects, and obtain the full market value of his land.

By empowering the Governor thus to individualize the Native title, two important objects would be attained. Much of the land held by individual Natives under a Crown title would speedily come into the market and become available for purposes of colonization, and the Governor's power and influence over the Natives would be materially increased. But the granting of individual Crown titles with the full power of sale should, of course, only be made in localities suitable for immediate settlement, and where the Natives are peaceable and well-disposed, and should be firmly withheld within any district in which the Natives are likely to be troublesome and unruly. And there is no doubt that, wisely exercised, this power may be turned to very valuable account as a moral agent in the government of the Native race.

In a country like New Zealand, already partially occupied by an aboriginal race, it is necessary that the Government should retain to itself the power of directing the course of colonization and of limiting it to localities suitable for the purpose; and it is for this reason there are objections of a practical character, why, except under well-considered conditions and restrictions, the settlers should not be allowed to deal directly, with the Natives for the purchase of their land. But it is not easy to see on what principle we can claim to make a profit by the sale and purchase of Native land. Let the Native owners of land themselves receive the 'full market value of it, and, after retaining the full cost of survey, &c., pay over the proceeds to the Native owners; and there is every reason to believe that the surplus lands of the Natives would become available for the purposes of colonization as quickly as may be reasonably required. And, if the Natives could be induced to invest the purchase-money, or any considerable portion of it, at interest for a fixed period in Government securities, or to commute it for Government annuities, the Natives would receive a permanent advantage in exchange for their land, and the Government would have the best guarantee for the continuance of their loyalty and good conduct. But if the flocks and herds of the English settlers go on increasing until there shall be no longer land-enough to feed them, and if at the same time the Natives are seen to hold large tracts of land of which they make no use, the bad feeling which has "already shown itself towards the Native people will continue to spread, there will be continual danger of collision, and there is too much reason to fear that when the colonists shall have become an overwhelming majority Native rights will be disregarded, and the Natives themselves will become a persecuted people.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM SWAINSON.

No. 61. ADDRESS of His Excellency the Governor to the MAORI CHIEFS assembled at Kohimarama on the 10th July, 1860.

MY FRIENDS,—CHIEFS OF NEW ZEALAND,—

I have invited you to meet me on the present occasion that we may have an opportunity of discussing various matters connected with the welfare and advancement of the two races dwelling in New Zealand.

- 2. I take advantage also of it to repeat to you, and, through you, to the whole Maori people, the assurances of good-will on the part of our gracious Sovereign which have been given by each succeeding Governor, from Governor Hobson to myself.

- 3. On assuming the sovereignty of New Zealand Her Majesty extended to her Maori subjects her royal protection, engaging to defend New Zealand and the Maori people from all aggressions from any foreign Power, and imparting to them all the rights and privileges of British subjects; and she confirmed and guaranteed to the chiefs and tribes of New Zealand, and to the respective families and individuals thereof, the full, exclusive, and undisturbed possession of their lands and estates, forests, fisheries, and other properties which they may collectively or individually possess, so long as it is their wish to retain the same in their possession.
- 4. In return for these advantages, the chiefs who signed the Treaty of Waitangi ceded for themselves and their people to Her Majesty the Queen of England, absolutely and without reservation, all the rights and powers of sovereignty which they collectively or individually possessed, or might be supposed to exercise or possess.
- 5. Her Majesty has instructed the Governors who preceded me, and she will instruct those who come after me, to maintain the stipulations of this Treaty inviolate, and watch over the interests and promote the advancement of her subjects without distinction of race.
- 6. Having renewed these assurances in the name of our gracious Sovereign, I now ask you to confer with me frankly and without reserve. If you have grievances, make them known to me, and if they are real I will try to redress them. Her Majesty's wish is that all her subjects should be happy, prosperous, and contented. If, therefore, you can make any suggestions for the better protection of property, the punishment of offenders, the settlement of disputes, or the preservation of peace, I shall gladly hear them and will give them the most favourable consideration.
- 7. The minds of both races have lately been agitated by false reports or exaggerated statements; and, in order to restore confidence, it is necessary that each should know and thoroughly understand what the other wishes and intends.
- 8. There is also a subject to which I desire to invite your special attention, and in reference to which I wish to receive the expression of your views. For some time past certain persons belonging to the tribes dwelling to the south of Auckland have been endeavouring to mature a project which, if carried into effect, could only bring evil upon the heads of all concerned in it. The framers of it are said to desire that the Maori tribes in New Zealand should combine together and throw off their allegiance to the Sovereign whose protection they have enjoyed for more than twenty years, and that they should set up a Maori king, and declare themselves to be an independent nation. Such ideas could only be entertained by men completely ignorant of the evils they would bring upon the whole Native race if carried into effect.
- 9. While the promoters of this scheme confined themselves to mere talking I did not think it necessary to notice their proceedings, believing that, if allowed time to consider, they would abandon so futile and dangerous an undertaking. This expectation has not been fulfilled. At a recent meeting at Waikato some of the leading men proposed that Wiremu Kingi, who is in arms against the Queen's authority, should be supported by reinforcements from the tribes who acknowledge the Maori King; and armed parties from Waikato and Kawhia actually went to Taranaki for this purpose. These men also desire to assume an authority over other New Zealand tribes in their relations with the Government, and contemplate the forcible subjection of those tribes who refuse to recognize their authority.
- 10. Under these circumstances I wish to know your views and opinions distinctly, in order that I may give correct information to our Sovereign.
- 11. It is necessary for me to remind you that Her Majesty's engagements to her Native subjects in New Zealand have been faithfully observed. No foreign enemy has visited your shores. Your lands have remained in your possession, or have been bought by the Government at your own desire. Your people have availed themselves of their privileges as British subjects, seeking and obtaining in the Courts of law that protection and redress which they afford to all Her Majesty's subjects. But it is right you should know and understand that in return for these advantages you must prove yourselves to be loyal and faithful subjects, and that the establishment of a Maori King would be an act of disobedience and defiance to Her Majesty which cannot be tolerated. It is necessary for the preservation of peace in every country that the inhabitants should acknowledge one head.
- 12. I may frankly tell you that New Zealand is the only colony where the aborigines have been treated with unvarying kindness. It is the only colony where they have been invited to unite with the colonists, and to become one people under one law. In other colonies the people of the land have remained separate and distinct, from which many evil consequences have ensued. Quarrels have arisen; blood has been shed; and finally the aboriginal people of the country have been driven away or destroyed. Wise and good men in England considered that such treatment of aborigines was unjust and contrary to the principles of Christianity. They brought the subject before the British Parliament, and the Queen's Ministers advised a change of policy towards the aborigines of all English colonies. New Zealand is the first country colonized on this new and humane system. It will be the wisdom of the Maori people to avail themselves of this generous policy, and thus save their race from evils which have befallen others less favoured. It is your adoption by Her Majesty as her subjects which makes it impossible that the, Maori people should be unjustly dispossessed of their lands or property. Every Maori is a member of the British nation; he is protected by the same law as his English fellow-subject; and it is because you are regarded by the Queen as a part of her own especial people that you have heard from the lips of each successive Governor the same words of peace and good-will. It is therefore the height of folly for the New Zealand tribes to allow themselves to be seduced into the commission of any act which, by violating their allegiance to the Queen, would render them liable to forfeit the rights and privileges which their position as British subjects confers upon them, and which must necessarily entail upon them evils ending only in their ruin as a race.

- 13. It is a matter of solicitude to Her Majesty, as well as to many of your friends in England and in this country, that you should be preserved as a people. No unfriendly feeling should be allowed to grow up between the two races. Your children will live in the country when you are gone, and when the Europeans are numerous. For their sakes I call upon you, as fathers and chiefs of your tribes, to take care that nothing be done which may engender animosities, the consequences of which may injure your posterity. I feel that the difference of language forms a great barrier between the Europeans and Maoris; through not understanding each other there are frequent misapprehensions of what is said or intended: this is also one of the chief obstacles in the way of your participating in our English Councils, and in the consideration of laws for your guidance. To remedy this, the various Missionary bodies, assisted by the Government, have used every exertion to teach your children English, in order that they may speak the same language as the European inhabitants of the colony.
- 14. I believe it is only needful that these matters should be well understood to insure a continuance of peace and friendly feeling between the two races of Her Majesty's subjects; and it is for this reason, and in a firm hope that mutual explanations will remove all doubt and distrust on both sides, that I have invited you to meet me now.
- 15. I shall not seek to prove, what you will all be ready to admit, that the treatment you have received from the Government, since its establishment in these Islands down to the present hour, has been invariably marked by kindness. I will not count the hospitals founded for the benefit of your sick; the schools provided for the education of your children; the encouragement and assistance given you to possess yourselves of vessels, to cultivate wheat, to build mills, and to adopt the civilized habits of your white brethren. I will not enumerate the proofs which have been given you that your interests and well-being have been cared for, lest you should think I am ungenerously recalling past favours. All will admit that not only have your ears listened to the words of kindness, but that your eyes have seen and your hands have handled its substantial manifestations.
- 16. I will not detain you by alluding to other matters of great importance, but will communicate with you from time to time, and call your attention to them before you separate. Let me, however, remind you that, though the Queen is able without any assistance from you to protect the Maoris from all foreign enemies, she cannot without their help protect the Maoris from themselves. It is therefore the duty of all who would regret to see their race relapse into barbarism, and who desire to live in peace and prosperity, to take heed that the counsels of the foolish do not prevail, and that the whole country be not thrown into anarchy and confusion by the folly of a few misguided men.

Finally, I must congratulate you on the vast progress in civilization which your people have made under the protection of the Queen. Cannibalism has been exchanged for Christianity; slavery has been abolished; war has become more rare; prisoners taken in war are not slain. European habits are gradually replacing those of your ancestors of which all Christians are necessarily ashamed. The old have reason to be thankful that their sunset is brighter than their dawn, and the young may be grateful that their life did not begin until the darkness of the heathen night had been dispelled by that light which is the glory of all civilized nations.

Earnestly praying that God may grant his blessing on your deliberations, and guide you to the right path, I leave you to the free discussion of the subjects I have indicated, and of any others you may think likely to promote the welfare of your race.

THOMAS GORE BROWNE, Governor.

No. 62. COPY of a DESPATCH from GOVERNOR T. GORE BROWNE, C.B., to his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE.

Auckland—General Policy of the New Zealand Government. Government House, Auckland, 1st November, 1860.

MY LORD DUKE,—

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of Sir G. C. Lewis's Despatch No. 48, of the 26th July last. As he refers to "a policy requiring the presence of a large force," it is necessary that I should call your Grace's attention to some of the difficulties which must attend the progress towards union of two races dwelling in the same land, yet differing so widely in their wants, wishes, and opinions.

- 2. I need not remind your Grace that prior to 1839 New Zealand had attracted to its shores a swarm of reckless men, determined to settle upon it with or without the consent of Her Majesty's Government; that disorders of all sorts prevailed," and it was found that being "out of our allegiance and protection" was no better security than the threat of it proved in Rhode Island against the commission of enormities, which in New Zealand had not the excuse of religious bigotry.
- 3. Had Her Majesty's Government not interfered there can be no doubt that war and disease would rapidly have consumed the aborigines; that sooner or later they would have been vanquished and destroyed; that anarchy and violence, after reigning unchecked for a time, would have yielded and finally given way; and that in the course of time an industrious European population, loving order and obedient to law, would have, inherited the land, which their predecessors had so ruthlessly acquired.
- 4. Her Majesty's Government was not, however, content to permit the disasters of the transition state to continue for an indefinite time; and Lord Normanby, in his despatch of the 14th August 1839, says that "the necessity [for interference] had become too evident to admit of further inaction," and that the object of Her Majesty's Government is to mitigate, and, if possible, avert, the disasters [enumerated], and to secure the emigrants themselves from the evils of a lawless state of society."
- 5. The emigrants were rescued from these evils; many desperate men left a country in which they could no longer carry on their lawless practices; and settlers of the best class poured into the colony, bringing with them their own laws and that love of order which characterizes all Anglo-Saxon communities.
- 6 These laws are especially applicable to such communities so long as they remain united; and in the early days of the colony it would have been easy to regulate settlement and restrain individuals from spreading broadcast over the country. In 1839, and for some time after, there would have been no difficulty in extinguishing Native title over vast territories, and to have declared English districts within which alone the Queen's law should be paramount, extending these districts from time to time as opportunity offered, and leaving the Maoris to follow their own customs in the remainder of the country, aiding them by Missionaries and other instructors to advance in civilization, and waiting until they desired and became fit to be one people with us.
- 7. This course was not adopted, but English law was by a fiction assumed to prevail over the whole colony; and Lord Normanby (15th August, 1839) speaks of the repression of "cannibalism human sacrifices, and warfare among the Native tribes .... by actual force within any part of the Queen's dominions." The Governor, however, had no means of using force, and tacitly permitted these customs to continue: indeed, the last is not yet extinguished; nor were any sufficient measures adopted for controlling and guiding the stream of immigration, or the erratic movements of individuals.
- 8. The assumed predominance of English law was not, however, harmless; one of its marked characteristics—namely, the, independence of action enjoyed by individuals living under its shadow, even at the cost of the community—is inconsistent with the safety of a, society of which the component parts though living in juxtaposition, are in the opposite extremes of civilization. As an example. I may observe that in many parts of India shooting a monkey or kite would produce an insurrection, and consequently regulations are enforced which would be absurd and intolerable in Europe.
- 9. In New Zealand the acts or even the suspected acts of an individual—vide my despatch of even date herewith—are always liable to be revenged on the whole community, or upon those of his race who are mostly easily within reach. Yet Englishmen are restrained by no special laws; they have been allowed to spread over the country at will, and are tacitly permitted to act, speak, and write with as much impunity as they would in a civilized community; while the Government is held responsible for the consequences of imprudence, whether it affects only the individuals themselves or the community at large.

- 10. There is, I believe, little doubt that the King movement has been fostered and advanced by Europeans, and Government has been constantly thwarted, misrepresented, and hindered by persons whose conduct is no ways amenable to law.
- 11. The result has been that English law has always prevailed in the English settlements, but remains a dead-letter beyond them; that Government has been continually exposed to contempt from being unable to perform its duty, and has been driven, to temporize and ignore aggression or crime, which it could neither prevent nor punish.
- 12. A large annual grant from the Imperial Treasury, full power, and great tact enabled sir George Grey to keep the country tranquil; but he was unable to establish any system or machinery which could effectually prevent the collision of elements so discordant as those with which the New Zealand Government has to deal. When the Constitution Act was prepared, a second opportunity was offered to declare English provinces, and leave Maori districts beyond their pale to be governed by laws specially adapted to the people inhabiting them. Instead of so doing, however, the 71st clause of the Act declares that "It may be expedient that the laws, customs, and usages of the aboriginal inhabitants of New Zealand, so far as they are not repugnant to the general principles of humanity should for the present be maintained "for the, government of themselves in their relations to and dealings with each other," &c. This leaves the difficulty unsolved, either as relates to the customs which are repugnant to the principles of humanity, or to their dealings of any sort with Europeans who have been permitted to scatter themselves thinly over the whole Northern Island.
- 13. It has been urged that by a judicious use of moral influence the Maoris might have been induced to adopt a system of self-government which would have supplied the place of English law. To exert this influence successfully has been the study of my predecessors and myself, and the aim of the legislation of 1858, in which I cordially concurred. But while the difficulties attending the transition of the aborigines from absolute barbarism to comparative civilization have been annually increasing, the power of the Governor has been diminished and divided, and the funds at his disposal greatly reduced. In plain terms, the means which Government could command have not been sufficient for the attainment of the end desired.
- 14. I now turn to the question of protection, and I venture to say that when Her Majesty's Government declared New Zealand a colony, and invited the industrious and law-loving classes to emigrate an assurance of protection was certainly directly or indirectly given, and without it these men would never have left their native land. If, however, Her Majesty's Government is prepared to "punish aggression, defend the centres of population, and hold the keys of the country," as intimated by Sir C. Lewis in his despatch above referred to, all will be done that has been asked or can reasonably be expected. It then only remains to inquire what force is necessary for the purpose, what part of the expenses should be paid by the colony, and what part of the actual duty the settlers should perform by means of Volunteers or Militia.
- 15. With regard to the first, I have already stated my opinion in decided terms, and will not presume to intrude it again on your Grace's notice. The payment of expenses might, I submit, be arranged with the General Assembly. I agree with William Denison in thinking that, as a general rule, a colony able to afford it should pay 50 per cent, of the cost of its military protection. I am also of opinion that, when the finances (as in the case of New Zealand) are unable to bear such a burden, they should be relieved of an additional percentage, subject to readjustment every three, or five years.
- 16. I now come to the employment of Volunteers and Militia. In the Mother-country where there is a surplus population, the employment of this valuable and constitutional force is attended with little or no inconvenience, and even in the colonies the enrolment of Militia and Volunteers for the protection of their homes is both necessary and effective. But though this description of force may always be used on an emergency occurring in the district from which it is raised, it can never be sent out of that district without payment, which must be as much in excess of a soldier's pay as the settler's labour and his expenses are greater than those of an English labourer. Labour is at least worth 5s. a day in a colony; and a large proportion of those who form the rank and file of Militia and Volunteer corps are farmers, tradesmen, and persons possessing stock or engaged in business which would be ruined by their, absence for any length of time. For this reason also Militia cannot be called out to act continuously as a guard to prevent an attack" which may be apprehended at an uncertain time. This is indeed the case at the present moment; it is certain that, if guards could be posted in various parts of the City of Auckland every night, there would be little or no danger of attack, with which it has been seriously threatened. Except as an auxiliary to regular troops in the district in which it is raised, a colonial militia is therefore the most expensive force which can be employed; and, though equal in bravery and perhaps superior in activity to Her Majesty's troops, it is not usually found to be so effective for continuous operations. I need not add that the withdrawal of the productive classes from their employments must necessarily reduce the revenues called upon to, bear the additional burden of their support, would incapacitate the colony from bearing its fair share of military expenses, and that emigration to a ruinous extent would follow such a measure if generally adopted.

- 17. One subject remains. Sir C. Lewis says that "a policy requiring the presence of a large force condemns itself." But the adoption of a policy must depend on the means, available for carrying it into effect, and these have been too limited to admit of choice. With 'insufficient funds, circumscribed powers, and inadequate assistance, I have had to contend with difficulties inseparable from the association, without union, of two races in opposite extremes of civilization. I have, however, explained my views on the government of the Native race in various despatches and memoranda, and I am not without hope that the attention which this unfortunate insurrection has awakened will be productive, of ultimate benefit, and will lead to the introduction of such a system of government as will be in accordance with "the wishes of the Natives, and will not be open to the criticism contained in Sir C. Lewis's despatch.

No. 63.APPOINTMENT of MINISTER for NATIVE AFFAIRS.

[Extract from the New Zealand Gazette.] Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 10th November, 1860.

His Excellency the Governor directs it to be notified that the Honourable Frederick" Aloysius Weld has been appointed Minister for Native Affairs.

E. W.STAFFORD.

Copy of a DESPATCH from GOVERNOR GORE BEOWNE to his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE.

On the Establishment of a Native Council. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 4th February, 1861.
My Lord. Duke,—

As a part of the scheme for a, Native Council; I assumed that the member's would associate with themselves three or four Native chiefs of the, highest rank, for the, sake of the influence they would bring, as well as for, their advice. Two out of the three gentlemen whose, names, I submitted to your Grace for, appointment in the Council entertain the same views; the third (Colonel Nugent) being, in England.

Looking, therefore, to the future, as well as to the present, it occurred to me that it would be advantageous to seek the advice of three or four Native chiefs now; and, by consulting Messrs Bell and McLean, I felt that I could do so without interfering with any future/arrangements they might desire to make. I accordingly submitted the question to these, gentlemen, and Mr. Smith (the very able Assistant Native Secretary,), and I have now the honour to forward for your Grace's information reports made by these officers separately, and a minute by my Responsible Advisers.

I trouble your Grace with these documents partly on account of the information they contain, and partly because they exhibit some of the many difficulties which surround every attempt to introduce improvements in the management of Native affairs.

I have, &c.,

T.GORE. BROWN

His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, &c.

Enclosure 1.MEMORANDUM by the NATIVE SECRETARY.

In reply to your Excellency's memorandum of this day's date, I have the honour to state that I consider the appointment of chiefs to assist the Government in the administration of Native affairs very desirable. The advice and opinions of chiefs of rank and intelligence would be invaluable to the Government in guiding its decisions on any questions of importance affecting the Native race.

The chiefs appointed should reside at the seat, of Government, and have comfortable residences provided for them at the public expense, with pay to each at the rate of £200 per annum. A distinguishing dress should be provided; and their office should be permanent, subject to termination only in cases of misconduct: Their duties should be defined by clear and intelligible instructions; and the Governor; in travelling through Native districts; should be accompanied by one or more of them, who should be present at all meetings, and take part in public discussions or deliberations with the several tribes.

The Maoris; generally, would very much appreciate the fact that some of their own leading chiefs were invited to exercise authority in connection with the Government, in matters relating to them selves; and the Government, by free consultation with those chiefs, would be better able to judge how far any measures, that might from time to time be devised for the civilization and improvement of the Natives; Would be attended with success:

I submit that the' Government of the country should use every possible endeavour to restore and secure the confidence of the Natives, more especially of those tribes who have not joined in the present insurrection. The appointment of some of the influential chiefs to offices of trust at a time when military advantages are being gained over those taking part in the existing-disturbances; would tend very much to inspire them with confidence as to the humane intentions of the English nation towards them, and dispel much of the disaffection and antipathy of race which unfortunately prevail.

Auckland,

31st January, 1861.

DONALD McLEAN.

Enclosure 2.MEMORANDUM by the ASSISTANT NATIVE SECRETARY.

Auckland, 1st February, 1861

With reference to the subject of your Excellency's memorandum of the 30th ultimo, I, have the honour to state briefly my opinion, that it is highly desirable that some of the principal Native chiefs should assist the Executive Government with their advice in the conduct of Native affairs; and that such an arrangement, if made with the general concurrence of the Native people, would materially tend to secure their confidence, in the Government. At the same time I feel bound to express to your Excellency my conviction that the present time is not the most opportune for initiating the new system. I fear that, until the establishment of more cordial relations between the Government and, the Native race generally, the acceptance by any Native chief of such an appointment as is proposed, involving removal from among his own people would place him in an invidious position, and that by identifying him with the Government under present circumstances it would tend to impair the influence which he might otherwise exercise.

As a means towards bringing the present war to a termination, I see no ground for anticipating any good result from, an immediate carrying-out of the proposed arrangement. The selection must necessarily be restricted to those chiefs whose sympathies or professions are unequivocally on the side of the Government, and who by the declaration of their sentiments have rendered themselves more or less obnoxious to many of their countrymen. Such men would probably render better service to the Government by remaining among their own people. As a prominent feature in a new system to be introduced when peace is restored, the proposed arrangement is calculated to produce the best results'; but, while so large a portion of the Native population is either disaffected or wavering, I should hesitate to recommend its initiation.

I am also of opinion that the concurrence of the Natives in any new plans for their government is essential. To secure this, such plans should in the first place be suggested as matter for consideration, 'rather, than announced as the determination of the Government arrived at without consulting the wishes of the people for whose benefit they are designed. The Native Conference would afford an opportunity for bringing forward the subject, and I have little doubt that a proposal such as that contained in your Excellency's memorandum would there meet with general approval.

As the selection of men would be a matter of some delicacy, it might be well to invite the Conference to prepare a list of chiefs of standing and intelligence, and enjoying the confidence of their respective tribes, to be submitted to the Governor. From such a list a certain number might be selected and appointed councilors to hold office for a limited period, at the expiration of which another selection should be made, and from time to time repeated, so that all might hold office in turn. With these I would propose to associate a few of the principal chiefs to be selected by the Governor, whose appointments should be considered permanent during good behaviour. A Council of twelve chiefs might be thus constituted', who should be consulted by the Executive Government in all matters pertaining to the administration of Native affairs. As it would be desirable that the members of such a Council should reside principally at the seat of Government, suitable accommodation should be provided for them, and they should receive salaries sufficient to enable them to maintain a position in society befitting their rank and office. It would be undesirable to initiate the proposed plan unless a guarantee for its permanency can be secured.

As-respects the precise number or mode of selecting the Native Councillors, no strict rule need be laid down: these and" similar matters of detail might be made the subject of deliberation in the Native Conference.

In the introduction of the proposed system, I submit; as important points; first, that the expressed wishes of the Natives themselves should be made the basis of all action on the part of the Government; and, secondly, that the Governor should exercise an independent discretion in the selection of not less than one-half of the members of the proposed Council to hold permanent appointments.

THOS. H.SMITH, Assistant Native
Secretary.

His Excellency Colonel T. Gore Brown, C.B

Enclosure 3.MEMORANDUM by the LAND CLAIMS

COMMISSIONER.

I have always been of opinion that the appointment of a number of chiefs to advise the Governor is essential to the successful conduct of Native affairs. The Native Council proposed to be established will certainly not work well unless some Native chiefs are to be associated with it, and I understand this has been admitted on all sides. No really permanent influence over the Native mind towards the full recognition of the Queen's authority and the establishment of British law will ever be gained • except through the agency of the Native people itself; and the present proposal is a step in the right direction.

But its value depends on whether it is intended to be a merely temporary measure in consequence of the war, or the germ of a permanent plan. Ought the position of the chiefs to be raised, or not? The policy recommended to the Governor by Archdeacon in 1856 was that "the Government should do nothing towards establishing the influence of the chiefs, but should rather endeavour to lessen this by, every legitimate means." Now, the influence of the chiefs has already sensibly diminished everywhere since the establishment of British sovereignty: we destroyed the right of the strong arm, and offered nothing in its stead. In times of danger we have often owed our safety to what remained of power among the chiefs, but in times of peace and security we have been inclined to neglect them. I believe the policy recommended by Archdeacon was unwise, and contrary to the natural instincts of the Polynesian races; and that the best thing we can do is to raise the character and position of the chiefs, not certainly by remitting to them the right of the strong arm, but by encouraging them to seek European honours and a share in the government. I think the most proper course would be to invite the Conference which will assemble this year to consider the advisability of permanently establishing at the seat of Government a small number of chiefs as a recognized medium of communication and advice between the Governor, and the Native tribes. The Conference should then be asked to consider whether such chiefs ought to be elected by the tribes, or be chosen by the Governor out of a list of chiefs submitted by the Conference, or be wholly or partly nominated directly by the Governor; whether their appointment should be for life or for a term of years, or a number of chiefs be sent up by rotation to take part in the government, and attain a practical insight into the conduct of affairs on the European system; whether part of the number should have a fixed tenure of office, and the others come in by rotation, so as to combine steadiness of action in one direction with varying suggestion and advice, and so forth. The Government would indicate the plan it preferred, but the decision should be as much as possible left to the Natives themselves, either in the Conference, or (as was done last year in the case of the Message on Individualization of Titles) in subsequent discussion by the tribes in their own districts. Undoubtedly any such plan would require a considerable expenditure, and could not, therefore, be carried into effect without the sanction of the Assembly. It would be" absolutely useless without some guarantee of permanence, and without adequate provision for raising the chiefs selected, not only in the estimation of their countrymen, but in that of the European settlers. To bring a number of chiefs together in Auckland as advisers of the Governor, and leave them to shift for themselves in the Maori hostelry, would be an absurdity. A suitable residence should be appointed for them, a moderate income (say £100 per annum) granted to each, and reasonable means afforded for their exercise of: hospitality to other chiefs from various parts of the country; who should be encouraged by the Government to visit and communicate with them. There should, in fact, be the "Assessors' House," where measures might be talked over by the most intelligent men apart from the presence and influence of Government officers; and the chiefs throughout the country should be invited to write freely to the Assessors direct.'

With regard to the immediate appointment of four or five principal chiefs to advise the Governor in the existing crisis, I think it would have a good effect provided a careful notification were published to the Natives, informing them that it was the Governor's wish to propose a permanent plan to the General Assembly and the Native Conference, and that the summoning of a few chiefs in the mean-time was intended to show the people that, while the war was unavoidably prosecuted for the repression of insurrection, the Governor was most desirous to treat even the insurgents with lenity, and to resort to the advice of those who remained firm in their allegiance for the measures necessary for the restoration of peace. The Government would, no doubt, run some risk (by, now summoning the most influential among the loyal chiefs) of losing the very influence which is at this time being beneficially exerted by them in their own districts. They would very likely be pointed at, as "Governor's men," and whatever they said misrepresented as the Governor's opinion and not theirs. Even the most loyal are obliged, in the increasing spread of disaffection, to pretend more or less of sympathy with the causes of complaint among the disaffected, in order to maintain any hold whatever on their people; and their removal to the seat of Government might sacrifice that hold in their own neighbourhoods without our obtaining in exchange any influence when exercised from head-quarters. Still, if the Natives of the various tribes can be made to see the experiment as a proof of continued good-will on the part of the Government, and of its desire to consult their wishes and interests, it will result in very much good: on the whole, therefore, I am of opinion that it should be tried. The Governor would then, for the present, nominate the chiefs himself, and make temporary arrangements for their reception in Auckland, until the Assembly should decide whether (as a permanent institution) a Maori Council of advice should exist, and vote the necessary funds for its maintenance.

Enclosure 4.MEMORANDUM byMINISTERS.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 4th February, 1861.

Ministers have had under their consideration three memoranda referred to them by His Excellency embodying the respective views of the Native Secretary, the Assistant Native Secretary, and Mr. Bell as to the desirability of constituting a Council composed of persons belonging to the Native race to assist the Governor in the conduct of Native affairs. Ministers agree with those gentlemen in thinking that it would be desirable to introduce a Native element in the government of the aborigines, and when the Native Council Act was under discussion it was understood that this should be done. No formal enactment to this effect, however, was introduced into that Act, as it was deemed inadvisable to create a permanent machinery which after further experience might appear inconvenient.

Under these circumstances, and having regard to the objections raised to an immediate adoption of the plan proposed by two of the three gentlemen to whom the question has been referred it appears to Ministers that it would not be advisable to take action in the matter for the present.

MEMORANDUM by His Excellency the GOVERNOR.

On Establishment of a Court for Settlement of Disputed Land Claims,

- 1. The possibility of establishing a Court for the settlement of disputed claims to land (over which the Native title has not been extinguished), whether between Maoris themselves or between the Government and Maoris, is a subject to which the Governor desires to call the attention of Ministers If it is possible to devise any plan which is likely to be practically useful, he thinks it should be embodied in a Bill, and should be referred to in the Governor's Speech on opening the next session of the Assembly.
- 2. The Governor thinks that arrangements should be made to separate the office of Land Purchase Commissioner from that of Native Secretary.

Government House, Auckland,

T. GORE BROWNE

MEMORANDUM by Mr. STAFFORD.

If such a Court as the Governor suggests could be established, and the Natives be induced to refer disputes with respect to their land claims to its arbitrament, the result would be most beneficial. It is to be feared that the greatest difficulty would be found, to arise from the indisposition of the more powerful chiefs to submit to decisions adverse to their pretensions. The constitution of such a Court requires consideration. Referred to the Minister for Native Affairs and the Attorney General with that object.

The separation of the officers referred to in the last paragraph of this memorandum can be carried out at once, and the doing so will be in accordance with, a resolution of the House of Representatives last session.

E. W. STAFFORD.

MEMORANDUM by Mr. WHITAKER.

This appears to me to be a question for the Native Council. I think it would be wrong to take so important a step just before its establishment as the constitution of such a Court as that referred to the result of which, under any circumstances doubtful, will much depend on the details.

23rd April, 1861.

FREDK. WHITAKER.

MEMORANDUM by Mr. WELD.

I see no difficulty in the establishment of a Court of Appeal on land questions, if the Assembly will grant the necessary funds, I should commence by establishing a Court of Appeal consisting of a Commissioner and two Native chiefs, at good salaries. The Court would necessarily be peripatetic and I would strengthen it by the assistance of Native Assessors, whose local influence and knowledge would be of much value. I think that the jurisdiction of the Court should at first be confined to hearing appeals from the decisions of the Land Purchase Commissioner, and to the settlement of such land questions as may be referred to it by the consent of both parties. I am not at the present moment disposed to attempt more than this. I think that the immediate establishment of such a Court would throw open the way for the establishment of Courts with larger jurisdiction; but, before we give a Court power to deal with all land questions, we must be in a position to enforce its decrees in all cases or at least the Natives must have time to learn to appreciate the advantages of such a tribunal, and to give it their full confidence and support. Until we see some prospect of such a result—either from the well-working of such a Court as I propose, or from some desire expressed by the almost universal and decidedly-expressed wish of the Natives themselves (who should be invited to discuss the subject at the next Conference)—I think we should be ill advised to go beyond a Court of Appeal and Reference. I concur with the Attorney-General in thinking that this subject is one that the Native Council (if established) should consider and advise upon, but in any case the next session should not be allowed to pass over without action on this matter. The details need not be finally arranged at present, but the subject might be alluded to in the Governor's Speech at the opening of the session in connection with a grant of money, which I believe to be imperatively necessary for this and other Native purposes, and which I believe it will be the duty of Ministers to propose next session.

In reference to the separation of the office of Land Purchase Commissioner from that of Native secretary I have already expressed my strong desire that it should be done as soon as possible. Some time ago I requested the Native Secretary to furnish me with all the information that might be necessary to aid in the reorganization of the department. The urgent duties on which he has been since employed involving his absence from Auckland, have alone prevented steps having been taken in that direction; but, at the same time, I do not see how anything can be effectively carried out until the establishment of the Native Council is authorized by the Home Government, or at least until their answer is received on the subject. As soon as that is received the reorganization of the whole department should be proceeded with with the least possible delay. I trust it may yet be effected, before the Assembly, meets.

No. 66. Copy of a DESPATCH from his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE to Governor GORE BROWNE, C.B.

Relative to Appointment of Sir George Grey as. Governor. Downing Street, 25th May, 1861.

SIR,—

I have perused with much anxiety the intelligence respecting the progress of the Native war which is contained in your despatches recently arrived. I cannot but perceive that, in spite of some symptoms of a desire on the part of the Natives for the restoration of peace, little effect has really been produced hitherto by the military operations at Taranaki, and that, notwithstanding all the efforts of yourself and your Advisers, the disaffection of the- Maoris is extending itself to those tribes whose amity, or at least whose neutrality, has hitherto been hoped for; and is assuming a more organized form and a more definite object. I am far, indeed, from ascribing this untoward course of, events to those who are responsible for the conduct of affairs in New Zealand. On the contrary, I recognize with pleasure the sound and impartial judgment, the integrity, intelligence and anxiety for the public good which have characterized your government of the colony for nearly six years. The present conjuncture, however, renders it necessary for Her Majesty's Government to leave no expedient untried which is calculated to arrest the course of events now unhappily so unpromising, and at the same time to provide for the future difficulties which there is only too much reason to anticipate even if the war should happily be soon brought to a conclusion.

Having regard therefore to the peculiar qualifications and experience of Sir. George Grey, now governing the Cape of Good Hope, I have felt that I should be neglecting a chance of averting a more general and disastrous war if I omitted to avail myself of the remarkable authority which will attach to his name and character as Governor of New Zealand. I trust therefore that you will not feel it as any slight on yourself that I should have determined to place the government of the Islands in his hands at a moment when your own term of office has all but expired and you would have no opportunity of providing against those future difficulties to which I have referred. I hope that, in doing so, I shall not deprive the Crown for any long period of the advantage of your services.

I have communicated to Sir George Grey my wish that, as the matter is one of urgency, he should lose no time in proceeding to New Zealand, for the purpose of assuming the government. My confidence in your public spirit assures me that in transferring it to him you will give him every assistance and information which is calculated to facilitate his dealings whether with the local Government or with the friendly or hostile Maoris. I have only to add that, in case you should be disposed to accept another Australian Government, it may be convenient that instead of repairing to this country you should remain for a short time in Sydney, until I am able to communicate with you more definitely upon that subject.

No. 67. Copy of a DESPATCH from his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE, K.G., to Governor Sir GEORGE GREY.

Instructions to Governor Grey on his Return to New Zealand. Downing Street; 5th June, 1861,
SIR,—

With reference to my despatch of even date herewith, I am anxious to address to you a few observations which, without fettering your action in the discharge of the important duties—which await you in New Zealand, will serve to indicate the main objects which, in the judgment of Her Majesty's Government, you should keep in view, and the nature of the means by which they may probably be attained.

I need hardly say that the first of these objects, and the one which Her Majesty's Government have most at heart, is the establishment of peace. In calling, upon you to proceed to New Zealand, they have been mainly influenced by the hope that your intimate knowledge of the Natives, the reputation which you enjoy among them, and the confidence with which you formerly inspired them;—may enable you to bring this deplorable warfare to a close earlier than might be in the power of any other man. I shall not attempt to prescribe the conditions of peace which I may think ought to be imposed or accepted; but I wish to impress upon you my conviction that, in deciding upon those conditions, it will be your duty, while avoiding all unnecessary severity towards men who can scarcely be looked upon as subjects in rebellion, to take care that neither your own mission nor the cessation of hostilities when it arrives shall carry with it in the eyes of the Natives any appearance of weakness or alarm. It would be better even to prolong the war, with all its evils, than to end it without producing in the Native mind such a conviction of our strength as may render peace not temporary and precarious; but well-grounded and lasting. If the Maoris acquire that conviction and if they find themselves, as I trust and believe they will, treated by the Government after their defeat with as much fairness and consideration as they received before, much will have been done to secure the future welfare and harmony of the two races which inhabit New Zealand.

It will be your further duty, and that one of no little difficulty, to endeavour to place the administration of Native affairs upon a more satisfactory footing than that on which it has hitherto stood. The latest attempt made to improve that administration consists in the Native Council Act, which was passed at the close of the last session of the New-Zealand Parliament. I shall not advise the Crown to bring that Act into operation until I shall have received a report upon it from you as a portion of the general subject: unless, indeed, you should feel satisfied of the necessity of acting upon its provisions without delay, in which case you will be at liberty to propose a short Act to the General Assembly bringing the Native Council Act into immediate operation without a further reference Home. You will find that this measure was accompanied in its passage through the Assembly by a resolution of that body addressed to Governor Gore Browne, and a message from him in reply, which professes to lay down the future relations between the Governor and the Responsible Ministry in the administration of Native affairs. These documents, have, however, conveyed no clear idea to my mind as to the intentions of the respective parties: and it will be your duty to endeavour to place those relations on such a footing as will insure that harmony and efficiency which the present system has failed to produce, in spite of the zeal and ability of Governor Gore Browne, who has frequently urged its deficiencies upon my consideration and that of my predecessors.

With an improved machinery of administration, with your well-earned influence over the Natives, and with, I trust, the cordial co-operation of your Ministers and the Legislature, which you will make every effort to secure, I look forward to the introduction by you of some institutions of civil government and some rudiments of law and order into those Native districts whose inhabitants have hitherto been subjects of the Queen in little more than in name, notwithstanding the well-meant colonial legislation of the last few years. I may add that your experience in British Kaffraria would seem to recommend a system under which a certain number of the Native chiefs should be attached to the Government by the payment of salaries and the recognition of their dignity, and should at the same time be assisted by Resident Magistrates in administering justice within their respective districts or tribes. It will be for you to consider how far the policy you have pursued towards the natives of South-Africa may be suited to those of New Zealand, considering the circumstances in which the Maori differs from the Kaffir, and the superiority in many respects of the former over the latter.

But, whatever be the system which you may be led to adopt for the management of Native districts, two things are evidently essential to its successful establishment—sufficient power and sufficient funds. The first you will, I trust, find in the co-operation of the Natives themselves, in the temporary presence of a large military-force, and in the support of the New Zealand Parliament. For the latter, also, you will have to appeal to that body; and I feel the utmost confidence, strengthened by observation of its past conduct, that it will see clearly its duty and its interest, and will vote with liberality the sums necessary to carry into effect a well-considered plan of Native government and civilization. In order, however, that no aid which Her Majesty's Government can afford you may be wanting, I shall think it my duty to advise Her Majesty to issue Letters Patent conferring upon you all the powers which can be conferred upon the Governor under the Constitution Act. For this purpose I have consulted the Law Officers of the Crown, and, as soon as I have obtained from their high authority, an exact definition, of the limits of those powers, I will furnish you with full instructions on the subject. I will only here observe that the most important of the Crown's powers not hitherto exercised is that of declaring Native districts, with the effect of withdrawing them, for purely Native purposes, from the jurisdiction of the General Assembly or Provincial Councils, or both. It will be for you and your Ministers, aided probably by the proposed Council, to consider whether a colonial law might not with advantage be passed, withdrawing such districts for all purposes, from the provinces within which they are nominally included; and whether a distinct legislation and administration, in which the Natives themselves should take a part, would not better promote the present "harmony and future union of the two races than the fictitious uniformity, of law which now prevails, or than any attempt, to introduce the Natives (in their present condition) into the electoral body of the colony, either provincial or general.

I have not yet alluded particularly to one most important portion of the, subject, closely connected with the origin of the present disturbances: I mean the system under which the purchase of Native lands is now, and ought to be in future, conducted. You will direct your earliest attention to this subject, examining whether the system of negotiation between the agents of the Governor and the Native owners, though in, conformity with the Treaty, of Waitangi and for many years successful, may not in the present condition of the Natives and settlers require to be, modified or superseded.; and whether, if it should in whole or in part be maintained, some tribunal cannot be established, entitled to confidence of both parties, for the purpose of adjudicating upon disputed claims when urged in a legal and peaceable manner. In connection with this topic I have now to indicate to you generally the nature of the concessions which Her Majesty's Government would be prepared to make, with a view to a satisfactory arrangement of Native-administration;. and upon learning from you that you had succeeded in concluding such an arrangement with the representatives of the colonists,—first, they will be prepared, to the extent which you may think wise, to waive the serious objections to such changes, as those, proposed by the Native Territorial Rights Act of 1858, which led to the non-confirmation, of that measure, and were pointed out in the despatch of my predecessor (signed by Lord Carnarvon) of the 18th May, 1859. They will accordingly be willing to assent to any prudent plan for the individualization of Native title, and for direct purchase under proper safeguards of; Native lands by individual settlers, which the New Zealand Parliament may wish to adopt. Secondly, they will consider, with the strongest desire to acquiesce in them, any Ministerial arrangement for the conduct of Native affairs which may appear, safe to yourself and be acceptable to the colonists. Thirdly; they will be ready to, treat the colony with as much indulgence as their duty will permit on the subject of the charges of military protection, and the number of troops to be maintained in. New Zealand.

I have to add one proviso applicable to the three subjects with which I have just dealt, which, however obvious, must be distinctly laid down. Whatever may be the future arrangements as to the purchase of Native land or administration of Native affairs, or whatever may be the amount of force maintained in the colony, or whatever the source from which its cost shall be defrayed, it will be impossible for Her Majesty's Government to authorize the Governor of New Zealand to employ Her Majesty's troops in suppressing Native disturbances, unless he shall have been thoroughly conversant with, and personally consenting to, every measure of the local Government which, in its operation, may have unfortunately led to the necessity of so employing them; and this principle, the justice of which can hardly be questioned, must govern all the arrangements which you may be able to make in concert with the local authorities on the subject of Native affairs. But I am at the same time fully, aware that, under a, Constitution such as that which New Zealand possesses, the value of the above proviso is far less real than it might appear, and that the practical power which a Governor is likely to exercise is of a negative and an uncertain character. Such being the case, Her Majesty's Government can only trust that the good sense and good feeling of the colonists will lead them to a cordial understanding with the Representative of the Crown for the purpose of effectually promoting the civilization and good government of the Natives, and thus securing their friendship and contentment. Should, unhappily, a contrary course be pursued—which I will not anticipate—there would be no security against future Native wars, while it would be impossible for any Government in this country to supply Imperial troops at Imperial charge, in order to avert from the colonists the disastrous consequences of a policy which would have been pursued against their advice, and over which they could, under the actual Constitution of the colony, exercise so little control.

No. 68. Copy, of a DESPATCH from Governor GORE BROWNE C.B., to his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE.

Waikato.—On the Military Force necessary. Government House, Auckland, New Zealand, 6th July, 1861.
My Lord Duke,—

I have the honour to forward a printed copy of the declaration to the Waikatos, and W. Tamihana's reply to the same; a report of a Select Committee of both Houses of the Assembly; and an extract from the Proceedings of the Executive Council on the same subject.

Tamihana's reply must convince the most sceptical that the purchase of land at the Waitara was the excuse and not the cause of the war; that its real cause was a deep-rooted longing for separate nationality, which had been growing for years, and could never have been stifled by palliatives of any sort: and there is every reason to believe that it has spread far and wide throughout the South of this Island. All doubt, therefore, is now at an end; and it is evident that, if the Maoris will not submit, this part of the colony must be abandoned by all who will not yield obedience to Maori law, of which the aptest symbol is the tomahawk.

War, in a country occupied as this is by settlers and stockowners, thinly spread over its whole surface, must necessarily be disastrous to both races; property must be abandoned, houses deserted, the settlers must rally round the centres of population, and many who are in comparative wealth will be reduced to extreme poverty. Nothing can be done to alleviate that suffering which is the inseparable accompaniment of war under such circumstances; but it ought to be brought to an end in the least possible time. Every day's prolongation of war adds to the destruction of life and property, and diminishes the means possessed by the colony for paying its share of the expense. It follows, therefore, that a force large enough to bring the war to a conclusion in a single campaign would be less costly to the Imperial Government, and far more merciful to both races, than a very much smaller one, if that end could only be attained by a longer time.

The question is, therefore, Could a war against the Waikatos and their allies be brought to an early conclusion with the force now at the disposal of General Cameron? My Responsible Advisers, and the Select Committee of both Houses of the Assembly (which, I am informed, represents the views of the Assembly generally), are of opinion that it cannot. Under ordinary circumstances it would not be my duty to offer an opinion on the subject; but the lives of many and the properties of all the settlers in this Island are at stake, and I do not, therefore, hesitate to say that I agree with them, and desire to repeat the opinions expressed concisely in my Despatch No. 51, of the 13th April last. In order to bring the Maoris to submission in the course of one or two seasons, I believe it is absolutely necessary that the General should have a movable column of not less than three thousand rank and file; that he should be able to keep up a chain of communication with his advanced post, which should be in the centre of the Waikato—one hundred miles from Auckland. I have every reason to believe that the insurgents will only partially obstruct his course by occupying strong natural positions, and rifle-pits; but while he advances they will spread over the country in small parties, attacking the settlements (which occupy the circumference of the Island, while they inhabit the centre), and carrying destruction far and wide. To meet this the settlers will have to congregate in the large towns; and the force in these towns should be such that, though unable to take the field regularly, they should be able to make sallies against any parties of moderate strength coming within their reach, and prevent the Maoris from carrying off stock, which would furnish them with the means of prolonging: their resistance indefinitely. If this could not be done, the Natives would consider success in the smaller settlements as compensation for any loss in the Waikato; and they would be justified in so doing, for the Waikatos have little or nothing to lose, while our settlements would be reduced to beggary.

I agree with the Committee in thinking that the garrisons in the towns in the South are not strong enough to do more than act on the defensive, and the General states that if he were now to reinforce these garrisons he will be unable to take the field with an efficient body of men. By his letter (copies of which are forwarded by this mail) he calculates on the organization of a considerable force of Militia, and animadverts on the supineness of the local Government in this respect. The subject is reported on in a separate despatch. I differ from the General, however, as to the practicability of organizing such a force of Militia as would be sufficient for our purposes. The constant employment of so large a portion of the male population (estimated in this Island at eight thousand fighting men) would destroy the source of the revenue from which the colony can alone pay its share of the expenses of the war, and deprive it and the troops of the service of the industrial part of the community, without which it would not be easy to subsist. I say nothing of the vast expenses of a Militia in which the men are necessarily paid half a crown a day, in addition to rations and equipment when in the field.

The amount of force which may be necessary to subdue the Maoris once and for all, and prevent a lingering war, is of course, a matter of opinion; but I believe it would be the, cheapest in the end and by far the most merciful to both the Maori and the settlers, if Her Majesty's Government would send out such a number of men as would enable General Cameron to confront the Maoris at all points, and bring this unhappy insurrection to a speedy termination. I hope to be able to bring a number of the Ngapuhi Tribe to assist, but it will not be safe to rely implicitly on their support.

Requesting that a Royal Proclamation be sent in reference to the Maori Rebellion. Government House, Auckland, New Zealand, 6th July, 1861
My Lord Duke,—

I have the honour to request that a Royal Proclamation may be sent to me by the earliest opportunity, setting forth the views and ultimate determination of Her Majesty in reference to the insurrection in this colony. I am induced urgently to request that this course may be adopted because it has been industriously circulated, and believed by the Maoris, that I am not acting in accordance with the views and wishes of Her Majesty's Government. It is even believed that the troops have not been sent by Her Majesty's command, but by the Governors of other colonies The Natives have been encouraged to distinguish between her majesty's Imperial Government and the Governor of the colony, and have been taught to regard the former as their only security against injustice and aggression. This pernicious suggestion is openly approved and defended by many of the agitators against my Government Even sir William Martin says that "a temporary estrangement of the native people from the Colonial Government would be followed by a strong and abiding attachment to the Government of England." Under these circumstances I am satisfied that the expression of a distinct opinion by Her Majesty's Government is absolutely necessary to undeceive these misguided people.

Your Grace will observe that in my declaration to the Waikatos I insisted upon the right' to make roads throughout Native districts: not only on account of the evident advantage they will be but because acquiescence in this demand is almost the only material guarantee for future good conduct which the insurgents have it in their power to give. It might also be desirable that the Natives should be informed that those who join the insurgents and take up arms against Her Majesty must in future expect that their offence will be visited by confiscation of land.

Governor Grey's Departure from the Cape. H.M.S "Cossack," 15th August, 1861.

My Lord Duke,—

I have the honour to report to your Grace that, in consequence of your instructions that I should proceed with as much despatch as possible to assume the government of New Zealand I applied to Admiral Sir Baldwin Walker for a passage in H.M.S. "Cossack," for myself and the persons named in the margin, from the Cape of Good Hope to Auckland, in New Zealand

- 2. I considered it to be my duty to avail myself of the most rapid and direct means which I could find of reaching New Zealand, for the intelligence received of the terms of peace offered to the Natives of the Waitara renders it probable that war must break out in some other part of the Islands It is, therefore, a matter of great importance, if I am to conduct these affairs to a conclusion that I should arrive at the scene of action as rapidly as possible. It is, also, by no means impossible that the assistance which may be given by another ship of war on the New Zealand station-may prove of great advantage in bringing about a satisfactory solution of the disturbed state of affairs prevailing there. I therefore, as I could obtain the assistance at the Cape, thought I ought not to throw away a chance which may prove of much benefit to Her Majesty's service.

Governor Grey's Arrival at Auckland. Government House, Auckland, 4th October, 1861

My Lord Duke,—

I have the honour to report to your Grace that I arrived at Auckland upon the 26th ultimo.

- 2 My predecessor, Colonel Gore Browne, was administering the Government at the time of my arrival. I had thus the advantage of receiving his advice and his opinion upon the present state of the country, which he gave me in great detail, with an anxious desire, in as far as possible, to aid me in the discharge of the difficult duties on which I was about to enter.
- 3. Colonel Browne could not leave the colony until the 2nd instant. On that day he embarked amidst the most lively demonstrations of regard and good-will from the inhabitants of Auckland; and upon the 3rd instant I took the oaths of office, and entered upon the administration of the affairs of this Government.

No. 72. MINUTE by MINISTERS on the Position of the Colony at the Date of the Arrival of Sir George Grey: chiefly in relation to the Native Insurrection.

Position of the Colony on Governor Sir George Grey's Arrival. Auckland, 8th October, 1861.

Ministers assume that Sir George Grey has been put in possession of all information which had reached the Home Government down to the 5th of June last, which would include the events in the month of March; or possibly to the beginning of April.

It is unnecessary to offer any comments on the origin or progress of the Taranaki war, with the particulars of which Sir George Grey is no doubt fully acquainted to the above dates. Actual fighting ceased on the 13th or 14th of March last; the Waikato contingent returned home, accompanied by Wiremu Kingi and a few followers; whilst Hapurona, Kingi's fighting general, and a portion of the Ngatiawas, submitted themselves and accepted the terms of peace offered by the Governor. The Ngatiruanuis and Taranakis also returned home, and the British force, with the exception of one regiment, was removed to Auckland.

There were three distinct offers of terms of peace by the Governor to the different tribes who had been engaged in the insurrection: First, those addressed to the Ngatiawas; second, those addressed to the Ngatiruanuis and Taranakis; third, those addressed to the Waikatos. The first have been subscribed by a portion of the Ngatiawas, including Hapurona, but not Kingi. But, although a cessation of hostilities has resulted, the terms imposed on the Natives have not been fulfilled. The second have been rejected. The third were laid before a very large runanga of Waikatos at Ngaruawahia on the 7th June last. The reply of the runanga neither accepts nor rejects, but suggests that the Governor should give time for discussion and consideration. A letter from Wiremu Tamehana, the leader of the King movement, of the same date, rejects the terms; but he subsequently addressed another letter to the Governor, June 7th, of a less argumentative and positive character. Thompson cannot be regarded as the mouthpiece of the Waikato tribe as a whole, though he probably represents, or at least at that time represented, the sentiments of a majority, and exercises much influence both in Waikato and elsewhere. A brief memoir which appeared in a late Auckland paper illustrates his position at this crisis. It was written by a gentleman who has had peculiar opportunities of making himself acquainted with the subject.

Owing to the lateness of the season and the unprecedented wetness of the winter all military movements have been necessarily suspended from the period of the return of the Waikatos to their own country. It is understood, however, to have been the intention of Governor Browne to insist on the submission of that tribe, and their acceptance of the terms offered to them in May.

Early in July a change of Ministry took place. A prominent feature of the policy of the new Ministry consisted in their desire to set on foot negotiations with the Natives of a practical character, by personal communication, in the hope that amicable discussion might lead to a peaceful solution of the difficulties in which the relations of the Government and the Natives were involved. The Ministry proposed that a preliminary meeting should be held between Tamehana and some of the Ministry at Tuakau, and then, if there proved to be a prospect of a satisfactory result, that Tamehana, should meet the Governor at Auckland or elsewhere. These views met His Excellency's concurrence. Replies were sent to Tamehana intimating that the desired meeting should shortly take place. Matters were in this state when the announcement of the appointment of Sir George Grey led to the suspension of all important measures connected with the Natives, either of a military or diplomatic character.

The attitude of the Waikatos is at present one of suspense. They say that they will not give up the King movement—that the appointment of Sir George Grey as Governor will not induce them to succumb; they must hear what he has to say. They will remain quiescent. They do not wish to fight; but, if they are attacked, they will fight to the last man. These are probably the statements of a majority of the tribe; but there is a considerable section of them who are opposed to the King movement, and other tribes elsewhere, particularly the Ngapuhis and northern Natives; and some of them are reported to be, exerting themselves to induce others to abandon it. It is probable, however, that if war should ensue the bulk of the Native population to the southward of Auckland would gradually drift into it. The Waikatos are the backbone of the present great movement, whether called the King movement or known by any other symbol.

The Kingship is not, in the opinion of Ministers, an essential ingredient in that movement, further than as a rallying cry and as representing in some degree ideas of self-government and separate nationality. But many of the other tribes which support the movement and call themselves Kingites would admit of no claim to supremacy on the part of the Waikatos. Their views on the subject of the great agitation which has been going on for some years are probably not well defined; but the pervading idea of the bulk of those who support the movement aims at independence and freedom from interference on the part of the British Government. It is less an idea of collective national independence than a desire of the different sections of population to be let alone as they are, to manage their own affairs after their own fashion; and if, as between them and us, they should achieve, the independence they aim at, its immediate result would be a struggle for supremacy and intertribal hostilities among the several sections of which the confederacy is made up. They further imagine that, while they suffer from interference with their liberty of action on the part of our Government, they derive no substantial benefit or protection from its paternal care. The Government, they say, does not suppress crime except where a European is concerned. On the other hand, they point to the result of their own rude efforts at the establishment of institutions, including in many places judicial tribunals, as having already produced practical fruits of better government than our institutions, as hitherto worked, have conferred on them. How the runanga was worked, see Mr. Fenton's journal of 1857, the Report of the Waikato Committee, and letter from Waikato settler, appended. In addition to this desire for law, order, and social elevation, jealousy on the subject of their lands has been a very strong motive in creating this movement. They are dissatisfied with the present system of land-purchasing, and suspicious that the sole aim of the Government is to induce them to sell their land; and, whatsoever may be the merits of the Taranaki case, there is no doubt; it has contributed very greatly to the growth of this feeling.

The foundations of the King movement may then be summed up in a few words. They are a desire for good government, a conviction that our rule does not give it, jealousy on the land question, and certain crude ideas of independence.

Ministers are persuaded that, had the task of patiently framing and embodying suitable institutions (commenced some four or five years ago) been persevered in, shape might have been given to the Natives' confused ideas, and their acquiescence secured in some general system of government which might have strengthened the bonds of union between the two races. The lapse of time, and still more the Taranaki war, have not only rendered this task much more difficult in itself, but created or developed an inflammable and dangerous temperament in the Native mind which a very small spark may at any moment cause to break out into a blaze. This, however, only makes the task more difficult, not altogether hopeless.

The Natives of New Zealand are, as Sir George Grey is aware, a deliberative people. Deeply impressed with the value of the King movement, which embodies at present the one political idea of the race, they are not likely to abandon it unless some more attractive and at the same time solid substitute is offered. To give practical effect to what is good in that movement, by institutions adapted to their habits and capacities, while at the same time we persuade the Natives to reject whatever in it may be antagonistic to the authority of the British Government, ought to be our aim. To effect this, time and forbearance and the personal action of the highest officers of the Government are necessary conditions.

It has been argued that direct communication between the Governor and the Waikatos at this crisis would not be consistent with the dignity of the Crown, that no further overtures on our side can be made, that the terms already offered must be unconditionally accepted, and that submission must be enforced with the sword. If we were dealing with a civilized people, long accustomed to the usages of great nations, and versed in the rules of international law, such arguments might have weight. But when we consider that the New Zealanders are a people barely emerged from barbarism, and groping their way from darkness to light, for the most part without help, it is not towards them that such an argument should be used. Nor should it be forgotten that they are British subjects: a character which imposes upon us the obligation to win, rather than to enforce, their allegiance. They have of late years attained a remarkable appreciation of the advantages of law and order, as administered and maintained by themselves. It wants but little more to induce them to accept at our hands a better law and more perfect order; not confined solely to their own social wants, but involving the proper regulation of those relations which spring from the juxtaposition of the two races, and which can only be harmonized under the rule of one supreme head extending its protection equally to both.

A resort to force in the case of the Waikatos will almost to a certainty involve all the tribes south of Auckland. "The first shot fired in Waikato," Governor Browne said on a late occasion, "will be the signal for a general rising." On the other hand, many of the tribes alluded to, who would make common cause with the Waikatos in case of war, are far from being so wedded to the King movement as not to be open to be detached from it by persuasion and argument. Only a small part of the Natives have been in overt insurrection; except the Ngatiruanuis and Taranakis, no whole tribe has been committed. Such of the Waikatos as took part in the Taranaki war did so on their own individual responsibility, and not as the result of any tribal action. Admitting that these individuals and the Ngatiruanui and Taranaki Tribes have placed themselves in a position to justify severe treatment, why should the larger part of the Waikatos, and all the other tribes who have taken no part in the insurrection, be included in the same sentence?

The object of Ministers in this memorandum is not so much to suggest to Sir George Grey the course to be pursued as to put him in possession of the facts of the case at the present moment. It may not, however, be out of place if they indicate certain courses of action which might suggest themselves as those to be pursued. First, there is the assumption of a position resting on the demand of unconditional submission to the terms already offered, or to any other of a similar character. It will be inferred, from what has already been said, that this is not recommended. Second, the Governor might place himself in direct communication with the insurgent Natives, condone them for their past conduct, give them assurance of a desire to meet their wishes, and yield whatever they might ask. This is a course not to be recommended. Third, the Governor might instal himself at Auckland without making any direct overture to the insurgents. It is pretty certain that before long he would be visited by many of the most influential chiefs belonging to or connected with the Waikatos; indeed, with all the other tribes. Friendly communication with them in a spirit of firmness and conciliation, accompanied by acts of personal kindness, would result in their return to their tribes in a temper which would probably go far to promote a pacific solution of difficulties. Sir George Grey would have in the meantime the opportunity of making himself fully acquainted with the position of the question, and arranging his own plans for the future. Then will be the time for direct personal communication with the larger bodies of Natives.

Sir George Grey will find the circumstances of the colony greatly changed since the period of his previous administration. Whilst its resources are greatly increased, its weak points are multiplied also. Large districts, remote from towns, have been occupied by considerable populations more or less scattered, but all substantially unprepared for self-defence in case of a general insurrection. In the Province of Auckland the city and the outsettlers as far as Otahuhu at least, might be considered as pretty safe within the military lines, while the northern parts of the province lie among friendly Natives. The whole population of the Province of Hawke's Bay, however, numbering between two and three thousand souls, is scattered over an area of some three millions of acres, on isolated sheep farms, the homesteads on which are generally several miles apart. In the Wairarapa district of the Province of Wellington are some two thousand souls, being partly on runs or in small-farm communities of two or three hundred souls each, and intermixed with a body of Natives several hundreds in number, who can be reinforced by thousands at a few hours' notice from Hawke's Bay, Manawatu, Taupo, and other districts. In and about Whanganui, scattered over an area of somewhere about a million acres, are from two to three thousand souls, accessible by large bodies of Natives. All these populations have large quantities of live stock, extensive cultivations, farm-buildings, mills, and other fixed but destructible property. The Natives are also much changed within the last seven years. The political agitation already referred to has done much towards making them forget old feuds, and united them to a great extent in a common cause. They are also much better prepared for war than formerly. In 1857 the restrictions which Sir George Grey imposed on the sale of arms and ammunition were released to an extent which may be said to have thrown the sale open.

According to an estimate based on the Customhouse returns, the Natives expended on arms and ammunition during the succeeding three years a sum approaching, if it did not exceed, £50,000. This may seem almost incredible. It is a fact, however, that small parties of Natives have purchased at one time whole tons of powder. While, therefore, the supplies in the hands of the Natives are insignificant compared with our resources, and insufficient; for any lengthened operations, and have been no doubt lessened by the expenditure on the Taranaki war, they are undoubtedly sufficient to carry destruction into all the settlements of this Island.

The King party is so organized in the Island that, in case of war commencing in Waikato or elsewhere on the basis of the King movement, but a short time would elapse before concentrated attacks would be made on every district occupied by Europeans. It need hardly be said what would be the result in the way of destruction of life and property. Governor Browne stated that 20,000 troops would not enable him to do more than protect the centres of population. At least half, probably two-thirds, of the population south of Auckland would be at the mercy of Natives.

As regards the military resources of the colony for aggressive purposes, the Governor will no doubt receive full information from the Lieutenant-General. It is sufficient here to state that there are a little over six thousand troops in the colony: of these, one regiment is at Taranaki, four hundred men at Wanganui, four hundred at Hawke's Bay, and three hundred at Wellington. The remainder are concentrated around Auckland. As regards colonial defences, there are a Militia, partially but very insufficiently organized, and a few Volunteer corps. These bodies can at best be looked to as a protective force of a character purely local, the existing law not allowing of their "mobilization" to a distance of more than thirty miles. They are very inefficiently supplied with arms and ammunition, and very imperfectly trained, while the organization of the force requires an entire change. A report of the Joint Committee of both Houses of the Legislature is appended, which will throw some light on this subject. The Governor's attention is particularly called to the resolutions of the House of Representatives referred to in that report, and also to a memorandum of an interview between Governor Browne and a deputation of Wellington members on the subject of the defence of that province, a copy of which is annexed.

Another point to which the attention of the Governor ought to be directed is the impossibility of providing places of refuge for the women and children in case of a general war. From fifteen to twenty thousand of these would have to be provided with house-room and food, in towns already over-crowded, and no means of making such provision exists without very considerable warning beforehand.

The foregoing remarks have reference to our relations with the Natives, and the policy towards them in general. There are, however, some special circumstances which will demand Sir George Grey's serious attention.

The present state of the Taranaki settlement is this: The main body of the troops have (as already stated) been withdrawn. The place is now garrisoned by a single regiment, the principal part of which is stationed in the town or its immediate neighbourhood a small party being stationed in a blockhouse at the Waitara, on the land which has been the subject of dispute. This place is almost cut off from communication with the town, and is a position of considerable risk in case of war. The Militia at Taranaki has been called out, and is on actual service under proclamation of martial law. There is also a small but very effective corps of Volunteers. Many settlers and their families have left the place. During actual hostilities a large number of women and children were removed to Nelson, but many of them have returned. The ordinary industrial occupations of the settlement have been for the most part abandoned or suspended. The farms are in general left uncultivated, and much of the land is returning to the state of nature, and is being overrun with Scotch thistles and gorse from the fences. The farmhouses and buildings, except close to the town, have been destroyed.

The Ngatiruanui and Taranaki Natives remain in a state of passive insurrectionary sullenness; refuse submission to the terms proposed, retain possession of large quantities of the settlers' stock carried off during the war, have stopped the mail though carried by Natives, and threaten death to all Europeans who venture beyond certain lines, so that no one dare travel beyond a few miles from the Town of New Plymouth on the one side or Whanganui on the other. The Tataraimaka Block, purchased from the Natives, and which has been parcelled out into thriving farms, for the most part under cultivation, may now be said to be practically in the possession of the insurgents. The homesteads of the settlers, their fences and cultivations, have been destroyed: and no settler will incur the risk of going on his own land. In fact, the Natives boast that they hold the land by right of conquest.

This state of things cannot, in the opinion of Ministers, be suffered to continue.

As regards the policy to be pursued in reference to the settlement of Taranaki, several courses are open. First: Matters may be left as they are; in which case the settlement will by degrees dwindle away. Settlers will abandon it, particularly with the temptation of neighbouring gold fields presented to them. It will become practically a military post, but to be maintained at heavy cost, without definite object; for the restoration of the settlement under such circumstances would be hopeless. Second: It may be abandoned altogether—a suggestion which would not, it is imagined, be for a moment entertained. In fact, to abandon it would involve a loss of prestige dangerous to the colony generally. Third: Vigorous measures may be taken to re-establish our position. And this appears to Ministers the true policy. If there must be a war, it is better far that it should be at Taranaki than elsewhere. For whatever mischief could be inflicted on British settlements by a state of war has been done there. The penalties of war have been already paid. Besides this, the case of the Ngatiruanui and Taranaki Natives is the one which presents the fewest grounds of sympathy with other Natives. They engaged in the quarrel without provocation, and were guilty of gross outrages. Their present attitude is one of such open hostility as in the eyes of well-affected Natives themselves would not merely justify but demand on our part active measures against them, and retribution for the wrongs done. Added to this, if operations were carried on with a view to open up and establish military communication by roads between Taranaki and Whanganui, such operations would be attended with some facilities, and in the end with great patent advantages.

Ministers are of opinion (so far as they can presume to offer an opinion involving military considerations) that firm and decisive action should be taken in this direction. They believe the effect would be in no long space of time to bring the Ngatiruanuis and Taranakis into submission. The settlement of Taranaki might then, in the end, be re-established on a safer basis, and enabled to recover and extend itself. It is not improbable that hostile operations in the Taranaki country would draw towards it some portion of the Natives of other districts. Such a possible result would not, in the opinion of Ministers, be a sufficient reason against the course of action which they recommend. The time and manner of commencing such operations would require distinct consideration. The first object appears to be, as far as possible, to win back the allegiance of the bulk of the Native people, and to place the settlements in an effective position of defence. Ministers do not apprehend any aggressive movements on the part of the Natives as likely to result from the course which they recommend, except against the settlements of New Plymouth and Whanganui. There appears to Ministers no inconsistency in dealing with the main body of the Natives, the Waikatos in particular, with a gentle and even friendly hand, and endeavouring by all legitimate means to recall and attach them to us; and at the same time assuming a stern and decisive attitude towards the Ngatiruanuis and Taranakis, with a view to compel from them material guarantees for their future good behaviour.

One other topic requires to be brought under Sir George Grey's consideration, namely, the recent gold discoveries as affecting Native policy. The fact of paying gold fields existing in New Zealand is now placed beyond a doubt. The auriferous district extends through the Northern and Middle Island from Cape Colville downwards. Already there are signs of a large influx of population, directed at present to the Otago Gold Fields, but which will in all probability spread to the Northern Island, particularly in the direction of Coromandel. What may be apprehended is, lest gold-seekers should force themselves into Native districts against the will of the Native owners, the result of which would probably be a collision between the races, leading to fresh political complications. It will, in the opinion of Ministers, be the duty of Government to guard against the risk by all means in their power. If the Natives could be prevailed upon to open their country to gold-mining enterprise the political difficulty would be solved, whilst at the same time the material interest of the colony, and of the European and Native races, would be advanced. This subject, however, will scarcely demand much attention at present, unless richer gold fields shall be discovered in the Northern Island than have hitherto been found.

No. 72A.MINUTE by MINISTERS on the Machinery of Government for Native Purposes in Existence at the Date of Sir George Grey's Arrival.

The Constitution Act, which in other respects confers on the colonists the fullest powers of managing all the domestic affairs of the colony, makes three exceptions in reference to matters connected with the Natives: (1.) It gives to the Crown power to define Native districts within which, as between nations, their own laws and customs shall prevail. No such district has hitherto been set apart, and so far this exceptional clause of the Constitution has been inoperative. (2.) The power of extinguishing the title of the Natives in the waste lands is reserved to the Crown. (3.) A Civil List of £7,000, a year is reserved for Native purposes; but the specific appropriation of that amount to particular objects of Native service seems to be within the function of the Assembly. These being the only points on which any exceptions are made from the powers of self government conferred by the Constitution Act on the Assembly, it seems a reasonable conclusion that the general administration and control of Native affairs, in all other particulars except the three above mentioned, are as far as the Constitution Act is concerned vested in the Assembly.

As regards the right of legislation on Native affairs, the Assembly has always claimed and exercised it, subject only to the same vetos of the Governor and of Her Majesty as on all other matters. But as regards the executive administration of affairs relating to the Natives an exception has been made from the practice established in reference to the other departments of Government. It is this: On the introduction of Responsible Government in all other matters in 1856, Governor Browne made it a sine quâ non that he should retain in his own hands the administration of Native affairs. The following memoranda, by which the relations of the Governor towards his Ministers were established, explain the position which he assumed to himself in the matter:—

"The view the Governor takes of the relations between himself and his Responsible Advisers is as follows: (1.) In all matters under the control of the Assembly the Governor should be guided by the advice of gentlemen responsible to that body, whether it is or is not in accordance with his own opinion on the subject in question. (2.) On matters affecting the Queen's prerogative and Imperial interests generally, the Governor will be happy to receive their advice, but, when he differs from them in opinion, he will, if they desire it, submit their views to the consideration of Her Majesty's Secretary of State, adhering to his own until an answer is received. Among Imperial subjects the Governor includes all dealings with the Native tribes, more especially in the negotiation of purchases of land. He will receive and act on the advice of his Responsible Advisers in reference to the amount of money they may desire to have expended in any one year in the purchase of land, but beyond this he considers himself bound to act on his own responsibility. The Governor alone is responsible to Her Majesty for the tranquillity of the colony, which would be endangered by the ordinary and inevitable change of opinions consequent on a change in his Advisers. It follows, as a necessary consequence of these views, that the Chief Land Purchase Commissioner and his subordinates must take their orders from the Governor alone."

There was a strong disinclination among many members, of the House of Representatives to concur in the retention by the Governor of the administration of Native affairs; but the desire for Responsible Government in other matters induced them to forego their objections, and the terms proposed by the Governor were finally accepted by the majority, and have been acted upon ever since. The result is that, while on all other subjects the Responsible Ministers are the sole advisers of the Governor, and exercise the entire executive functions of the Government, on Native affairs the Governor has, in addition to his Ministers, another adviser his Native Secretary, who is not a Responsible Minister, nor under, the control of Responsible Ministers, but who exercises absolutely (subject only to instructions from the Governor himself) all the executive functions of Government in relation to Native affairs. The Land Purchase Department, which exists under the reservations in the Constitution Act, is also in the same position. The Governor consults his Responsible Ministers to the limited extent specified in the memorandum of 1856, but also consults without limitation the Land Purchase Commissioner, who is not a Responsible Minister, but to whom is further intrusted the practical function of negotiating for and effecting the purchase of waste lands.

Sir George Grey will recollect that during his previous administration the two departments of Native Secretary and Land Purchase Commissioner were kept separate: the former having been filled successively by Mr. Dillon, Captain Symonds, and Major Nugent; the latter only by Mr. McLean, Mr. Mantell, and others. In 1856 the two departments were amalgamated by the union of the two offices of Native Secretary and Chief Land Purchase Commissioner, in the person of Mr. McLean. A prominent result of this union of the political function of the Government with its commercial function as land-purchaser has been the creation in the Native mind of a suspicion that all the acts of the Government originate in a desire to get possession of their land. They have learned to look upon the Government as a gigantic landbroker, and every attempt made by it either to improve their social condition or to control them by the necessary restriction of law is supposed to have for its ultimate object the acquisition of territory. This feeling to a great extent lies at the foundation of the unsatisfactory relations at present existing between the Natives and the Government. The House of Representatives, on two separate occasions in the last two sessions, unanimously condemned the fusion of the two departments. (See Resolutions, Sess. Pap. 1860, 1861.) Mr. McLean in May last was called upon by the Governor to resign the Native Secretaryship, and from that date the two offices may be considered disconnected. It will be some time, however, before the effects of their combination will be effaced from the minds of the Natives.

In the session of the Imperial Parliament of 1860 an attempt was made, without any previous communication with the General Assembly of the colony, to take from the Responsible Ministers the little power which remained to them in Native affairs under the memoranda of 1856. This it was proposed to effect by establishing a Native Council of advice, and partly of administration, to act altogether independently of the Responsible Government. The Act, after passing the House of Lords, was however withdrawn by Her Majesty's Government. But when the Assembly received an intimation of its being before Parliament, an attempt was made by them to meet the views of the Home Government to a certain extent, by the creation of a Native Council of advice, but at the same time subordinating all the executive functions of the Government to the Responsible Ministers. The Bill was not very popular either in the House of Representatives or out of doors; but what reconciled many of its somewhat unwilling supporters was the prospect it held out of getting rid of the independent and irresponsible action of the Native Secretary's Department, which, if it continued to exist at all, would do so in subordination to the Responsible Ministry, and would in fact be converted into that of an Assistant Secretary and clerks of the Native Minister. The Act passed the Assembly, and was reserved for Her Majesty's assent. A despatch received by the last mail states that Her Majesty's assent is withheld till Sir George Grey shall report. Ministers are bound to state that they regard the existence of the Native Secretary's Department, free as it is from all control on the part of the Responsible Ministry, as a very serious evil. While its existence paralyses all independent and vigorous action on the part of the Ministry, it is itself inefficient and powerless. Receiving no sympathy and little support at the hands of the Assembly or the Responsible Ministry, it neither originates nor can it carry out any persistent or large policy, and it is only capable of obstructing, by mere inertia, the attempt of the Colonial Government to bring its energies to bear on Native interests. Thus, while it is the cause of much evil, it is of no use except as a machinery for recording and interpreting Native letters, and administering the petty details which originate in the casual visits of Natives to the City of Auckland, arranging for their personal interviews with the Governor, providing them with lodgings, or giving them orders for food.

The appropriations from the revenue for Native purposes during the year ending 30th June, 1862, are as follow:—On the Civil List: Native Minister, £800; Native Secretary, £400; Native purposes, Governmental, £7,000; by Act in 1858, to continue for seven years, for schools, £7,000. On the Annual Appropriations, 1861-62: Native purposes generally, to be expended by Governor in Council, £10,000; Land Purchase Department reduced, and also to be expended by Governor in Council, £5,441: total, £30,641. Besides which, £33,000 of the English loan is appropriated for this year for pending land purchases.

No. 73. Copy of a Despatch from Governor Sir GEORGE GREY to his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE.

On the Plan for Self-government in Native Districts. Auckland, New Zealand, 30th November, 1861.
My Lord Duke,—

In my Despatch No. 3, of the 9th October last, I transmitted the copy of a memorandum on the machinery of government for Native purposes, which had been forwarded to me by the New Zealand Ministers.

- 2. The substance, of the question which has been raised on this subject may, I think, be stated to be this: that, whilst the Colonial Ministers are virtually responsible for all other matters of government in this colony, the Governor has hitherto retained the management of Native affairs in his own hands.
- 3. The Ministers, in their memorandum, state this in the following language: "The result is that, while on all other subjects the Responsible Ministers are the sole advisers of the Governor, and exercise the entire executive functions of the Government, on Native affairs the Governor has, in addition to his Ministers; another adviser—his Native Secretary—who is not a Responsible Minister nor under the control of Responsible Ministers; but who exercises (subject only to instructions from the Governor himself) all the executive functions of Government in relation to Native affairs."

- 4. Under this system there would be two Governments in the colony, which not only would not always aid one another, but which would sometimes act at cross purposes with each other.
- 5. At the present crisis it is quite impossible that Her Majesty's Government could be advantageously carried on under such a system. I therefore immediately arranged to consult my Responsible Ministers in relation to, Native affairs in the same manner as upon all other subjects, and in like manner to act through them in relation to all Native matters. If any serious difference takes place between us upon these subjects, I must, as in other cases, resort to other Advisers; and appeal in fact to the General Assembly.
- 6. Your Grace will, I have no doubt, inform me if you wish me to discontinue this arrangement; but I think it would be well to leave it permanently in operation until difficulties arise under it, which I do not see any probability of.
- 7. If I can carry out the arrangements contemplated for introducing a machinery of local self-government into all the Native districts, but few serious questions are likely afterwards to arise between the Natives and the European Legislature, and I hope that but few more troubles will then take place with the Natives of this country. If these favourable anticipations prove correct, the system I propose to act on will certainly work well.
- 8. Even recently, I would remind your Grace that that party in the General Assembly which may be said to have disapproved of war with the Natives if it could be avoided, proved the strongest; and I think it is better to show that full confidence in the General Assembly which, by its proceedings towards the Native race, it has, I think, fairly merited, rather than to evince an undeserved distrust in it. Any attempt to set up either the Governor or any special body between the Natives and the General Assembly as a protective power for the Natives against the presumed hostility of that body will, I fear, produce an ill effect upon the Native mind, as making them regard the Assembly as their admitted natural enemies; whilst it will, perhaps; create in the minds of the General Assembly some prejudice against the Natives and against what may be done for them, and a carelessness for their interests, with the protection of which the Assembly would be in no way charged.
- 9. Another disadvantage of the system of making the Governor chiefly responsible for Native affairs is that it will be thought that the wars which may arise under it have sprung, whether rightly or wrongly, from the acts of the Representative of the British Government, over whose proceedings the Colonial Legislature had but very imperfect control; so that it would seem difficult to call upon that body to find the means of defraying the cost of a war for the origin, continuance, or conduct of which it was only in an indirect manner responsible.
- 10. Under the system I have adopted the Governor and Ministers act as mutual checks each upon the other. If either of them wishes to force on some proceeding which the other party regards as unjust to the Natives, or as injurious to their reasonable interests, it is known to both that the ultimate appeal must be made to the General Assembly, and that the justness of the intentions of each party will become a matter of public discussion. It is, therefore, reasonable to think that each of them would carefully consider the grounds on which they were acting before incurring the risk of an appeal of this nature.
- 11. Certainly this plan throws a greater responsibility on the General Assembly in regard to the expenditure on account of any war which their acts might bring on; but this would indirectly prove a great protection for Native interests. The Assembly will now know that the justness of their acts, if disturbances spring from them, will be publicly canvassed in the British Parliament; that if misfortunes; and dangers have undeservedly been brought upon Her Majesty's European subjects by the misconduct of the Natives, then the General Assembly will receive from England that generous and liberal support which she has never failed to afford to British subjects under such circumstances; whilst, on the other hand, if—which one may hope would be impossible—the Colonial Assembly had been attempting to oppress Her Majesty's Native subjects, its unrighteous conduct would meet with that public reprobation which it would so justly deserve.

I have, &c.,

G. GREY.

His Grace the Duke of K. G. Newcastle, &c.

No. 74. Copy of a Despatch from Governor Sir GEORGE GREY to his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE.

Reporting on the Present State of the Country. Government House, Auckland, 6th December, 1861.
Mt Lord Duke,—

My predecessor, shortly before leaving this country, reported to your Grace that the Government was, in many places, almost unknown by the Maoris; that some of the, most populous districts had never been visited by a European Magistrate; and that the Native inhabitants of them have never felt that they are the subjects of the Queen of England, and have little reason to think that the Government of the colony cares at all about their welfare. It will be seen from this that much yet remains to be done to introduce law and order amongst the Native population in the interior of this Island, and even along its coasts.

- 2. Ten years since the urgent necessity of introducing simple municipal institutions amongst them was pointed out, and the first step taken to induce them to refer their disputes to our Courts. But, although various proposals have been made for facilitating a further advance towards these objects, the matter has been practically left nearly where it then was.
- 3. I think it will probably be admitted that it would be hopeless to attempt to govern a country otherwise than by the sword unless its population were permitted to take some interest in its government, in the framing and execution of its laws and unless some share were given to them in the dignity and emoluments which arise from holding office.
- 4. So strongly do the European population in New Zealand feel this, that in the Northern Island, as will be seen from the enclosed returns, those out of the 41,159 souls who administer the Government and preserve order for the rest of their countrymen divide between them annually salaries which, in the aggregate, amount to upwards of £100,000. If the Native subjects of Her Majesty (amounting in this Island, at a low estimate, to 54,000 souls) were provided with equally expensive means of government, the salaries they should share amongst them would exceed £100,000 per annum. As it is, it will be found, from the enclosed return, that there are for both Islands of New Zealand 194 Native Assessors or Magistrates employed, many of whom perform onerous duties, and that the aggregate amount of all the salaries paid to Natives in both Islands is only £777 a year, or on the average £5 10s. per annum for each Native Magistrate employed by the Government.
- 5. "When a new Constitution was given to New Zealand, in 1853, the Europeans were then gifted with the representative institutions which gave them full power to provide for all their own wants, to repress crime, to promote order, to raise revenues from both populations, and to arrange for the distribution of these revenues in salaries as they thought proper; whilst the Native population have been, up to the present time, left in the position described by my predecessor.
- 6. Such a state of things has, I have no doubt, produced great discontent in the minds of the Natives, who are an intelligent, reasoning people; but its worst result is that the Native districts have been left entirely to themselves. In these, frequent contests took place, and sometimes murders occurred, whilst no means existed of repressing these outrages throughout the country. I think nothing could show the Natives' capacity for self-government, and their desire to see law and order established, in a stronger light than their at last attempting to redress these great evils by setting up a form of government of their own, although that step has now resulted in such serious consequences.
- 7. From this it might be thought that the Natives will readily grasp at the institutions of self-government now offered to them; but I see no reason to hope that such will immediately be the case in some districts. They are proud of the Government they have set up, of the position of independence they have gained, and of the influence they have obtained over their countrymen. Having enjoyed these for several years, they have become attached to them. They are also more attached to their own Government from their having successfully defied our attempts to put it down; and, viewing our anxiety to do so, think it must have some intrinsic value. I find in many of them, at present, a sort of sullen, desperate determination to maintain it at all hazards, and a kind of pride in making personal sacrifices for what they regard as a national object. It is as if they had for the first time acquired a new faculty of their existence, of which they were not previously aware, and in the exercise of which they feel great enjoyment. Many populous districts in the Island do not, however, participate in those feelings. In these parts I shall have no difficulty in introducing the proposed institutions.

- 8. My belief as to the present, state of the Maori King movement is that a great number of the Natives in the part of the country which lies to the south of Auckland—say perhaps thirty thousand of them—have entered into an agreement of nearly the following purport:—
- 9. That they will not directly or indirectly attack the Europeans; they will not permit the Europeans to be robbed or molested: but that upon all lands, the property of the Natives, justice shall be only administered by Natives, and laws shall be only made by Natives; that no more lands within such districts shall be for the present sold to Europeans; and that the so-called Maori King and his Council shall watch that these regulations are, if possible, maintained throughout all Native lands, and shall try to lead the whole Native population to acquiesce in them; and that any attempt by the Government to put down these proceedings by force shall be regarded as the signal for a general rising of the Native population.
- 10. Within the last few days a European settler living on Native-land about forty miles from Auckland had his house robbed by Natives of a few articles. Immediate inquiries were made into the circumstances by a European Magistrate: the Natives without delay made ample amends: but the enclosed copies of letters will show that the Council of the Maori King at once wrote to the principal chiefs in the neighbourhood, stating their disapproval of their having-allowed the case to be brought before a European Magistrate, and reminding them that from the first establishment of the Native King it was arranged that crimes committed on Native lands were only to be settled by the King's Magistrates: they also warned them to prevent all crimes being committed against Europeans, or the Natives would by such offences be led into difficulties.
- 11. These letters show the nature of the agreement entered into by the King party: but I think the whole circumstances of the case show that they will have great difficulty in inducing the Natives to adhere to it. In the case under consideration they did not do so, and when the Natives who acted with us were reprimanded for what they had done they showed the letters to the Government.
- 12. I have also already stated that large bodies of Natives are ready to side with the Government, and will adopt my plans. Thus by degrees I hope the King movement will be eaten out, and, when the inferiority of their form of government is seen side by side with the superior one which will be given to them, that the whole will at last readily embrace offers which are so advantageous to them. The difficulties in the way of this are their pride, their vanity at their successes, and their want of confidence in the Government: this latter circumstance presents a very great difficulty.
- 13. It is possible that the adherents of the Native King, seeing that their power is shaken, may attempt by force of arms to prevent some of their countrymen from acquiescing in the proposals of the Government; or may try to punish them for having done so: in this case it will be necessary for the Government to interfere to prevent such acts of violence. I can only hope that so trying a contingency as this would be may not arise.

No. 75. MINUTE by MINISTERS in reference to the GOVERNOR'S PROPOSED VISIT to WAIKATO.

Auckland, 6th December, 1861.

The Governor being about to visit the Waikato district, Ministers desire respectfully to express to His Excellency their views as to the course of policy to be pursued.

The Natives whom His Excellency will meet are likely to be a very mixed body, different altogether from the northern Natives whom he lately visited. Many of the Waikatos whom the Governor will meet on this occasion will have been more or less compromised in the late transactions. Probably there will be men of every shade of opinion amongst them, from extreme partisans of the King movement to those whose fidelity to British authority has been unshaken.

The first thing in our opinion for the Governor to settle is, What shall be done? Will he enforce compliance with Colonel Browne's terms of peace enunciated at Taranaki, at all hazards—by military force if need be? Will he, in fact, march troops into the Waikato unless the King flag is pulled down—unless the Natives will permit roads to be made through their country, and restore the Taranaki plunder? It is our duty as Ministers to offer His Excellency clear and distinct opinions on these points. The responsibility to the Imperial Government will rest with him for the action taken, and to the General Assembly with us for the advice we may give.

For our part, we think that under no circumstances would it be wise in Sir George Grey to undertake a movement into the Waikato to pull down the King flag, suppress the King movement, and enforce Colonel Browne's terms. Equally unwise would it be to hold up in terrorem to the Natives a mere pretence of such a plan of operations. If the King party or their adherents are guilty of outrage upon settlers or their property, wheresoever they may be, whether on Native or European ground; it will be then for the Government to consider the proper means to be taken. In the meantime our position should be that of watchfulness, giving the unfriendly Natives clearly to understand that any hostile aggression on their part will lead to sharp and swift measures of retaliation; though we hold it to be in the highest degree unlikely that the Natives, or any section of them, will be guilty of any such hostile aggression. On the question of undertaking military operations in the "Waikato country we have the opinions of Colonel Browne himself, the military authorities, and the Military Defence Committee of both Houses of Assembly, who are all agreed that it would not be safe to move troops into that district without a large increase of our military force. Sir George Grey-can himself judge whether the Home Government is likely to send additional troops, or whether he is prepared to recommend it. We, as Ministers, must say that without additional aid, particularly in the way of protection to the southern provinces of this Island, no such movement ought to be undertaken. We rest these opinions on grounds of inexpediency in a military point of view. We do not say that on other grounds we should not equally object to such an aggressive movement, as uncalled for, attended with grave risk, costly, and not likely to produce adequate results.

If it be decided not to undertake military operations against the Waikatos, we think it best to let the Natives understand our intentions. We see no good, on the contrary much evil, in keeping up false excitement, irritating the Native mind, rousing undefined alarms, stirring up against us their sentiments of pride and nationality, and probably leading the Government into a position where it may find itself unable to advance with safety or retreat with credit. Better far, in our opinion, if we do not mean aggressive war, to say so. If it be said that Government is bound by Colonel Browne's declarations, we hold the present Government free from any such embarrassment. The circumstances are altogether new, and justify a new course of treatment.

What course, then, should be pursued towards the King party, supposing them to persist in their present attitude of sulky independence? In our opinion.—they should be left as they are—treated with indifference—and, as far as may, be, regarded as in a state of outlawry. And they should be made to understand that such is the light in which we intend to regard them. We shall find means of distinguishing between friends and enemies, and the Natives will not be slow to find out that their own interests will lie in returning to friendly relations with us.

We have no confident expectation that the King movement will disappear, or the King flag be pulled down, on the occasion of Sir George Grey's visit to the Waikato; and we think that he should be prepared for that contingency. But it would be worse than an absurdity to make such a matter a casus belli. To apply to the Natives of New Zealand principles of allegiance and treason drawn from our own jurisprudence is simply preposterous. As to enforcing restitution of plunder, or compelling, the Natives to allow roads to be made through their country, it may be well to insist on these as conditions for conferring social and political advantages upon them, but very idle to make the non-compliance with such terms a ground of war.

But, at the ensuing meeting at the Waikato, the language of the Governor to the Natives who have taken part in the King movement should, in our opinion, distinctly mark the Governor's disapprobation. The folly of that movement, if regarded as an attempt to establish a distinct nationality, should be pointed out. The absurdity of their endeavour to maintain a separate Government, and the mischiefs which they will bring on themselves, and the benefits of which they will deprive themselves, should be shown to them. The opportunity should not be lost of insisting upon such-topics. Above all, we must not treat all alike, friends and foes, our old allies and those who are at the best but half friends. The language and tone should be different towards those different classes.

As regards the offer of improved social institutions, it should be made only to those who are friends, or willing to be such; and the Natives should be made to understand that the Governor does not intend to force their adoption. They are in fact a boon of great value, which should be rather granted in answer to earnest solicitations than volunteered as a new scheme contrived and peremptorily enjoined by the Governor, or pressed on their acceptance. Presented to them, in that form, they may be viewed with jealousy and suspicion.

As regards the Ngatiruanuis and Taranakis, we do not think that the Governor, in addressing the Waikatos, should speak on the subject with an uncertain voice. The Natives generally should be told, in plain terms, that the Governor means to take such security for the future good behaviour of these Natives as shall insure the British settlements, Taranaki in particular, against a repetition of hostile attack. What particular measures he may adopt for that purpose, whether the formation of roads, the establishment of military posts, or the like, will of course rest with His Excellency; but the state of Taranaki demands decisive action, and the intentions of the Government on this point ought to be clearly stated to the Natives: they should be informed that whatever the Government may determine on that subject will be carried out. Above all, we think it desirable to threaten nothing which we do not mean, and are not certain of performing; and what we do mean should be clearly stated.

As regards the financial aspect of the experiment about to be made, Ministers have already addressed His Excellency in another memorandum. They will only add their belief that the General Assembly will readily vote any reasonable sum for the proposed objects—say to the extent of the amount indicated by His Excellency—provided it feels satisfied that such expenditure will compass the object in view, namely, the permanent solution of the Native question. But it is right that His Excellency should understand the mind of the colony and the Assembly on this point. What they want is a permanent and, if possible, a peaceful adjustment of the question, with reasonable guarantees for the future tranquillity of our settlements and the undisturbed progress of colonization. They will be ready to purchase these objects at a large price. But they will not be contented with any mere temporary lull of Native disturbances; and Ministers feel bound to add that the Assembly may possibly hesitate to admit its entire liability for the past management of the Natives or its consequences, including the late war and whatever may be the sequel of events directly flowing from it.

WILLIAM FOX.

No. 76. NOTIFICATION circulated among the NATIVE TRIBES, just before the Governor's Visit to Waikato, December, 1861.

Notification to Natives.

These are some of the thoughts of the Governor, of Sir George Grey, towards the Maoris at this time. His desire is, how to arrange things that there may be good laws made, and those laws be put in force; and how all men, both European and Maori, may be taught to work for the common good of the country in which they live; that they may be a happy people, rich, wise, well instructed, and every year advancing in prosperity. For it is the desire of the Queen (whose heart was dark when she heard of the troubles in New Zealand) that all her subjects, both Europeans and Maoris, in all parts of these Islands, should have the benefits of law and order: that the lives and persons of all men should be safe from destruction and-injury; and that every man should have for himself and enjoy his own lands, his cattle, his horses, his sheep, his ship, his money, or whatever else belongs to him. And it is the desire of the Queen that all her subjects should help in making the laws by which they are governed, and that from amongst them should be appointed wise and good men as Magistrates, to adjudge in cases of disputed rights and punish the wrong-doer, and to teach the law, how it should be obeyed.

The Europeans in New Zealand, with the help of the Governor, make laws for themselves, and have their own Magistrates; and because they obey those laws they are rich, they have large houses, great ships, horses, sheep, cattle, corn, and all other, good things for the body. They have also ministers of religion, teachers of schools; lawyers, to teach the law; surveyors, to measure every man's land; doctors, to heal the sick; carpenters, blacksmiths, and all those other persons who make good things for the body, and teach good things for the souls and minds of the Europeans. It is because they have made wise and good laws, and because they look up to the Queen as the one head over all Magistrates, and over all the several bodies of which the English people consists. It is the desire of the Queen, and this also is the thought of Governor Grey and of the Runanga of the pakcha, that the Maoris also should do for themselves as the Europeans do. They know that of late years the Maoris have been seeking for law and order. The Englishmen have been more than a thousand years learning how to make laws and to govern themselves well. The Maori has only just begun this work. Besides this, in order to have Magistrates, and policemen, and other officers, it is necessary to pay them, for the labourer is worthy of his hire; and he who works for the whole body of the people should be paid by the people, for while he works for them he must, more or less, neglect his own work.

Now, the thought of the Governor is, how he may help the Maoris in the work of making laws, and how he may provide for the payment of the Magistrates and other officers of Government, till such time as the Maoris shall have become rich and be able to pay all the expenses themselves. In order, then, to provide the machinery of good government amongst the Maoris in these Islands, the Governor desires to see established the following system, whereby good laws may be made, well-disposed persons be protected, bad men restrained from violence, and security for life and property be insured to all.

- 1. The parts of the Island inhabited by Maoris will be marked off into several districts, according to tribes or divisions of tribes, and the convenience of the natural features of the country. To every one of these districts the Governor will send a learned and good European to assist the Maoris in the work of making laws and enforcing them; he will be called the Civil Commissioner. There will be a Runanga for that district, which will consist of a certain number of men who will be chosen from the Assessors. The Civil Commissioner will be the President of that Runanga to guide its deliberations, and, if the votes are equal on any matter, he will have a casting vote to decide. This Runanga will propose the laws for that district, about the trespass of cattle, about cattle-pounds, about fences, about branding cattle, about thistles and weeds, about dogs, about spirits and drunkenness, about putting down bad customs of the old Maori law, like the taua, and about the various things which specially concern the people living in that district. They will also make regulations about schools, about roads if they wish for them, and about other matters which may promote the public good of that district. And all these laws which the district Runangas may propose will be laid before the Governor, and he will say if they are good or not. If he says they are good, they will become law for all men in that district to which they relate. If he says they are not, good, then the Runanga must make some other law which will be better. This is the way with the laws which the Europeans make in their Runangas, both in New Zealand and in the great Runanga of the Queen in England.
- 2. Every district will be subdivided into Hundreds, and in each of these there will be Assessors appointed. The men of that district will choose who shall be Assessors; only the Governor will have the word to decide whether the choice is good or not. The Magistrates, with these Assessors, will hold Courts for disputes about debts of money, about cattle-trespass, about all breaches of the law in that district. They will decide in all these cases.
- 3. In every Hundred there will be policemen, and one chief policeman, who will be under the Assessors. These policemen will summon all persons against whom there are complaints before the Court of the Assessors, and when the Assessors shall have decided the policeman will see that the orders of the Assessors are carried out. All fines which shall be paid shall be applied to some public uses. The Commissioner or Magistrate will keep this money till it is required.
- 4 The Runangas will also be assisted in establishing and maintaining schools and teachers; sometimes Europeans, sometimes Maoris, will be appointed. The Maoris ought to pay part of the salary of the school-teacher; the Governor will pay the rest.
- 5. Where the Runangas wish to have an European doctor to live among them, the Governor will endeavour to procure one to reside there, and will pay him so much salary as may make him willing to go to that work. The doctor will give medicine to the Maoris when they are sick, and will teach them what things are good for the rearing of their children, to make them strong and healthy, and how to prolong the lives of all the Maoris by eating good food, by keeping their houses clean, by having proper clothes, and other things relating to their health. This will be the business of the doctor. But all those who require the services of the doctor will pay for them, except such as the Runanga may decide to be too poor to do so.
- 6. About the lands of the Maoris. It will be for the Runangas to decide all disputes about the lands. It will be good that each Runanga should make a register, in which should be written a statement of all the lands within the district of that Runanga, so that everybody may know, and that there may be no more disputings about land.

This, then, is what the Governor intends to do to assist the Maori in the good work of establishing law and order. These are the first things: the Runangas, the Assessors, the policemen, the schools, the doctors, the Civil Commissioners to assist the Maoris to govern themselves, to make good laws, and to protect the weak against the strong. There will be many more things to be planned and to be decided; but about such things the Runangas and the Commissioners will consult. This work will be a work of time, like the growing of a large tree: at first there is the seed, then there is one trunk, then there are branches innumerable, and very many leaves: by-and-by, perhaps, there will be fruit also. But the growth of the tree is slow—the branches, the leaves, and fruit did not appear all at once, when the seed was put in the ground: and so will it be with the good laws of the Runanga. This is the seed which the Governor desires to sow: the Runangas, the Assessors, the Commissioners, and the rest. By-and-by, perhaps, this seed will grow into a very great tree, which will bear good fruit on all its branches. The Maoris, then, must assist in the planting of this tree, in the training of its branches, in cultivating the ground about its roots; and, as the tree grows, the children of the Maori also will grow to be a rich, wise, and prosperous people, like the English and those other nations which long ago began the work of making good laws and obeying them. This will be the Work of Peace, on which the blessing of Providence will rest—which will make the storms to pass away from the sky, and all things will become light between the Maori and the pakeha; and the heart of the Queen will then be glad when she hears that the two races are living quietly together, as brothers, in the good and prosperous land of New Zealand.

Respecting Crown Grants to Natives. Government House, Auckland, 7th February, 1862.
My Lord Duke,—

Adverting to my Despatches Nos. 4 and 7, of the 8th and 9th ultimo, regarding Crown titles for land being under certain circumstances granted to Native owners, I beg to state that I thought it my duty particularly to draw the attention of the New Zealand Ministers to the opinions I had therein expressed: they have consequently drawn up the enclosed memorandum on the subject, which I transmit for your Grace's information. The Ministers appear inclined to think that the General Assembly of these Islands will not disapprove, under all the circumstances, of the course which I have recommended should be adopted.

Enclosure. Minute by Ministers.

Ministers have carefully considered the two despatches of the 8th and 9th January, 1862, addressed by His Excellency to Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, which His Excellency has submitted to them. The General Assembly is likely to be at all times jealous of an appeal to the Imperial Parliament for legislation on subjects on which, it has not been consulted, particularly if they should happen to be such as it may conceive to fall within its own legislative jurisdiction. It may be questionable whether some of the powers which His Excellency seeks to have conferred, by the Imperial Parliament could not be conferred by the Assembly, and might be so conferred at as early a date as by Parliament. Speaking cautiously, however, and on the supposition that the Act of Parliament will not in any particulars extend beyond the limits specified by His Excellency particularly that no power shall be given of making special grants to Europeans unless as trustees for such Native objects as His Excellency proposes to meet, and that the powers conferred shall be exercised (as His Excellency suggests) only by the Governor with the advice of his Executive Council, Ministers are inclined to think that the course pursued will meet the general approval of the Assembly.

No. 78. Copy of a Despatch from his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE. to Governor Sir GEORGE GREY

On Issue of Crown Grants to Natives. Downing Street, 26th March, 1862.
Sir,—

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatches Nos. 4 and 7, of the 8th and 9th of January, recommending that, with a view to remedy certain serious evils to which you call my attention, an Act of Parliament should be obtained—(1) To enable the Governor to issue a Crown title to the Natives in all cases where land has been purchased by the Government under pledge to re-grant part of it to the Native sellers; (2) to empower him to give a Crown title to Native lands which the owners desire to appropriate to the support of a Minister of religion in the district in which such lands are situated; or generally (3) to confer a power on the Governor of giving to the Natives Crown titles to any portions of their own lands.

I have learned with extreme regret that, for no better reason than a supposed legal difficulty (which, if it exists at all, ought in common fairness to have been removed long ago), a large number of Natives have failed to obtain the fulfilment of explicit promises which were made to them on the part of Her Majesty's Government, and by which they had been induced to surrender their lands to the Colonial Government. I am fully sensible how much the credit of the British Crown must have suffered by this injustice, and how much it will continue to suffer till the injustice shall have been redressed. I am not prepared to say that the case would be an improper one for the interference of the Imperial Legislature, if no other means were available for maintaining the honour of the Crown. But it does not appear from your despatch that this is the case. It appears, on the contrary, probable that the Colonial Government, on your advice, will not hesitate to issue the requisite grants to these Natives, nor the local Legislature (if necessary) to declare their validity; and under these circumstances.

I have not thought myself justified in submitting to Parliament a Bill which would appear to indicate a suspicion that the colonial authorities are indisposed to deal honestly with their Maori creditors. I concur with you in thinking that the Governor should possess the power, under proper limitations, of issuing Crown grants of Native lands, either to the Native owners generally, or towards the virtual endowment of the clergy in Native districts, or for many other imaginable purposes; and. I think that this power would probably have been given long ago if the Imperial and Colonial Governments could have agreed whether it should be exercised by the Governor alone or by the Governor acting with the advice of his Executive Council.

You will perceive by a despatch of the 18th May, 1859, addressed by the then Secretary of State to Colonel Gore Browne, that Her Majesty's Government were then of opinion that powers of this kind, materially though indirectly affecting Imperial interests, should be exercised by the Governor alone. On this general subject I shall address you hereafter. But I have at present no hesitation in informing you that, if the Colonial Legislature shall think fit to pass an Act investing the Governor with the power of issuing Crown grants of Native lands to the Native owners, or to any persons nominated by them, I shall not think it necessary to withhold Her Majesty's confirmation from that Act on the ground that the power thus conferred is to be exercised by the Governor with the advice and consent of his Responsible Ministry.

I hope that, with this intimation of the views of the Home Government, you will find no difficulty in obtaining from the Legislature such legal powers as will enable you to deal effectually with this subject.

I have, &c.,

NEWCASTLE.

Governor Sir George Grey, K.C.B., &c.

Wellington, 26th August, 1862.
My Lord Duke—

I have the honour to transmit, for your Grace's information, the enclosed copy of resolutions which have been passed by the House of Representatives, defining the relations which, in their opinion, should exist between the Governor and his Responsible Advisers regarding Native affairs.

- 2. I have consented to act in the spirit of these resolutions until your Grace's further instructions reach me. I have done this because I know my Ministers, the settlers, and Natives so well that I am satisfied, whatever may be in theory the nature of the relations existing between myself and my Responsible Advisers, the practical result will be the same and that Her Majesty's service will not suffer from any such arrangement as I now transmit,
- 3. At the same time your Grace will find from my Despatch No. 36, of the 30th November last, that I do not think that the enclosed resolutions establish satisfactory relations between the Governor of this colony and his Responsible Advisers. But I have no doubt that when the difficulties now prevailing have been brought to a close the General Assembly will, if your Grace desires it, assume the entire responsibility-of Native affairs.

Lower Waikato.—Reporting Official Visit to that District. Government House, Auckland, 7th January, 1862.
My Lord Duke,—

I have the honour to enclose, for your information, extracts from the local journals, showing, with sufficient completeness, the results of visits which I have made to different parts of the districts lying adjacent to the lower portion of the Waikato River.

- 2. Your Grace will find that, upon the whole, there is great reason to be satisfied with the state of the feelings of the tribes who inhabit those districts which I have visited.
- 3. I saw several of the leading chiefs from the upper portions of the Waikato River. They were all perfectly friendly and courteous in their language and demeanour. Some of them expressed their intention in every way to aid the British Government; others of them, however, showed a quiet determination resolutely to adhere to the position they had taken, and to strive to live in their own territory under officers of their own, and free from our rule. They said that they would in no way attack us, or interfere with us, but that they would not again return under the Government of the country; that they thought that their interests had been neglected, that lands had been wrongly taken from them, and that many promises had not been fulfilled; that they had freed themselves from our rule, and that we should find it as difficult to draw them back under it as the fowler did to catch the bird which had escaped from a snare. In many conversations which I had with various chiefs they urged the same arguments. When I told them that the acts complained of occurred from oversight, and would not be repeated, they replied that there were cases in which lands had been disposed of to the Government as long since as 1853, upon the express condition that Crown titles should be given to the Native owners for small portions of these lands, which they were to retain, and that such promises had not up to the present date been fulfilled. Indeed, they showed an entire distrust and want of confidence in the Government.
- 4 It was impossible to extract from such chiefs of the Upper Waikato—and there were those most friendly to us—any guarantee for the continuance of the present state of tranquillity: although they promised not to attack us, they had no means of forcing other Natives to observe this promise. Their object evidently was to prevent us from making any movement whatever, and to leave matters exactly in their present state, which is an extremely advantageous one for the Natives. The local Government had some time since informed the Native chiefs that it had no intention of advancing troops to the south of Otahuhu, a village where they were quartered, about nine miles from Auckland and about twenty-seven miles from the River Waikato. The country intervening between Otahuhu and the Waikato was only open by an available road for about twelve miles, leaving nearly fifteen miles of the entire distance impassable for troops in rainy weather. The Waikato bounds, on its southern side, what may be called the Settlement of Auckland for about twenty-five or thirty miles. The Natives, consequently, had the power of descending the Waikato River in large bodies at any moment, and of choosing any point of these twenty-five or thirty miles as that from which they would make an attack on this important and flourishing settlement; whilst we had no line of communication by which we could push troops on to the Waikato River for the purpose either of attack or defence.
- 5. The Natives; therefore, completely held the game in their own hand. We had not moved troops to the front, or attempted to make roads, for fear our doing so would lead to an attack; whilst, on the other hand, we could not move troops from hence to protect other parts of the New Zealand Island, lest the country near Auckland should be instantly attacked in force by the line of the Waikato River, which drains an immense extent of interior country, and down which large bodies of Natives can at any time be brought at a few hours notice. In fact, we were almost checkmated. The settlers, feeling this, were afraid to continue their operations, and many of them were abandoning their farms, so that the progress of the country was almost at a standstill. The Natives were also aware of it, and hence ventured to assume a demeanour which, I think, they otherwise would not have done.
- 6. It appeared impossible to allow such a state of things longer to continue; and, as the country between Auckland and the Waikato had been purchased from the Natives, there was little difficulty in assuming to ourselves exactly those advantages now held by the Natives, and, in placing them in a position of decided inferiority. I therefore wrote the enclosed letter to Lieutenant-General Cameron, requesting that he would move the troops from Otahuhu to the line of the Waikato, and employ them in completing the road from Auckland to that river, and in putting it in such a state that troops could move rapidly along it at all seasons of the year. Your Grace will find from the enclosed answer from General Cameron that the troops were moved accordingly, and that the road is now in process of construction. Care will also be taken to select a good site for a military post on the banks of the Waikato River, in such a position as to command the river, and prevent, if necessary, the passage of canoes along that part of the river which lies between its mouth and the western boundary of our purchased land.
- 7. We shall thus hold a position equally adapted for the purpose of attack or defence. The Natives will not venture to pass such a post in their canoes for the purpose of attacking the settlement of Auckland in its rear: and as the post will be only about forty miles from the residence of their so-called King, and the Waikato River will lie quite open to our attacks at any moment, I do not think they would venture to move any large force from the Waikato River to commence operations in any other part of the colony, when we have completed the road and occupy the position I propose. I need hardly point out how much this settlement will be benefitted by the construction of such a road, and how much easier it will hereafter be to rescue and defend the out-settlers, if any necessity for so doing should arise.

- 8. The measure I have above detailed has, I think, had a very, good effect upon the Natives; and I cannot believe that they will attempt to prevent by force the construction of a road upon our own land, and the establishment also upon our own land of a post for the protection of our own settlers. If they really do so, it would show that they were determined to renew a contest with us, which would be brought on at their own time, and at such place as they may select when they might deem us most unprepared for it. Such a show of weakness on our part as our not daring to provide for our own safety must have led them ultimately to assail us; whilst, on the other hand, I think they will respect us for taking the decided line of conduct which has now been pursued.

Waikato.—Respecting Plan for Military Settlements.

[Extract from the New Zealand Gazette. ] Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 21st April, 1863.

His Excellency the Governor directs the publication of the following despatch from Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies.

WILLIAM FOX.

Downing Street, 26th November, 1863.

Sir,—

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch No. 109, of the 29th August, transmitting a memorandum from your Responsible Advisers, containing the details of a plan which they have formed for the introduction in the Northern Island of a large body of settlers, to whom it is proposed to assign land on a species of military tenure in the Waikato, and hereafter probably in the Taranaki districts. You also enclose a copy of your reply, authorizing the immediate raising of 2,000 men for active service, pending the meeting of the General Assembly, together with copies of the conditions under which they are to be enrolled.

Principle of Confiscation approved of.

I do not disapprove of the principle of this measure. I think that any body of Natives which takes up arms against Her Majesty on such grounds as those which are alleged by the Waikatos may properly be punished by a confiscation of their common property. I think that the lands thus acquired may properly be employed in meeting the expenses of carrying on the war, nor do I see any objection to using them as the sites for military settlements, which, moreover, must soon lose their distinctive character, since, it is probable that the Natives of these districts, unlike those in the Cape Colony and Kaffraria, will soon become an unimportant minority of the inhabitants.

Danger in its Application.

But, while I acquiesce generally in the principles which you have adopted, I must add that the application of these principles is a matter of great danger and delicacy, for which the Colonial Government must remain, responsible. It will be evidently very difficult to control within wise and just limits that eagerness for the acquisition of land which the announcement of an extended confiscation is likely to stimulate among old and new settlers, and which, if uncontrolled, may lead to great injustice and oppression. Still more evidently is it possible that the Natives who still remain friendly to the Government may view this measure, not as a punishment for rebellion and murder, but as a new and flagrant proof of the determination of colonists to possess themselves of land at all risks to themselves and at any cost, and as thus furnishing the true explanation of the past and present policy of the Government. Such belief would obviously tend to make the Maoris desperate, and aid the efforts of the King party to effect a general rising throughout the Northern Island.

Your Ministry do not notice this danger in their memorandum, but they cannot have been blind to it, and I do not doubt (though you do not so inform me) that they feel their power to control the application of the principle which they have introduced, and have taken sufficient means to persuade the Maoris in general that the properties of innocent persons and tribes will be strictly respected, and that a different measure of severity will be administered to those who have taken a lead in the war and those who, though in some degree accessories to what has passed, have, as far as circumstances would allow, favoured the cause of order.

Whether due caution has been used in these respects is a question which the Home Government can only judge by the result. And I must no disguise from you that if this important determination of your Government should have the effect of extending and intensifying the spirit of disaffection, and of thus enlarging the sphere or prolonging the period of military operations, these consequences will be viewed by Her Majesty's Government with the gravest concern and reprehension.

No. 82. Copy of a Despatch from Governor Sir GEORGE GREY to his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE.

Taranaki. 9th May, 1863.

My Lord Duke,—

From - despatches which I have sent Home by this mail, your Grace will learn that a very serious state of things has arisen in the Northern Island of New Zealand, and that there is great reason to apprehend that a general rising of the Native population may shortly take place, for the purpose of making a simultaneous attack upon the several centres of European population, with a view to the total expulsion of the white race from "this Island.

- 2. X am quite satisfied that such a plot has been formed by a large number of influential Natives, as also that they are now busily engaged in trying to carry it into effect. I still hope that they will fail in conducting it on such a large scale as they propose, but I believe the danger to be of a very serious and alarming kind, which may lead to a vast destruction of life and property.

- 3. To meet this danger the promptest measures must be taken, and my Responsible Advisers concur in opinion with me that the force in this country in addition to the regiment now coming out, the 2nd Battalion 18th Regiment, will require without delay to be increased by about three thousand men.
- 4 It has been found from a long experience that there are parts of this country in which European troops carry on a war with difficulty, being neither fitted by previous training, equipment, nor habits of subsistence, for a warfare of the nature of that in which they are necessarily engaged, and it has been the general opinion of officers who have served in India that Sikhs would be better qualified than any other troops to perform the military duties required in New Zealand.
- 5. I represented this to my Responsible Advisers, and they have authorized me to apply to your Grace in order, in the present most serious state of affairs, that one European regiment and two regiments of Sikhs should be sent from India to New Zealand with as little delay as possible.
- 6. My Responsible Advisers think that the pay of the Sikhs should be doubled, and they undertake certainly to defray the increased rate of pay which will thus be given, stating further that they think this object of such great importance that they undertake to propose to the House of Assembly at its next meeting that the colony should bear the cost of the whole pay of the Sikhs.
- 7. I can assure your Grace that I think that the reinforcements asked for should be sent as promptly as possible, for much will depend upon the despatch with which they reach, this Island.

No. 83. Copy of a Despatch from Governor Sir GEORGE GREY to his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE.

Government House, Auckland, 5th April, 1864.

My Lord Duke,—

In your Grace's Despatch No. 12, of the 26th January, I am directed to state, in reference to certain murders which had been committed by Natives of these Islands, to what extent these crimes, are referable to savage lawlessness of individual persons or families, and how far they represent the feeling in which the Natives generally are determined to carry on the war.

- 2. I referred this despatch to my Responsible Advisers, and the Colonial Secretary states in" regard to it that in his opinion the atrocities alluded to are exceptional, but that the exception includes a very considerable portion of the Native race, and that, had the rebel forces been allowed to remain unchecked, they would-probably have become general.
- 3. I ought to state that, in my opinion, the custom of the Native race, in their savage state, has immemorially been as follows: If any families were, in their belief, wrongfully deprived of land by others stronger than themselves, whom they could not successfully resist in open war, they sought revenge in sudden murders before they totally abandoned the soil: as much as to say, "At least our property shall cost you dear." This custom they have in great part followed to-the present day, although the enclosed copy of a paper sent recently to the Government by the Natives in Tauranga will show that a feeling much more in consonance with the teachings of Christianity is now springing up amongst many of the Natives.

MY LORD DUKE,—

I have the honour to enclose, for your Grace's information, the copy of a private letter addressed by the Bishop of Waiapu to the Colonial Government, in which the Bishop states unreservedly his view of the necessity, of punishing the Natives who have joined in the rebellion in this country, by the confiscation of their lands, stating at the same time the reasons which have led him to form this conclusion.

Enclosure. The Bishop of WAIAPU to the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Tauranga, 15th April, 1864.

SIR,—

I learn from the late English papers that a Memorial has been sent to the Governor urging His Excellency "to avail himself of the first favourable opportunity of endeavouring to terminate the war by negotiation; and also deprecating a proposal which has been made to confiscate the lands of all contumacious and rebellious Natives."

I take the liberty of expressing an opinion on this subject, which I form upon long observation and personal intercourse with this people. That I am a friend of the Natives no one will for a moment doubt who is aware of the fact that I have spent nearly forty years of my life for their benefit; and it is because I am a friend of the Natives that I would not endeavour to screen them from punishment which I believe to be necessary, and likely to have a salutary effect upon them. In the circumstances which led to the present war, the Natives were blind to their interests, and have rejected the often-repeated advice of their best friends. They had organized the King movement, which seemed at first to be of a harmless character, but, when it was clearly tending to evil, the leading men in New Zealand, of that party whom some are fond of styling Maori sympathizers, one and all urged upon the Natives to give up this movement, and to send the flag to the Governor. The present war, it is well known, was brought on chiefly by Rewi, who acted in direct opposition to Tamehana and Matutaera; but this King organization led those o chiefs to make common cause with the rest. The Governor levied necessary war against the instigators of murder, and invited all the peaceably disposed to remain quiet, with the assurance that their lands should be intact; while those who took arms against the Government were warned that they would forfeit their land. They made a deliberate choice, and as Tamehana wrote to Archdeacon Brown—"E pa, kia rongu koe kua whakaae ahau kia whawhaitia te taone katoa; mana e kaha e pai ana, ma te Maori e kaha koia tenei."

Upon the subject of confiscation, I see no other way in which the Natives can be made to feel the evil of the course they have chosen. They had seen that in the former wars with Heke and Rangihaeata no confiscation had been made, but they were afraid now that a different course would be adopted. They knew what would follow if they could not keep up a successful opposition. The Natives of Tauranga told the Rev. C. S. Völkner, before the soldiers were sent there, that they would not object to give up the western side of Tauranga, if they might keep quiet possession of the land on the east side of Te Papa. The Opotiki Natives, too, when about to embark in this war, said, "We know that we shall lose our land—we shall not return here again;" but still they were bent on going.

The Natives who are remaining quiet have been encouraged to do so by the assurance of the advantages they would secure to themselves; but, if stringent measures are not taken against those who are making a vigorous opposition to the Government, the Natives will consider that they have after all gained the victory; and to bring them under reasonable control, and to make them amenable to one common law with ourselves, will become more difficult than it has been hitherto.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

WILLIAM WATAPU.

No. 85. COPY of a DESPATCH from the Right Hon. EDWARD CARDWELL to Governor Sir GEORGE GREY.

Downing Street, 27th June, 1864.
SIR,—

From your Despatch No. 53, of the 6th April last, I collect that some difference has arisen between yourself and your Ministers respecting the proper mode of dealing with the 183 Maori prisoners taken at Rangiriri, and the tone of your despatch leads me to the conjecture that, if your Advisers had concurred with you in adopting a definite and generous course of action with regard to these persons, the resistance to Sir Duncan Cameron by the Natives at Orakau might, in your opinion, have been less desperate, some loss of life avoided, and the completeness of the success enhanced.

On this I think it necessary to observe that, while I fully recognize the general right and duty of the Colonial Government to deal with matters of Native policy properly so called, I consider that while active operations are being carried on under the conduct of Her Majesty's officers, and in the main by Her Majesty's military and naval forces, it is for the Governor personally, as representative of the Imperial Government, to decide upon the fate of persons who are taken prisoners in the course of these military operations; and although, before adopting any such decision, I should wish you to obtain the advice, and if possible the concurrence, of your Ministers, I do not consider that concurrence indispensable. But, subject always to the positive laws of the colony, I hold you entitled to determine, and I look to you for determining, whether such prisoners, or any of them, shall be released on parole or otherwise, or whether they shall be kept under such control as may legally be applied to them as prisoners of war, or whether they shall be handed over to the civil authorities to be dealt with as criminals. I shall therefore be fully prepared to support you in case you should have thought it necessary, with or without the consent of your Ministers, so to deal with these prisoners as in your opinion the public interest may have required.

As I understand that your opinion has an especial reference to the good effect which measures of generosity would have upon the military operations of Sir Duncan Cameron, I make no doubt that, in forming that opinion, you have been fully acquainted with the views of Sir Duncan Cameron, and of the grounds on which those views have been arrived at.

Governor Sir George Grey, K.C.B., &c.

I remain, &c.,

Edward cardwell.

The Hon. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY to the SEAT OF GOVERNMENT COMMISSIONERS.

Removal of Seat of Government from Auckland. Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland. 1st August, 1864.
GENTLEMEN,—

I have the honour to transmit to you the enclosed Commission under the hand of His Excellency the Governor and the Seal of the Colony, confirming your appointments as Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the best site for the seat of Government of this colony on the shores of Cook Straits.

The Hon. Joseph Docker, the Francis Murphy, and Ronald Campbell Gunn, Esq.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM FOX.

Enclosure.

His Excellency Sir GEORGE GREY, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over Her Majesty's Colony of New Zealand and its Dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c:

To the Honourable JOSEPH DOCKER, Member of the Legislative Council of the Colony of New South Wales; the Honourable Sir FRANCIS MURPHY, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of the Colony of Victoria; and RONALD CAMPBELL GUNN, Esquire.

WHEREAS on the thirtieth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, the Honourable the Legislative Council of New Zealand, in Parliament assembled, did resolve that the address hereafter set forth should be presented to me, and the same was accordingly presented, that is to say,— "May it please your Excellency,—We, the Legislative Council of New Zealand in Parliament assembled, desire respectfully to express to your Excellency our strong conviction that the time has arrived when it has become imperatively necessary for the good government of the whole colony, and for the maintenance of its unity, that the permanent position of the seat of Government should now be settled. We are of opinion that the just claims and varied necessities of all parts of the colony require that the seat of Government should be placed in a central position, that is to say, somewhere on the shores of Cook Straits. We desire that the actual site of the capital should be submitted to some independent tribunal by which the interests of the whole colony may be impartially considered, apart from those local claims which are sure to be asserted by the several settlements of Cook Straits in the discussion of a question so important to their respective interests. Impressed with the conviction that continued delay in the settlement of this question will only tend to keep alive those feelings of rivalry and jealousy between different parts of the colony which seriously impede the action of Responsible Government, and which threaten at no distant period the dismemberment of the colony, we respectfully but earnestly pray that your Excellency will cause no time to be lost in giving effect to the foregoing resolutions in such manner as to your Excellency may seem expedient:"

And whereas on the twenty-fifth day of November, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, the House of Representatives of New Zealand, in Parliament assembled, did resolve that the address hereafter set forth should be presented to me, and the same was accordingly presented, that is to say,— "May it please your Excellency,—We, the Commons of New Zealand in Parliament assembled, desire respectfully to express to your Excellency our strong conviction that the time has arrived when it has become imperatively necessary for the good government of the whole colony, and for the maintenance of its unity, that the permanent position of the seat of Government should now be finally settled. We are of opinion that the just claims and varied necessities of all parts of the colony require that the seat of Government should be placed in a central position, that is to say, somewhere upon the shores of Cook Straits. We desire that the actual site of the capital should be submitted to some independent tribunal, by which the interests of the whole colony may be impartially considered, apart from those local claims which are sure to be asserted by the several settlements of Cook Straits in the discussion of a question so important to their respective interests. Such a tribunal would, in our opinion, be best formed by Commissioners having no interest in or relation with any part of the colony, and whose high social and intellectual standing should guarantee a full inquiry and an impartial decision, founded solely upon a consideration of the advantages which the different sites in Cook Straits present for the administration of the Government of the whole colony. We venture to think that the Governors of the neighbouring colonies would, if moved thereto by your Excellency, readily lend their aid in the selection of such Commissioners. We therefore respectfully pray that your Excellency will be pleased to request their Excellencies the Governors of New South Wales, Victoria, and Tasmania each to appoint one Commissioner of the character and for the purpose herein referred to, and that your Excellency will be pleased to submit for the consideration of the Commissioners so appointed the question as to the best site for the seat of Government within Cook Straits. Impressed with the conviction that continued delay in the settlement of this question will only tend to keep alive those feelings of rivalry and jealousy between different parts of the colony which seriously impede the action of Responsible Government, and which threaten at no distant period the dismemberment of the colony, we respectfully but earnestly pray that your Excellency will cause no time to be lost in carrying into effect the measures now submitted:"

And whereas their Excellencies the Governors of New South Wales, Victoria, and Tasmania aforesaid have, in pursuance of the aforesaid resolutions, respectively appointed the Honourable Joseph Docker, Member of the Legislative Council of the Colony of New South Wales; the Honourable Sir Francis Murphy, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of the Colony of Victoria; and Ronald Campbell Gunn, Esquire, to be such Commissioners as aforesaid:

And whereas it is expedient to confirm such appointment under the hand of the Governor and the Seal of the said Colony of New Zealand:

Now know that I, reposing special trust and confidence in your knowledge, ability, and discretion, and in exercise of all powers and authorities in this behalf enabling me, do by these presents constitute, appoint, and confirm you the said

- Honourable JOSEPH DOCKER,
- Honourable Sir FRANCIS MURPHY, and
- RONALD CAMPBELL GUNN, Esquire, to be the Commissioners described or referred to in the said resolutions: to have and to exercise all the powers, privileges, and authorities, and to discharge all the duties, therein severally set forth.

Given under my hand at the Government House, at Auckland, and issued under the Seal of the Colony of New Zealand, this twenty-ninth day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four.

By His Excellency's command.

William Fox. G. Grey.

The SEAT of GOVERNMENT COMMISSIONERS to Sir George Grey.

Commissioners' Reply.

SIR,—

Government Buildings, Nelson, 3rd October, 1864.

We have the honour to transmit to your Excellency a report upon the site for the seat of Government of New Zealand in Cook Straits, a subject which was submitted for our consideration in the Commission with which your Excellency honoured us on the 29th of July last.

We have, &c.,

Commissioners for selecting a Site for the Seat of Government. His Excellency Sir George Grey, K.C.B., &c., Auckland.

Francis murphy, Joseph Docker, Ronald C. Gunn,

Government Buildings, Nelson, 3rd October, 1864.

The Commissioners, acting under the above-recited instrument, have agreed to the following Report:—

In order to guarantee a full inquiry and impartial decision, founded solely upon a consideration of the advantages which the different sites in Cook Straits present for the administration of the Government of the whole colony, the Commissioners determined to lay down a principle of inquiry which would be rigidly applicable in the examination of every site submitted to their investigation. This principle comprised inquiries into—First. The central position of the site; its accessibility, either by land or sea, from the adjoining provinces of New Zealand, from the various British settlements in the Southern Hemisphere, and from Europe and America; and also the existing and projected means of communication. Second. The water capabilities, comprising: Character of harbour; the approaches; depth of water; nature of anchorage-ground; protection from prevailing winds; rise and fall of tides; currents, their direction and velocity; dangers, whether hidden or visible. Third. Land capabilities, comprising: The extent of proposed site; natural formation of the land; water-supply; facilities for drainage and sewerage; facilities for the construction of wharves and piers; the sanitary condition of the site and neighbourhood. Fourth. The resources of the surrounding country; its extent and character; quantity of available land (whether alienated or unalienated) for pastoral or agricultural pursuits; its timber for building purposes and fuel; other building materials; mineral products; roads and facilities of communication with proposed capital. Fifth. Capabilities of defence: from attack by land; from attack by sea. Sixth. Natural disadvantages: whether capable of removal from the appliances of science; whether beyond control or removal.

The Commissioners commenced their labours at Wellington, on the southern coast of the North Island. They collected all the information that could be laid before them on these several heads of inquiry, and tested the information, so obtained, by personal examination, wherever such a course was practicable. The Commissioners then proceeded along the South Coast to Whanganui, and personally examined the harbour and the surrounding country. The Commissioners then passed to the opposite shore of the Strait, and directed their attention to Picton, in the Province of Marlborough, and minutely examined Queen Charlotte Sound and the Tory Channel. They then proceeded inland to Blenheim, and (descending by the Wairau River) made a personal inspection of Port Underwood, represented to be the natural harbour of this district. They also examined the pastoral districts lying to the south and east of the Wairau Valley. Leaving Picton the Commissioners examined carefully the Pelorus Sound, to the Town of Havelock, in the same province, and from thence proceeded through the French Pass to Nelson. They made a personal inspection of Blind Bay, with its various harbours, including Croixelles on the east shore, and Massacre Bay and Astrolabe Roadstead upon the west, and visited portions of the interior of the country.

Having thus made themselves acquainted, as far as was practicable, with the character and capabilities of both shores of Cook Straits, the Commissioners have arrived at the unanimous conclusion that Wellington, in Port Nicholson, is the site upon the shores of Cook Straits which presents the greatest advantages for the administration of the Government of the colony.

The Commissioners cannot conclude the important mission which has been intrusted to them without recording their high sense of the valuable assistance afforded to them, in pursuing their investigation, by the authorities of the various provinces, and also of the spirit of candour and impartiality which has been displayed by the gentlemen furnishing the information they required. They are desirous also of placing on record their acknowledgment of the courtesy and personal kindness received by them in every district which they visited.

Francis Murphy. Joseph Docker Ronald C. Gunn.

Copy of a Despatch from Governor Sir George Grey, K.C.B., to the Right Hon. Edward Cardwell, M.P.

Re Government of Native Affairs.

Government House, Auckland, 26th August, 1864.

I have the honour to transmit, for your information, the copy of a memorandum which I have received from my Responsible Advisers, and which they have requested me to transmit to you, in which, in reference to your Despatches No. 43 of the 26th of April, and, No. 65 of the 26th of May, 1864, they state that they deem it to be an imperative duty to place on record without delay their protest against the introduction into this colony of a new form of government, under which Native affairs would be administered partly by the Governor and partly by his Advisers.

- 2. I have given this memorandum the best consideration in my power, and beg to offer the following remarks upon it: My Responsible Advisers think that practically no difference of opinion as yet exists between the Governor and themselves. What constitutes a difference of opinion admits of question. I think that several discussions which have taken place between my Responsible Advisers and myself regarding the terms which should be given to the Natives who have been in arms, regarding the confiscation of Native territory, the entering upon military operations, and other cognate subjects, constitute differences of opinion upon important points connected with Imperial interests; but, as copies of the greater part of such discussions have been transmitted to you for your information, you will be able to determine whether or not I am right in thinking that they show that considerable differences of opinion between my Responsible Advisers and myself have, from time to time, arisen upon subjects which are of great Imperial concern.
- 3. I would next state that I am of opinion that the publication in the colony of your Despatch No. 43, of the 26th of April, has produced a very happy effect upon the Native population here. To it I attribute in no small degree, and in spite of adverse causes, the surrender of the rebel Natives at Tauranga, and I believe its contents and the publication of them will go far to bring the war to a close in several districts of the colony. In all this I may be wrong, but I have carefully observed and considered recent events, and as the result I have arrived at the conclusion I have above stated.
- 4. Since the direction of Native affairs was originally assumed by the Colonial Ministers, a great change has taken place in this country. Then a war had recently been in appearance, concluded, and there seemed grounds to hope that peace between the two races might be permanently preserved. Now a very different state of things prevails. What may with justice be regarded as a civil war is raging in New Zealand. The parties engaged in this conflict are the whole of the European population and a part of the Natives on one side, the remaining portion of the Native population on the other. Both parties to this war are subjects of the Queen and citizens of the Empire, and they mutually allege against each other wrongs. Great Britain, to bring this war to a close, furnishes an army of nearly ten thousand men, a considerable naval force, and a large military and naval expenditure.
- 5. The Colonial Ministers at present possess and exercise here, upon all ordinary subjects, all the powers usually held and exercised by Ministers in those countries where the system of Responsible Government prevails. In addition, they now, as I understand them, protest against not being allowed to exercise absolutely powers which would virtually give them a very large control over the naval and military forces and the naval and military expenditure of Great Britain.
- 6. I think that in deciding upon the protest now transmitted the following points should be considered. The Colonial Ministers are responsible to the General Assembly for colonial matters; but, as I will presently show, the General Assembly does not even in such matters exercise such an active supervision or control over their acts and proceedings as the Parliament of Great Britain exercises over those of the British Ministry; and when it is remembered that the General Assembly is in no way responsible for the mode in which Her Majesty's naval and military forces are employed, or for the naval and military expenditure of Great Britain, I think that that body would exercise little or no control over the Colonial Ministers in reference to those matters.

- 7. The members of the General Assembly are collected from great distances, are drawn away from their own private avocations, to which they are anxious to return as speedily as possible. The settlements from which they come are also removed by long distances from the capital, and have frequently interests of a totally different character from those of the population inhabiting districts where there are many Natives. From their remoteness from the seat of Government the information the inhabitants of such settlements possess regarding public affairs is limited: it is frequently only such as the Ministry of the day thinks proper to suffer to transpire. Hence less interest is taken in what may be termed general public affairs, as distinguished from provincial public affairs, than would be imagined, and public opinion regarding general public affairs is, in the settlements remote from the capital, formed upon limited, often erroneous, information. When, therefore, the General Assembly meets, some time elapses before the members can thoroughly acquaint themselves with what has passed since their last meeting and ere they have fully mastered this the time for their separation has almost arrived. Sometimes also papers upon important subjects are only called for after the Assembly has met for some time. I believe in some cases the printing of these papers has been hardly completed when the Assembly has separated. The sessions of the Assembly are also not only short, but by far too infrequent to enable them to exercise such a control over public affairs as is exercised by the Parliament of Great Britain.
- 8. For instance, the General Assembly met at its last session on the 19th of October, 1863, and was prorogued on the 14th of December of the same year, after a session of only fifty-six days, and it may probably not meet again until the month of March, 1865—that is, not until after an interval of fifteen months.
- 9. Whilst the General Assembly exercises so feeble a control over public affairs, what is termed the Cabinet bears but a faint resemblance to the strong and powerful Ministry which can be formed in Great Britain. Since September, 1861, there have been three Ministries in New Zealand. The present Cabinet consists of five members, one of whom has been absent in England during the greater portion of the time of the existence of the present Ministry. Two other members of the Ministry have been frequently absent from the capital; so that the direction of affairs, involving largely the interests of Great Britain in the employment of her military and naval forces and the expenditure of her funds, has rested at such times in the hands of the remaining two members of the Ministry, who are the two partners who compose one of the legal firms in the Town of Auckland. And it was on advice thus tendered to him that the Governor was frequently expected to act in the most important affairs of Imperial concern. The protest I now enclose is made by this Cabinet, and not by the General Assembly, and it is made before your last despatch is known in the colony, and before public opinion has been in any way formed or expressed on the subject.
- 10. The position of the Governor in this colony is also peculiar, from the relations existing between the Mother-country and a colony. The Governor is the person who here issues in his own name all orders to the chief military and naval authorities; such orders are, in fact, openly and ostensibly his orders, and he is apparently responsible for all acts done under them; and when his Ministers require him to sign such orders he is really their servant, and yet is responsible to the British Government for the orders they compel him to give, and which may be repugnant to his own wishes and feelings; and he has also here none of the facilities for forming a new Ministry which the Crown in England or the Governors of neighbouring colonies possess; for, from the great distance of the several settlements from each other, the defective information they possess on public affairs, and the rare and short occasions on which New Zealand statesmen are brought together in the General Assembly, it is almost impossible for the Governor to consult them as to whether they will, or will not, form a new Government, or for them to determine what support they can reckon upon in the General Assembly if they undertake to do so.
- 11. It should also be remembered, in reference to the two distinct populations in this country, that the Native population, who are the largest landed proprietors in the Northern Island, are unrepresented in the General Assembly: the other population, the European one, is the governing body. Necessarily in a civil war the feeling of race exercises some influence, and men's passions more or less lead them to adopt extreme views, and too hasty and often ill-considered acts, in which they are sustained by a public opinion to which there is little or no counterpoise, so that surrounded by such influences it would be very difficult for a Minister, endowed with the very calmest mind to arrive at a correct conclusion; and this difficulty is greatly increased when he has to please a constituency in which almost universal suffrage prevails, and which is composed of one race engaged in a civil war with a race which it is to govern, and which is to be subdued by an army supplied by the Mothercountry.
- 12. Great Britain, in whose service the officers and men of her naval and military forces have engaged themselves, often from the highest motives, owes something to the feelings of these officers and men, and something to the welfare of the wives and children of her soldiers; and I do not think that when two populations are arrayed against one another, as is now the case in this colony, the uncontrolled power over the lives, actions, and honour of these officers and men, and over the welfare of their wives and children, should be handed over to irresponsible persons, or at least but feebly responsible to a Colonial Legislature, the seats of the members of which depend upon constituencies who must, by the course of events, be more or less excited against another race which is unrepresented in that Legislature.

- 13. I have used the words "irresponsible persons," for in truth a Colonial Ministry cannot be said to be responsible to the Parliament of Great Britain, nor even in any indirect manner to the British taxpayer, whose resources they would direct the expenditure of. I cannot but think that, whilst a civil war prevails in New Zealand, Imperial officers, responsible to the British Government, should exercise such a control over the management of public affairs as is directed in your despatch against which my Responsible Advisers protest. At the time of their protest being made they had not sanctioned the publication in the colony of your Despatch No. 65, of the 26th May, 1864, so that no expression of public opinion had taken place here regarding it. I am not at all satisfied that when this subject has been fully considered public opinion will be adverse to the instructions you have issued for the management of public affairs during the present crisis. I think that all would see that these instructions, which have been issued to meet a temporary emergency, would lapse the moment a normal state of things was restored in the colony, and that they were suited to meet the exigencies of the present moment and to provide for the restoration of peace to the country. I think no doubt should be entertained of the good sense and good feeling of the inhabitants of New Zealand, that you should feel satisfied that you will be supported by a large majority in this country in doing that which is right, and that when, after full consideration, you have determined that a certain line of policy is that which justice to Great Britain and to both races in this colony requires to be pursued, you may direct that it should be carried out in the full confidence that the Governor here will, when all the facts become known, have ample support in giving effect to your instructions.

The Right Hon. Edward Cardwell, M.P.

I remain, &c.,

G. Grey.

Enclosure. Memoranda relative to Relations existing between the Governor and his Responsible Advisers.

Memorandum by Ministers on Native Government.

In their memorandum of the 2nd of August last, which forms the subject-matter of His Excellency's despatch to the Secretary of State of the 26th August, No. 124, Ministers stated that a passage in Mr. Cardwell's despatch of the 26th of May, No. 65, was capable of an interpretation subversive of the arrangements by which responsibility in Native affairs was transferred to the Colonial Government; but it appeared to His Excellency's Responsible Advisers that the following sentences were intended to qualify that interpretation, and that such a reading would render Mr. Cardwell's despatch harmonious with and not antagonistic to that of the Duke of Newcastle of the 26th of February, 1863, which embodies the arrangements between the Imperial and Colonial Governments as to the conduct of Native affairs.

It thus appears that, in the opinion of Ministers, the despatch referred to was capable of two interpretations,—one by which the arrangements made would be subverted, and the other consistent with it. It was against the former interpretation, which would, in fact, introduce a new form of government under which Native affairs would be administered partly by the Governor and partly by his Advisers, that Ministers thought it their duty to protest.

It is very remarkable that throughout His Excellency's very long despatch he does not commit himself to an opinion as to which interpretation is the correct one,—his despatch will suit either.

This is no doubt very safe; but Ministers most respectfully submit that it is neither candid nor fair. His Excellency, in the last paragraph of his despatch, states, "I am not at all satisfied that when the subject has been fully considered public opinion will be adverse to the instructions you have issued for the management of public affairs during the present crisis." If those instructions are intended to subvert the arrangement of February, 1863, and to authorize the Governor without qualification to act on his own judgment, irrespectively of his Responsible Advisers (and it was against this Ministers protested), they beg to express their dissent from His Excellency's opinion; but if, on the other hand, the instructions are not inconsistent with that arrangement, but only point out the manner in which it is to be carried into practice, the opinion of Ministers is not adverse to, them, nor do they believe will be that of the public.

Ministers now beg to be permitted to make some corrections in matters of fact, and to point out what appear to them to be some false inferences

- 1. His Excellency states it to be his opinion that several discussions which have taken place between his Responsible Advisers and himself constitute differences of opinion. It would have been folly for Ministers to have said that these discussions did not exhibit differences of opinion, but Ministers did not say anything which could be construed to bear such an interpretation. The words used by Ministers on the 2nd of August last were these: "Practically no difference of opinion as yet exists between His Excellency and his Advisers." At that time the statement was true—no difference did then exist of a practical nature; for, although differences had frequently arisen, they had been obviated by Ministers, with an earnest desire to yield to His Excellency as the representative of the Imperial Government, surrendering their own opinions; and therefore, although differences had arisen, no practical result was then in existence.
- 2. His Excellency next states that he is of opinion that the publication in the colony of Mr. Cardwell's Despatch No. 43, of the 26th of April, has produced a very happy effect on the Native population, and that to it His Excellency attributes, in no small degree, and in spite of adverse causes, the surrender of the rebels at Taurariga. Ministers feel bound to express their dissent from this opinion; and it is quite clear that the Tauranga Natives had made up their minds to surrender before they ever heard of Mr. Cardwell's despatch or its contents. The despatch was published in the New Zealand Gazette on the 30th of June, and was republished in the Auckland newspapers on the following day, which reached Tauranga on the 4th or 5th of July. The Natives who surrendered were at that time dispersed in the forests at the back of Tauranga, 150 miles distant from Auckland. On the 5th of July Mr. Rice received a communication from them that they desired to surrender, and it was several days after that before they became aware that Mr. Cardwell's despatch was in existence. The true cause of their submission may be found in their defeat on the 21st of June at Te Ranga, by the forces under Colonel Greer, and the straits they were reduced to by the want of food. These, indeed, are the reasons they themselves assigned for their submission.
- 3. Paragraph No. 4 of His Excellency's despatch is calculated to convey a very erroneous impression as regards the assumption of responsibility in Native affairs by the Colonial Government. The facts are these: In 1856, when Ministerial responsibility in the management of public affairs was granted to the Colony of New Zealand, an exception was made of Native affairs, the entire control of which, by arrangement then made, was reserved to the Representative of the Imperial Government. Soon after the arrival of Sir George Grey, in September, 1861, the then Ministers accepted the transfer from the Governor of that responsibility, subject to the confirmation of the General Assembly; but both Houses, in the following session held in August, 1862, passed resolutions declining the functions which had been relinquished to them; and in a despatch from His Excellency to the Secretary of State, dated the 26th of August, 1862, he stated that he had consented to act in the spirit of these resolutions until further instructions should reach him. His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, in a despatch dated the 26th of February, 1863, informed the Governor that the Imperial Government would not recall its decision with respect to the administration of Native affairs; but no alteration was made till November, 1863, when the General Assembly, having had under their consideration the despatch of the 26th of February, 1863, "conveying the fixed determination of Her Majesty's Government to revoke the arrangement of 1856, and for the future require the colonists to undertake the responsibility of the management of Native affairs," by resolutions passed in both Houses accepted the responsibility thus placed on the colonists. It is true that a great change has taken place, as stated by His Excellency, since the direction of Native affairs was originally, that is, in 1861, assumed temporarily by the Colonial Minister; but it is equally true that that direction was accepted by them subject to the confirmation of the General Assembly, which was refused, and that no change has taken place in this country since November, 1863, several months after the present war had broken out, when responsibility in the management of Native affairs was definitively transferred to the Colonial Ministry.

The same paragraph of His Excellency's despatch is at least inaccurate when it states that the parties engaged-in the present conflict are the whole of the European population and a part of the Natives on one side, and the remaining portion of the Native population on the other; the fact being that in addition to the two hostile Native parties there is a third, exceeding in number the other two conjointly—namely, a party which has taken no active part on either side, but has remained neutral, watching the course of events.

- 4. In their memorandum of the 2nd of August, Ministers stated that His Excellency is bound to judge for himself as to the justice and propriety of employing Her Majesty's troops, and that Ministers do not claim the right to enforce their policy with Her Majesty's Imperial forces. Ministers are unable to reconcile these declarations with His Excellency's understanding that they "protest against not being allowed to exercise absolutely powers which would virtually give them a very large control over the naval and military forces and the naval and military expenditure of Great Britain."
- 5. Ministers feel assured that His Excellency's opinion that because the General Assembly is not responsible it would therefore exercise little or no control over the Colonial Ministers in reference to military and naval matters, is clearly erroneous. Experience has proved exactly the reverse. No questions have been more fully and energetically discussed in the General Assembly of New Zealand than those having reference to advice tendered to the Governor on questions as to the employment of forces; nor indeed could it well be otherwise, for such questions are of the utmost importance to the colony, involving not only its welfare, but the safety of the lives and property of the inhabitants.
- 6. It is quite true that the members of the General Assembly are collected from great distances, from settlements having a totally different character from those of the population inhabiting districts where there are many Natives, and it must be admitted that generally the information the inhabitants of such, settlements possess regarding public affairs is limited, though certainly a more general interest is taken in public affairs in New Zealand than in England, and a greater knowledge of them possessed by the public at large. His Excellency, however, does not state what inference he wishes to be drawn from his statement, but it is clear that it is not a favourable one. On the other hand, Ministers regard the facts admitted as beneficial rather than otherwise to a due appreciation and just management of Native affairs during the excitement necessarily incident to the suppression of a formidable rebellion; for the settlements distant from the seat of hostilities may be fairly expected to send to the Assembly men of calmer judgment, and the totally different character of the population will act as a counterpoise to each other. The main object, however, of the 7th and following paragraphs of His Excellency's despatch appears to be to depreciate Responsible Ministries in general in this colony, and the present Ministers in particular, to disparage the General Assembly and find fault with public opinion, with apparently the object of proving that there is no one in the colony at the present juncture fit to be intrusted with the management of public affairs, and therefore it should be handed over to Imperial officers, or, in other words, to His Excellency himself. The charge that the information given to the Assembly by the Ministry of the day is frequently only such as it thinks fit to transpire, conveys of course the imputation that papers are frequently purposely kept back. This charge Ministers distinctly deny; it is entirely without foundation; and Ministers can indeed with confidence appeal to the Parliamentary papers published in every session of the Assembly in proof of the truth of their denial. The several statements which follow on the same subject Ministers feel bound in justice to say are either without foundation or greatly exaggerated.
- 7. His Excellency states that the sessions of the General Assembly are not only short, but by far too infrequent to enable them to exercise such control over public affairs as is exercised by the Parliament of Great Britain. It may be observed that if the meetings of the General Assembly were infrequent it would be in strict conformity with the plan of a Constitution proposed for New Zealand by His Excellency himself in 1851, and substantially adopted by the Constitution Act. But how far His Excellency is correct may be judged by the following statement, commencing with the year 1860, that in which the Maori disturbance first broke out in Taranaki:—

It must be borne in mind that mere local matters are not subjects of legislation in the General Assembly, as they are dealt with by the Provincial Councils, so that only questions of general interest engage the attention of the General Legislature; and it is unquestionable that no subject introduced into the Assembly has received the same consideration and has been so fully discussed as those relating to the Maoris, or has occupied one-fifth part of the time: in fact it may be safely affirmed that during the last four sessions—those above referred to—few days have passed in which Native affairs, in some shape or other, were not under consideration, and a very large period of the session of 1863 was exclusively devoted to them.

- 8. It would be presumption in a Ministry in New Zealand to institute any comparison between themselves and the "strong and powerful Ministry which can be found in Great Britain." But, because a New Zealand Ministry is comparatively very weak, it can be no justification for the inaccurate and exaggerated statements made by His Excellency in paragraph No. 9 of his despatch. It is not true that the direction of affairs, involving largely the interests of Great Britain, have frequently rested in the hands of two members only of the Ministry; and it is not true that it was on advice thus tendered to him that the Governor was frequently expected to act in the most important affairs of Imperial concern. The present Government entered office in October, 1863, and from that time to the present Mr. Fox has been absent from time to time 38 days collectively on urgent public, business, and Mr. Gillies 144 days, for the most part in accordance with the arrangement made when he joined the Government, that he should generally reside in the South, with a view to special attention to southern business. And Ministers beg to state most distinctly that no Ministerial advice has ever been tendered to His Excellency by any two members of the Government which had not been previously considered and decided on invariably by one and frequently by two other members of the Government, and that such advice has been in furtherance of plans previously agreed to by every member of the Government. As His Excellency has considered it necessary, for the information of the Secretary of State, fully to express his opinion, in rather personal terms, of the New Zealand Colonial Government, both Executive and Legislative, it seems necessary, in order to render the information of the Secretary of State complete, that the opinion entertained in the colony in reference to His Excellency himself should not be omitted. Ministers, however, will not follow His Excellency's example by descending into personalities, but will confine themselves to a simple expression of opinion, without entering on the reasons on which it is founded. Ministers are clearly of opinion—and on this they certainly believe that they speak the sentiments of a large majority of both House of Assembly and of the public in general—that Responsible Government in New Zealand can never be successfully worked under His Excellency Sir George Grey.

- 9. Many of, the observations of His Excellency in reference to the difficulties of a Governor under Responsible Government in New Zealand are more or less correct. But it may be said that with ordinary tact and management they are not insuperable. No doubt there is an essential difference between Responsible Government in New Zealand and in the Mother-country. It is true that in the colony the Governor issues orders in his own name, and that in matters not involving Imperial interests they are the orders of his Ministry who are responsible, and are invariably so considered at all events in the colony. If Ministers advise that which is repugnant to His Excellency's own feelings he is not compelled to give his assent; but he has his constitutional remedy, and, although there certainly are impediments in the way of forming a new Ministry, they are much exaggerated by His Excellency, and there is no difficulty which could not be easily overcome if his views coincided with those held by a majority of the House of Representatives, or with those held by a majority of the Executive.
- 10. No doubt, with a civil war raging in a country, there is danger of men's passions misleading them; but Ministers refer with the utmost confidence to their acts and expressed opinions since they have been in office as a refutation of any charge that may be brought against them that their passions have led them to "adopt extreme views," or to do "hasty and ill-considered acts."
- 11. What Great Britain owes to the feelings of her naval and military forces—and His Excellency reminds her that she does owe something—is not a question for the Colonial Government; but His Excellency's observations are equally applicable to the colonial forces, and Ministers cannot therefore permit them to pass without notice. They beg most respectfully to express their dissent from what to them appears to be a new and dangerous doctrine, that the feelings of the naval and military forces of a State are to be consulted as to the political justice, propriety, or expediency of the service on which they are employed. Ministers entirely agree with His Excellency that the "uncontrolled power over the lives, actions, and honour" of the officers and men of Her Majesty's Imperial troops and "the welfare of their wives and children" should not be "handed over to irresponsible persons, or at least but feebly responsible to the Colonial Legislature." As Ministers have never claimed such a power, as they have frequently stated, and certainly have never attempted to exercise it, they are quite at a loss to understand against what so much declamation is directed. So far indeed from such power having ever been exercised, Ministers feel that they have been excluded by His Excellency from that which they conceive that they have a legitimate right to. For some time past His Excellency has not thought it necessary even to communicate any information relative, to military movements, and at this very time it is only through the newspapers that they have become informed that some expedition is about to be despatched to the south, either to Taranaki or Whanganui or to both; nor has His Excellency permitted his Ministers to see the despatches received from Her Majesty's Secretary of State by the last mail ten days ago. If Whanganui be the intended scene of military operations, Ministers feel especially that they should have been informed, for it appears to them of importance that timely notice of the intention should have been given, in order to place on their guard the out-settlers who will be exposed to Native outrage.
- 12. The repetition by His Excellency in various forms of the imputation that Ministers desire or claim to exercise control over Her Majesty's Imperial troops, and divert the expenditure of the resources of the British taxpayer renders it necessary for Ministers to repeat that they never did and do not claim anything of the kind. But on the other hand they do claim, and as long, as they remain Responsible Ministers will exercise, as they feel it to be their duty, control over the resources of the taxpayer, and will not consent to surrender that control to the Imperial officers.

Ministers entirely agree with His Excellency that no doubt need be entertained of the sense and good-feeling of the inhabitants of New Zealand, and that Her Majesty's Secretary of State will be supported by a large majority in doing that which is right. The inhabitants of New Zealand have no desire unduly to interfere with the functions of Her Majesty's Imperial officers, nor to exercise any powers over Her Majesty's Imperial forces; but on the other hand they do claim and feel that they have a right to expect that in all questions affecting colonial interests their legitimate influence should not be denied them. They are above all things anxious that the present war should be speedily terminated: indeed, it is of vital importance to them that it should be. They have made great sacrifices with the hope and expectation that it will be brought to that satisfactory conclusion, a just and permanent peace; and they earnestly hope that His Excellency the Governor will not be induced to forego all that has been gained towards that end by patching up a mere truce. Ministers feel assured, to use the words of his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, that "it is better even to prolong the war, with all its evils, than to end it without producing in the Native mind such a conviction of our strength as may render peace not temporary and precarious, but well-grounded and lasting."

Ministers most respectfully request that His Excellency will be pleased to transmit a copy of this memorandum to Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies by the mail of the 8th of next month, as His Excellency's despatch, to which this memorandum refers, was transmitted by the last mail.

Fredk Whitaker.
30th September, 1864.

Ministers find the following passages in His Excellency's despatch:—

- "4. With regard to the general complaint made by my Responsible Advisers of the delay in the transmission of documents to your department, I beg to state that every effort has been made by the very limited establishment allowed me to copy for transmission all documents which it appeared necessary to send Home. But the office accommodation allowed me is too limited.
- "5. There is now an army of nearly ten thousand men here, a large squadron, and consequently a vast correspondence to conduct; besides the ordinary business of an important Government, within the limits of which a civil war prevails., I am allowed for office accommodation a small office for myself, a writing-room of 12 feet by 16, and one other room of the same size as a general office. The assistance allowed me is miserably inadequate for the work to be performed, and has not been increased at the time that all the other departments have been largely augmented; whilst at the very time my Responsible Advisers complain I was not: transmitting documents to England they were refusing, as will be seen from the enclosed statement of the Despatch Clerk in my office (Memorandum by F. G. Moore, 1st July, 1864), to furnish me with copies of documents in their office which I required for transmission to you, on the plea that any documents that they wished to have sent Home should be copied in duplicate, but that they could not order copies of any documents, to be made which the Governor desired should be sent, but which they did not care about sending."

Ministers think it necessary to place these facts on record, which will show that the excuse offered by His Excellency is absolutely without foundation:—

- 1. They have never limited His Excellency to any amount of office room, nor interfered in any way with his arrangements at Government House. His Excellency can take as many rooms of that house for business as he thinks proper; and those, used for that purpose have been so used without any direction or interference on the part of any Ministry.
- 2. His Excellency has never complained before, nor in any way intimated, that he had not sufficient accommodation for his official establishment.
- 3. Ministers expressly deny having ever refused, or directed to be refused, any official assistance asked for by His Excellency in his official establishment, and have in all the instances when it has been requested immediately supplied extra clerical aid in His Excellency's official establishment. The memorandum by Mr. Moore on this point, forwarded by His Excellency to Mr. Cardwell, has not been seen by Ministers.
- 4. In reference to the non-transmission of the particular document referred to, Ministers are quite certain that no request was ever made to them to have it copied, and that they never refused any such request; nor was it ever intimated to them that it was being kept back, least of all that it was kept back for any such reason.

In conclusion, they beg to express their most respectful opinion that it is hopeless to attempt to work Responsible Government with His Excellency, if he continues the practice he has adopted on so many occasions, and which has already formed the subject of complaint, of suppressing or withholding from Her Majesty's Government important documents of his Ministers, while he forwards by the first mail after events his own despatches and statements, without Ministers even seeing them till after the mail has left.

MEMORANDUM by MINISTERS on NATIVE GOVERNMENT.

The two despatches of Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated the 26th of April and the 26th of May, 1864, and numbered 43 and 65, have received the careful consideration of His Excellency's Responsible Advisers.

There are several matters in these despatches which will probably hereafter require notice, but at present His Excellency's Advisers desire to confine themselves to one point of vital and paramount importance. The despatch of the 26th of May contains the following passage: "But it is my duty to say to you plainly that if, unfortunately, their [Ministers'] opinion should be different from your own as to the terms of peace, Her Majesty's Government expect you to act upon your own judgment." Ministers beg most respectfully to recall to mind briefly what has taken place during the last two years on the subject of responsible government in the administration of Native affairs. In the session of the General Assembly held in 1862, both Houses strongly represented, in an address to Her Majesty, the then state of the colony, strongly remonstrated against being compelled to accept responsibility in Native affairs, and respectfully declined to undertake the task. Responsibility from that time rested with His Excellency the Governor, who consented to act in the spirit of the resolutions of the two Houses, until further instructions from the Secretary of State should reach him.

His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, in his despatch of the 26th of February, 1863, No. 22, in communicating the decision of Her Majesty's Government on the addresses of the Houses of Assembly, states that "Her Majesty was pleased to receive them very graciously, but has not commanded me to recall the decision communicated to you in my despatch of the 26th of May [1862], with respect to the administration of Native affairs." And His Grace further states that the Home Government has resigned the management of Native affairs, that "the relinquishment does not require the assent of the colonists to make it effectual," and that "it is completed by the act of the Home Government." His Grace then goes on to define the position of the Governor in these words: "Your constitutional position with regard to your Advisers will (as desired by your late Ministry) be the same in regard to Native as to ordinary colonial affairs: that is to say, you will be generally bound to give effect to the policy which they recommend for your adoption, and for which, therefore, they will be responsible. I say, generally, because there remain several contingencies, in which it will be your duty to act upon your own judgment in opposition to theirs. You would be bound to exercise the negative powers which you possess by preventing any step which invaded Imperial rights, or was at variance with the pledges on the faith of which Her Majesty's Government acquired the sovereignty of New Zealand, or in any other way marked by evident injustice towards Her Majesty's subjects of the Native race. In the interests of the colonists themselves, you might feel yourself bound, under conceivable circumstances, to appeal from your Government to the General Assembly, and from the General Assembly to the constituencies, in case the policy recommended for your acceptance appeared to you clearly disastrous. You would be bound to judge for yourself as to the justice and propriety of employing, and the best mode of employing, Her Majesty's forces. In this matter you might of course fortify yourself by taking the opinions of your Ministers, but the responsibility would rest with yourself and the officer in command."

In the session of the General Assembly of 1863, being the next following the receipt of the Secretary of State's despatch of the 26th February, the House of Representatives unanimously passed the following resolutions: "That this House—having had under its consideration the despatch of Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated the 26th February, 1863, conveying the fixed determination of Her Majesty's Imperial Government to revoke the arrangements of 1856, and for the future to require the colonists to undertake the responsibility of the management of Native affairs—recognizes with the deepest gratitude the great interest which Her Most Gracious Majesty has always taken in the welfare of all races of her colonial subjects, and the thoroughly efficient aid which Her Majesty's Government is now affording for the suppression of the rebellion unhappily existing, and the Imperial establishment of law and order in the colony; and, relying on the cordial co-operation of the Imperial Government for the future, cheerfully accepts the responsibility thus placed upon the colonists, and at the same time records its firm determination to use its best endeavours to secure a sound and lasting peace, to do, justice impartially to both races of Her Majesty's subjects, and to promote the civilization and welfare of all classes of the inhabitants of these Islands." The Legislative Council passed a similar resolution by a majority of 15 to 1.

A clear, definitive arrangement as to the conduct of Native affairs was then come to between Her Majesty's Imperial Government and the General Assembly of New Zealand, which it is most respectfully submitted it was incumbent on both parties to adhere to.

His Excellency's Responsible Advisers cannot, however, but feel apprehensive that the passage they have quoted from Mr. Cardwell's despatch of the 26th May may be made as capable of an interpretation subversive of this arrangement, and, if fully acted on, involve the resumption of the administration of Native affairs in matters of the most vital importance to the colony. It is clear that that passage, read alone, bears such an interpretation; but it appears to His Excellency's Advisers that the sentences following that quoted qualify it, and are intended to operate as instructions as to the manner in which His Excellency is intended to act upon his own judgment should he differ from his "Responsible Advisers. This reading renders Mr. Cardwell's despatch harmonious with, and not, as it otherwise would be, antagonistic to, that of the Duke of Newcastle. Under his Grace's arrangement with, the colony, His Excellency the Governor has recognized negative powers, and he is bound to judge for himself as to the justice and propriety, of employing Her Majesty's forces; but he is not entitled, without the advice of his Ministers, to deal with any question of Native policy; and, if the policy they recommend for his acceptance appears to him clearly disastrous, he may appeal to the General Assembly, and from the General Assembly to the constituencies. The Governor's constitutional position with regard to his Advisers is the same in regard to Native as to ordinary colonial affairs. His Excellency's Responsible Advisers are anxious not to be misunderstood. They do not claim the right to enforce their policy with Her Majesty's Imperial troops—in this respect His Excellency has a negative power, which is not disputed; but His Excellency's Advisers do insist that the Governor has not the right to carry out a policy of his own, irrespective of his Responsible Advisers. The despatch, of the Duke of Newcastle, of the 26th of February, clearly abandons any such right, and the despatches from Mr. Cardwell cannot be accepted as reviving it.

Her Majesty's Secretary of State may fully rely that His Excellency's Ministers are animated by a just sense of the exertions and sacrifices which have already been made by the Mother-country for the colony, and that, on colonial grounds, they are as anxious as the Governor can be to terminate the present hostilities. Practically, no difference of opinion as yet exists between His Excellency and his Advisers, and they trust it may not arise; but as a feeling has arisen in the colony, since the receipt of Mr. Cardwell's despatch of the 26th of April, that it is the intention of the Imperial Government to subvert the existing arrangement as to the administration of Native affairs in some matters, and these of the highest importance to the colony, His Excellency's Advisers deem it to be an imperative duty to place on record without delay their protest against the introduction of a new form of government, under which Native affairs would be administered partly by His Excellency and partly by his Advisers—in fact, two Governments for the same affairs, which not only would not always aid one another, but which would sometimes act at cross purposes with each other, rendering it quite impossible that Her Majesty's Government could be advantageously carried on under such a system: a system far worse than that which the Duke of Newcastle pronounced a failure, and which could not but operate mischievously, alike to both Imperial and Colonial interests.

Ministers request that His Excellency will be pleased to transmit a copy of this memorandum to Her Majesty's Secretary of State.

Fredk. Whitaker.

Auckland,

2nd August, 1864.

No. 89. Copy of a Despatch from Governor Sir George Grey, K.C.B., to the Right Hon. Edward Cardwell, M.P.

SIR,—

Government House, Auckland, 27th October,.1864.

I have the honour to transmit, for your information, the copy of, a Proclamation I yesterday issued, in which, in conformity with your instructions, as contained in your Despatch No. 43, of the 26th of April last, I notified to those tribes and persons who had been engaged in the present unhappy rebellion that Her Majesty's clemency would be extended to all those who would come in on or before the 10th day of December next, take the oath of allegiance, and make the cession of such territory as might be in each instance fixed by the Governor and Lieutenant-General.

- 2. You will find from my correspondence with my Responsible Advisers, copies of which are enclosed (see memorandum of 10th instant), that I undertook that care should be exercised to take any cessions of land in a manner which should unequivocally exhibit the Natives who made them in the position of defeated rebels, and, further, that no arrangement for the cession of any land should be concluded until the advice tendered by my Responsible Advisers had been fully considered.
- 3. None of my Responsible Advisers, however, countersigned the Proclamation. I nevertheless deemed it to be my duty to issue it. It is in strict conformity with your instructions, and I consulted Sir D. Cameron and Commodore Sir W. Wiseman, and they both concurred with me in, thinking that the Proclamation was a wise and proper one, and that it was my duty to issue it, and that, the great matter for regret was that, from the obstacles thrown in my way, its issue had been so long delayed.

The Right Hon. Edward Cardwell, M.P., &c.

I have, &c.,

G. Grey.

MEMORANDUM by MINISTERS.

Ministers recommend that the prisoners forwarded to Wellington from Tauranga by, the military authorities should be dealt with by them under the ordinary, powers of military law. Ministers think it desirable, that the said prisoners should be brought to trial under, martial law, on a charge of endeavouring to incite Her Majesty's subjects to join in the present rebellion.

F. A. Weld.

Wellington,

1st March, 1865.

MEMORENDUM by the ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

In the case of the Native prisoners captured by the Arawas and handed over to the military authorities at Tauranga, His Excellency, under the advice of Ministers, has, intimated his opinion that such persons should be tried by Court-martial. The Lieutenant-General asks under what authority this can be, done. I will not undertake to define the exact limits of the military, authority in such a case. These prisoners, who were taken by Colonel Greer's directions, are not, it is true, within the provisions of the Mutiny Act; but, there now being an armed insurrection of the Natives in various parts of the colony, the military, power being actually engaged in quelling such insurrection, and these prisoners having been captured by direction of Colonel Greer, on account of the part supposed to have been taken by them in aiding such insurrection, it will be, I conceive, in accordance with established practice to try them by Court-martial. I refer to former instances in this colony, such as the trial of the murderers of the Gilfillan family by Major Laye (see also the case of Lord Torrington, in Ceylon: Lord Grey's Colonial Policy, Vol. ii., p. 185), and the case of the prisoners referred to in. Governor Grey's despatch to Earl Grey of the 28th December, 1847. (See Parliamentary Papers, 1848, p. 65.) In the latter case the question as to the power to try such prisoners by Court-martial was fully discussed, and the opinion of the then Attorney-General of the colony was given, expressly recommending that course, which was adopted and sanctioned by the Secretary, of State. (See despatch, from Lord, Grey to Sir George Grey, 8th. June, 1848: Parliamentary Papers, 1848, p. 161.) The only difference between that case and the present is that in that case martial law had been, actually proclaimed in the district, and might have been considered as in itself a warrant to the military authorities for their proceeding by Court-martial. In this case the express instructions of the Governor to the military authorities would have like force.

It is true that all exercise of military power, beyond the law, requires the indemnity of the Legislature. The power of taking human life or destroying property, in a case of intestine war, is a power not known to the law. When the Civil Government requires the intervention of military force, and calls in aid the military authorities, under such circumstances it makes itself responsible for the consequences; and the practice is to obtain from the Legislature an Act of Indemnity, which will be done in the present instance. But the power of trying by Court-martial and inflicting punishment under a judicial form is at least as reasonable and consistent with law as the power of taking life and destroying property (necessarily exercised without such form) in the ordinary operations of war. So far as any proceedings by. Court-martial, or any punishment inflicted under it, may be in excess of the, ordinary law, it will require to be and will be covered by Act of Indemnity. The reasons given by Governor Grey, in his despatch of the 28th December, 1847, for adopting this course of proceeding, apply with equal force to the present case. It is a case with which practically the ordinary civil tribunals find themselves unable to deal; and yet to allow prisoners taken under circumstances like the present to go at large unpunished would be attended with the worst possible results.

MEMORANDUM by the GOVERNOR.

The Governor, fearing that an impression prevails in some quarters that the present war is carried on for the profit and gratification of the colonists, trusts that his Responsible Advisers will, in all instances, whether in recommending measures for the Governor's adoption or acquiescing in those he may recommend, make such, a full and explicit statement of the objects they have in view, and of the reasons on which the proceedings they advocate are based, that no misunderstanding can take place in the minds of just and unprejudiced persons regarding the propriety and necessity of the course which may be adopted.

4th March, 1865.

MEMORANDUM by MINISTERS.

Ministers, in referring to the Governor's memorandum of the 4th instant, expressing a fear "that an impression prevails in some quarters that the present war is carried on for the profit and gratification of the colonists," are prompted by their desire to meet His Excellency's wishes rather than by any sense of the necessity of rebutting imputations so vague and so indirect.

Ministers feel that they might safely rely upon His Excellency's sense of justice for their defence. They are not aware that any difference of opinion has existed between His Excellency and themselves regarding either the advisability of taking decided action in the country between Taranaki and Whanganui, or regarding the ends sought to be obtained by such action. They believe that on these subjects there has been a free interchange of opinion between His Excellency and his Responsible Advisers, and that such consultations have in no case resulted in any difference of opinion. Ministers would undoubtedly have preferred that His Excellency should, after visiting the Southern Island, as proposed by them, have arrived at Wellington and Whanganui, if necessary, about the time that Lieutenant-General Sir D. A. Cameron commenced his operations there, and they at the same time proposed that a member of the Ministry should accompany the General to Whanganui, in the hope that such a course might facilitate any peaceful overtures on the part of the insurgent Natives. The Lieutenant-General, however, considered that the Governor's presence in Auckland was imperatively required, and finally did not adopt the proposition that he should be accompanied by the Minister for Native Affairs, considering his presence unnecessary.

It is possible that these circumstances may have given rise to a supposition in the minds of some persons, ignorant perhaps of the Proclamation of the 17th of December, 1864, that the Lieutenant-General Commanding, being without the presence of any high civil authority, became involved in hostilities which might have been, avoided. Ministers, however, cannot assent to this view. Had they seen any probability of successful negotiations resulting in the submission of the hostile tribes, they would have pressed their original proposition. His Excellency is well aware that the country between Whanganui and Taranaki has long been a focus of sedition and fanaticism. There, in 1854, was held the meeting of Manawapou, at which death was decreed against any Native who should sell his own land to the pakeha; thence issued armed bands of marauders and plunderers during the Taranaki war; thence, up to the present day, issue organized parties of fanatics who traverse the Native districts throughout the Island, parading the cooked Heads of Europeans,—in one instance, it is said, leading captive with them two British soldiers, and in at least one case adding cannibalism of the most disgusting character to their other crimes. Ministers will not dwell upon such facts as that all communication between Taranaki and Whanganui has been long prohibited by these tribes; that the mails have been stopped; that, a mail steamer having been wrecked on the coast, neither military nor civil authorities at the nearest port could have access to it by land; that this district is the refuge of Native criminals, as was shown in the case of Henare Tahau, who escaped thither after attempting to murder a Native woman. More recently, Mr. Hewett, a much-respected European settler, the Native Assessor Rio, and other friendly Natives have been murdered; a European road party fired on, and the progress of Her Majesty's troops resisted by force of arms. The loyal Natives of Whanganui have been threatened with the same destruction as Europeans. The gallantry with which they have defended themselves and their European fellow-citizens will be fresh in His Excellency's memory.

Ministers cannot but admit that it would have been for "the profit" of the colonists if the Lieutenant-General Commanding had found it possible by vigorous action so to carry on war in the head-quarters of fanaticism as to have insured submission, and thus put a stop to a rebellion which has incalculably retarded the progress of New Zealand, which has depreciated the value of property throughout the country districts of the Northern Inland, and which has placed both Islands of New Zealand in a state of the gravest financial embarrassment. They must also admit that the colonists, the friendly Natives, and all who desire the welfare of this colony, and of its inhabitants, whether of Native or European origin, would derive "gratification" from the establishment of law, order, and peace in the place of anarchy and the most degrading barbarism. Ministers would further state that, though they believe that the repression and punishment of the rebel tribes of this district, and the opening and occupation of their country, is an absolute necessity—regard being had to the safety of the neighbouring settlements, and the peace of the Island generally—they, nevertheless, have advised His Excellency to oppose the demand of the Lieutenant-General for reinforcements from England (nor will they advise any operations to be undertaken which may involve the retention of Imperial forces in the colony), and submit their opinion that a colonial force of Bush Rangers and Cavalry, united with the loyal Natives, whose interests are identified with those of the colonists, will be sufficient to undertake and execute all operations that are requisite.

The expression of these opinions will probably sufficiently rebut the insinuation of improper anxiety to retain the troops for the "profit" of the colonists. Further, Ministers will content themselves with requesting that His Excellency will inform them whether on any occasion they have offered him advice which might fairly appear to have been dictated by any disregard for the true interests of Natives, or any undue desire to obtain land, even for legitimate purposes of sale or colonization. Ministers, in tendering advice to His Excellency, will at all times, as heretofore, be ready to state their reasons and objects in so doing, and will do so in writing whenever he may require it.

Fred. A. Weld.

MEMORANDUM by the GOVERNOR.

In their memorandum of the 20th instant, Ministers request the Governor to inform them whether, upon any occasion, they have offered him advice which might fairly appear to have been dictated by any disregard for the true interests of the Natives, or any undue desire to obtain land, even for legitimate purposes of sale or colonization. In reply, the Governor has to state that Ministers have not, in his opinion, at any time tendered to him advice which was either directly or indirectly open to such a construction as they have alluded to in their memorandum.

By His Excellency Sir George Grey, Knight Commander of the Bath, Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over Her Majesty's Colony of New Zealand and its Dependencies, and Vice- Admiral of the same, &c.

Whereas Her Majesty has been pleased to assent to "The Native Lands Act, 1862," and by Proclamation of the Governor, dated the twenty-ninth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four, the operation of that Act has been extended over the whole Colony of New Zealand: And whereas the operation of this law renders unnecessary the continuance of the Native Land Purchase Department, by which prior to its enactment the cession of Native lands to the Crown has heretofore been conducted: And whereas other provisions will from time to time be made for any future cessions of land to Her Majesty which the Governor may permit to be made under clause thirty-two of the said "Native Lands Act, 1862:"

Now, therefore, I, the Governor, do hereby revoke all Commissions authorizing the purchase of lands on behalf of the Crown from the aboriginal inhabitants of the Colony of New Zealand, and do proclaim that the Native Land Purchase. ## No. 94. Copy of a Despatch from Governor Sir George Grey, K.C.B., to the Right Hon. Edward Cardwell

Government House, Wellington, 4th January, 1866.

In my Despatch No. 3, of the 5th January, 1865, I transmitted a petition to Her Most Gracious Majesty from the Provincial Council of the Province of Auckland, praying that in the northern portion of the Northern Island of New Zealand such a Government shall be constituted as would enable Her Majesty's Imperial Government to exercise such a control over Native affairs, until a cordial good feeling between the races should have been restored, as would enable it to insure the fulfilment of the treaty obligations undertaken by Her Majesty, and promote the good government of Her Majesty's subjects, both Native and European.

- 2. In the same despatch I stated that I would, at a future date, report on that petition; but, in the meantime, I thought it right to say that I thought that unless some such arrangement as that proposed in the petition was carried out it would be difficult to bring to a satisfactory termination the difficulties prevailing in that province.
- 3. In my Despatch No. 26, of the 7th February, I informed you that my Responsible Advisers had asked me to reserve my report on the petition until I had first received remarks which they wished to make upon it.
- 4. Subsequently I found that the matter had become one which had excited very strong political feelings, and that Her Majesty's Government and my Responsible Advisers had adopted views opposite to those which I held on the subject. I therefore felt it my duty to refrain from doing anything which might tend to embarrass either Her Majesty's Government or the Colonial Government, and I did not forward the report which I had proposed to make.
- 5. In your Despatch No. 50, of the 26th of July last, you informed me that you inferred from not receiving that report that I had changed my opinion and concurred in the views of my then Responsible Advisers.
- 6. I think it right therefore to state that nothing which has yet taken place has led me to alter the opinion which I expressed in my Despatch No. 3, of the 5th January, 1865.
- 7. The opinion I hold is based upon the necessity of strong, instantly acting, and entirely impartial government, in a case in which an European race and a powerful and jealous semi-barbarous race are mingling together. A country so circumstanced requires more government than a country in which an ordinary state of things prevails. I think that with such a government the happiness and peace of both races in the Province of Auckland might be shortly insured, and that the present anomalous state of things would soon cease to exist there. I fear that, without some such arrangement as is proposed is carried out, a long time of difficulty and trial lies before the northern part of this Island, which I should naturally regret to see it subjected to, because I believe it to be unnecessary. A few years since I thought the various questions outstanding between the two races would have been adjusted much more speedily than has been the case. I have, &c.,

No. 95. Copy of a Despatch from Governor Sir George Grey, K.C.B., to the Right Hon. Edward Cardwell.

Waikato.—Remarks on Sir William Martin's Letter.

SIR,—

Government House, Wellington, 2nd February, 1866.

I have been requested by my Responsible Advisers to transmit for your information the copy of a letter addressed by Sir William Martin to the colonial Minister for Native Affairs.

- 2. My Responsible Advisers inform me that it is with regret they find their views opposed to some of those of so good and able a man as Sir W. Martin is.
- 3. In order that full information may be afforded to you upon, perhaps, the most important point raised in Sir W. Martin's letter, I beg to offer the following remarks:—
- 4. Sir W. Martin states: "The object of the war in this country was to repress and terminate the efforts which the Natives were making to set up a separate nationality—an effort dangerous to both races; but, though that effort was a great folly, it was not a great crime."
- 5. This view of the case appears to me only to embrace part of the problem which should be presented for consideration, in order to render it possible to form a correct and safe conclusion upon a subject which is of a very difficult and complex nature.
- 6. In this Island two races are living together—a barbarous and a civilized race. The barbarous race is now in the minority, and each year this minority will be more apparent. But it occupies the central strongholds of the country. The people belonging to it do not live generally as a scattered population, but as communities under chiefs. They have been allowed to arm themselves well, are practised in the use of arms, and are naturally warlike. Wherever Natives are, there is a body of armed and organized warriors, ready for instant action.
- 7. Besides occupying the central strongholds of the country, the people of this race occupy many places between European settlements, in the vicinity of and even in the midst of those settlements.
- 8. The European race live scattered through the country, and in settlements dispersed at various points along the coast-line of the Island. Many of them were born in the country, have attained to middle age, and their children are in their turn growing up here. They have thus no sense of want of right to be here, or of being an intruding population. Between themselves and many of the Natives strong and long-enduring bonds of amity have existed, and still exist.
- 9. Until recently these Europeans have neither been armed or trained to the use of arms, nor placed under or habituated to act under leaders. For purposes of outrage or violence the barbarous population had therefore many advantages upon their side.
- 10. An armed attempt to set up a separate nationality and Native King by a barbarous population, so circumstanced in reference to a civilized population such as I have described, becomes a very serious matter.

- 11. In such an attempt the civilized population, who have no interest but self-preservation, must necessarily suffer the most. Those of the barbarous who engage in such an attempt may be clever, and themselves much advanced in civilization; but the worst and most violent of their countrymen, are almost certain to join them, and to break loose from all control. They have little to lose, and in a few hours can destroy property which the European population has been years in painfully and patiently accumulating. The national Government attempted to be set up under such circumstances can necessarily have no power to repress violence, or to punish evil-doers amongst those who claim to be its subjects. Such men, even when mixed up with the European settlements, are certain, after committing crimes, to claim their nationality as an excuse for not acknowledging European tribunals which would punish them for their offences; and this claim on their part will be supported by all their countrymen who desire disturbances, or may hope to gain anything by them. At the hands of such men both the well-conducted of their countrymen and the European population must suffer great wrongs. It might be said that to proclaim that a barbarous nationality has been set up in a country circumstanced as this is, is to proclaim that every man who pleases to acknowledge that nationality may do as he likes, and that all law is abolished. Such was, in fact, in many instances the result, even within the limits of the European settlements, of the attempt to set up a separate nationality in New Zealand.
- 12. In forming a judgment on the nature and circumstances of such an attempt all this must be borne in mind.
- 13. When once the serious and terrible evils which spring from such an attempt are made manifest, I think it becomes the duty of the European population, and of the well-disposed amongst the Native population, to take every precaution within their power which they can take without acting unjustly or unmercifully, not only to repress and terminate such an attempt, but to prevent such an attempt from being ever again made.
- 14. This is no less necessary for the protection of the Natives than of the Europeans: not to do it would be to insure the ultimate destruction of the Native race. To this end my aims have been mainly directed. The thought of punishing those who have been engaged in the attempt to set up a separate nationality, and who have entailed so large a loss of life and property, and such a vast expenditure on the country, has been entirely subordinated to the idea of doing that which might prevent such evils from falling on the two races for the future; and in these views I have been thoroughly supported by the General Assembly and the whole talent and influence of the country. In fact my views were their views; there has been no essential difference of opinion between us.
- 15. I do not mean to say that there are not violent men in New Zealand; but even in the midst of the worst outrages, and during times of the greatest excitement, the General Assembly has shown a scrupulous care for the rights, both present and prospective, of the Native race: instead of waiting for the termination of hostilities to make provision for the future of that race, they have even in the midst of wars and outrages carefully devoted themselves to enacting laws for the security of the future welfare of the Native people. I feel sure that upon the whole the debates, the legislation, and the acts of the General Assembly will hereafter be admitted to be creditable to their humanity, and to the nation to which they belong; and I have no reason to think that Sir William Martin would not agree with me in the opinion which I have thus expressed.

I have, &c.,

The Right Hon. Edward Cardwell.

No. 96. Copy of a Despatch from Governor Sir G. F. Bowen, G.C.M.G., to his Grace the Duke # of Buckingham.

Condition of Maori Race.

My Lord Duke,—

Government House, Wellington, 5th March, 1868.

Among the manifold and urgent public questions which have necessarily pressed themselves on my attention during the month which has now elapsed since my assumption, on the 5th ultimo, of the Government of New Zealand, I have given much thought and care to that very complicated and difficult, but highly interesting subject, the present condition and future prospects of the Maori race.

- 2. By my desire the Minister for the Native Department (Mr. J. C. Richmond) has addressed to the principal officers and agents of the Government throughout the colony a circular (of which I enclose a copy) directing each of them to furnish, for the information of the Governor, a detailed report on Native affairs in his district. It will be seen that this report is to contain as full a history as possible of the last few years, and of the events that have come under the personal cognizance of each Government agent. Reliable information is called for as to the actual number of the Maoris; the causes and influences affecting their increase or decrease; their feelings towards Europeans generally; their physical and moral condition; the rise, object, progress, and tendency of the Hauhau movement; the opinion of the Maoris in respect of the recent war, of the removal of the Imperial troops, of the suppression of the late outbreaks of rebellion on the east coast of the North Island and elsewhere, and of the prospect of the permanent restoration of peace. Finally, the several agents of the Government are required to notice the working of the recent Acts of the New Zealand Legislature in reference to the lands, the education, and the Parliamentary representation of the Maoris; and generally to supply such further information as may appear, likely to be useful in forming an accurate opinion of the present state of Native affairs.
- 3. I am assured that the public officers in the Maori districts are, for the most part, men of ability and local experience, and it is hoped that the reports which will be elicited by the above-mentioned circular will go far towards enabling both the Imperial and the Colonial Governments to arrive at a correct estimate of the present condition, feeling, and prospects of the Native race. It will be my duty to transmit to your Grace copies of these reports, when they shall have been received, together with such remarks and illustrations as they seem to need.
- 4. Meanwhile I will take this opportunity of forwarding a memorandum, carefully prepared in the Native Department, respecting the meeting held in last January by the adherents of the so-called Maori King at Tokangamutu, a place situated in the heart of the disaffected districts, about twenty-five miles inland from Kawhia, the port of the hostile Natives, on the west coast of the North Island. This memorandum will amply repay an attentive perusal. It certainly discloses a state of affairs which is the reverse of satisfactory.
- 5. Further, I transmit herewith, a memorandum, drawn up by Major Richardson (the acting Colonial Treasurer), on behalf of the Minister for Colonial Defence, respecting the collision which took place on the 8th February ultimo between the settlers and a party of Hauhau fanatics, near Opotiki, on the east coast of the North Island. It is feared that partial outbreaks of this nature must be expected occasionally for some time to come. Meanwhile, it will be seen that the Defence Minister (Colonel Haultain) has himself proceeded to Opotiki, and "has taken such precautionary measures as will, it is hoped, effectually secure the safety of the settlers, and, at the same time, give the assurance that, while the Government is resolved to protect its settlements, it is desirous of avoiding any action which might be construed into an attack not called for in self-defence."
- 6. Te Puni, the well-known Maori chief of the Ngatiawa Tribe, now in extreme old age (but to whose protection the early settlers in this part of New Zealand were formerly much indebted), and the other principal Maoris resident near Wellington, attended my first levée. I have also received, as the representative of the Queen, numerous addresses of respect and welcome from the loyal chiefs and tribes in all parts of both Islands—from the powerful clan of the Ngapuhis, at the Bay of Islands, in the extreme North; from the small remnant of Maoris in Otago, in the extreme South; from various chiefs of Taranaki and Whanganui, and of the shores of the central Lake of Taupo. I annex translations of several of these addresses, and also of my replies to them, which replies were of course drawn up with the advice and assistance of the Native Minister, and of other gentlemen skilled in Maori customs and feelings. I shall apply myself diligently to the study of the Native language and annals. The valuable publications on this subject of my accomplished predecessor, Sir George Grey, will facilitate the researches of all his successors.

- 7. It would of course be, as yet, presumptuous in me to pronounce any judgment on Native questions. It is obvious, however, that the old institutions and rites of the Maoris have crumbled away; and so, it is to be feared, has, to a deplorable extent, their recently adopted Christianity. When I visited Te Puni, a fortnight ago, at his own village, the old chief told me, in the presence of the Bishop of Wellington (Dr. Abraham), that he believed that he was now almost the only real Christian in his tribe, for most of his kinsmen had become either Hauhaus or drunken profligates. It is, moreover, a significant fact that the so-called Maori King has lately renounced his baptismal name of Matutaera (Methuselah), and openly adopted the heathen appellation of Tawhiao. He is stated to have taken no notice whatever of certain overtures that were made to him before my arrival, with the object of inducing him to give his submission to the "Queen's son" (the phrase by which the Duke of Edinburgh is known to the Maoris), during the approaching visit of His Royal Highness to New Zealand. With regard to this sullen and hostile isolation, a loyal chief, at a recent interview, addressed me in the following terms: "O Governor, Matutaera is now like a single tree, left exposed in a clearing of our native forests. If left alone it will, soon wither and die. My word to you, O Governor, is to leave Matutaera alone." This is, in fact, the policy of my present Ministers. Indeed, there is a feeling in some quarters in favour of the tacit, if not formal, revival in the Native districts of this colony of a sort of "pale," in the sense familiar to the readers of Irish history.
- 8. While the moral atmosphere of the North Island is thus unsettled, vast material damage has been inflicted by the hurricane and floods which swept over the Middle Island in the early part of last month. The value of the roads, bridges, and other public works, and of the houses, cattle, sheep, and other private property thus destroyed, has been estimated at little less, in the aggregate, than half a million sterling. These heavy losses have had the effect of increasing the commercial and financial depression which had prevailed in this as in the Australian Colonies ever since the monetary crisis of 1866.
- 9. In conclusion, I would venture to express my hope that the efforts of the Colonial Government and Legislature to restore and maintain internal tranquillity, and to advance the interests of both races of the inhabitants of New Zealand, may be favoured with success; and that I may thus, ere long, be enabled to lay before your Grace a more satisfactory account of the condition of this great colony, so rich in natural resources.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

I have, &c.,

G. F. Bowen.

No. 97. MEMORANDUM by Mr. MCLEAN.

Waikato.—Peace Arrangements. Auckland, 17th December, 1869.

Since the departure of the last English mail, the Colonial Government has been unremitting in its efforts to follow up the arrangements for peace concluded on the 9th ultimo by the Native Minister with the Waikato and the Ngatimaniapoto tribes. Mr. Fox, the Premier, has visited the powerful adherents of the Waikato at the Upper Whanganui, where he was received with demonstrations of a friendly nature; an offer having been made by the chief Topia, one of their principal leaders, to assist in capturing Te Kooti.

No opportunity has been lost sight of to effect a reconciliation with the Waikato and other tribes; at the same time care has been taken to avoid undue haste and pressure, which, with a race like the New Zealanders, would have the effect of impeding rather than promoting satisfactory relations. Te Kooti, joined by Kereopa, is still at large, and threatens some of our out-settlements.

While every effort is being made in the colony for the restoration of peace, it is with deep regret that Ministers have received the intelligence conveyed to your Excellency in Lord Granville's Despatch No. 115, of the 7th October last, intimating the determination of the Imperial Government to withdraw immediately the 18th Regiment, which has garrisoned the towns in the disturbed districts, and for which the Colonial Legislature had pledged itself to pay whatever annual sum the Imperial authorities might require. The removal of the only regiment in the colony, and the consequent loss of the moral support which it affords at this juncture, cannot fail to affect seriously the present hopeful prospect of a satisfactory adjustment of Native affairs.

DONALD MCLEAN.

Waikato.—State of Defence. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 22nd December, 1869.
My Lord,—

In continuation of my Despatch No. 101, of the 4th August ultimo, I have the honour to forward, for your Lordship's information, a report and plan, submitted to me by Captain Young, of the 18th Royal Irish Regiment, my Acting Military Secretary, explaining the nature of the fort and place of refuge for the settlers and their families which he has just completed at a central position in the Waikato. Similar defensive works, though of a less elaborate description, have also been erected in all the other districts in which there is any apprehension of Native outbreaks.

- 2. It will be seen from the monthly report of the Minister of Defence and Native Affairs, transmitted with my Despatch No. 159, of the 20th instant, that the only band of rebels now in active hostility is that under Te Kooti, in the mountainous and thickly-wooded country to the west of Lake Taupo. It is variously estimated at from three hundred to one hundred men; and is being, it is hoped, gradually surrounded by detachments of the Native Contingent, about six hundred strong, under the chiefs Te Kepa and Topia; while Colonel McDonnell, with parties of the Armed Constabulary and loyal Maoris from the East Coast, is watching the passes by which Te Kooti will probably attempt to make his way once more to the mountains of the Uraweras.
- 3. A point on the shores of Lake Taupo is the true strategic centre of the North Island; and here the Colonial Government is now maintaining at a very heavy cost, and intends to continue to maintain, a strong force of the Native Contingent, which will be able to keep in check the rebel bands that look to the central mountains of the interior as a secure refuge; and also to operate on their rear if they should hereafter make fresh raids against any of the English settlements. Another important part of the scheme of colonial defence is to construct roads through the disturbed districts generally, and especially from Lake Taupo to Napier on the East, and to Whanganui on the West Coast. It will be remembered that Earl Grey has recorded in his work on colonial policy that the late Duke of Wellington strongly advised that the construction of roads should be one of the very first objects to be aimed at in New Zealand. Moreover, in addition to the other obvious advantages, both civil and military, of opening up the country in this manner, the Government will thus be enabled to keep in constant occupation and pay, and under useful industrial training, a number of the lawless spirits that abound among the Maoris, eager for the excitement of war and plunder, but not caring much which side they take. It is a satisfactory and suggestive circumstance that a portion of the bands that lately fought against us under Titokowaru are now receiving pay for fighting for us under Te Kepa, and for working on the newly-projected roads.
- 4. The policy towards the so-called Maori King and his adherents reported in my Despatch No. 154, of the 25th November ultimo, and on several previous occasions, has hitherto been completely successful in averting the great danger of a general insurrection, which was deemed not many months ago to be imminent, and will, it is trusted, lead ere long to, the establishment of permanent tranquillity. But all who know the Maoris best agree in urging that it would be fatal to press them too eagerly to the immediate acceptance of formal terms. Preliminaries of peace have been arranged, and friendly communications have been opened with Tawhiao and the chiefs who surround and control him. It is believed that the Colonial Government must proceed with the most cautious prudence, give time for the extension of the civilizing influences of trade and personal intercourse, and, in the words of Mr. McLean, "avoid undue haste and pressure, which, with a race like the New Zealanders, would have the effect of impeding rather than promoting satisfactory relations." I have elsewhere, at the request of the Colonial Ministers, drawn attention to their opinion on the influence which the withdrawal at this juncture of the moral support of the 2-18th Regiment may exercise on the present hopeful prospect of a peaceful settlement of Native affairs.

Granville, KG.

The Queen's Maori Godson to be properly educated. Downing Street, 18th August, 1870.

Sir,—

Adverting to your despatch marked "Separate," of the 6th April, 1868, respecting Albert Victor Pomare, the child of a Maori chief born in England, I have the honour to inform you that the Queen has expressed a wish that a proper education should be given to the child. With this view Her Majesty is prepared to pay a reasonable sum annually, say for the next five years, in order to have the child educated for the class of life to which he belongs. Her Majesty is desirous that this should be done under your own direction, rather than at the discretion of any other person in the colony.

I request that you will give effect to the Queen's wishes, and will report what sum would be necessary for the education of the child.

I have, &c.,

Governor Sir G. F. Bowen, G.C.M.G. KIMBERLEY.

Arrival of the Duke of Edinburgh in Auckland. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 10th December, 1870.
My Lord,—

I have the honour to report that, in pursuance of the orders of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and Commodore Stirling, commanding Her Majesty's Naval Forces on the Australian Station, Captain His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh arrived at Auckland on the 8th instant in the "Galatea," which will remain here about a month.

- 2. His Royal Highness, during his previous visit in 1869, made so favourable an impression on both the English and the Maoris that all classes of the community are very glad to see him again. The Duke has kindly consented to become again my guest at the Government House. Next week I shall accompany His Royal Highness on a tour to the famous hot lakes and springs (resembling the geysers of Iceland), on the east coast of this Island. These lakes are in the country of the loyal clan of the Arawas, who have fought so long and so gallantly for the Crown, and whose loyalty will be at once rewarded and confirmed by a visit from "the son of the Queen" (te tamaiti o te Kuini), as they affectionately style the Duke of Edinburgh.

Visit to the Lake District in company with the Duke of Edinburgh. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 26th December, 1870.

My Lord,—

In continuation of my Despatch No. 154, by the last, mail, I have the honour to report that on the 12th instant His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, accompanied by myself by Lieutenant Haig, Royal Engineers, Equerry in Waiting, by the officers of my staff, and by several officers of H.M.S. "Galatea," left Auckland in the Colonial Government steamer "Luna" on a visit to the Lake District, on the east coast of this Island, and to the loyal clan of the Arawas.

- 2. On the following morning we landed at Tauranga, the principal port in the Bay of Plenty where His Royal Highness was enthusiastically welcomed by seven hundred chiefs and clansmen of the clans of the Arawas and Ngaiterangis.
- 3. In my Despatch No. 52, of 1868, reporting my first visit to the East Coast, I mentioned that the regular troops and Naval Brigade, under General Cameron and Commodore Wiseman, had suffered very severe loss at the assault, in 1864, of the pa erected by the Ngaiteraugis about three miles from Tauranga, and generally known as the Gate Pa from its commanding the approach to the inland districts, at a point where the road passes along a narrow tract of firm ground between two extensive swamps. I added that the Ngaiteraugis had afterwards made peace with the Government; and that Enoka te Whanake and the other principal chiefs and warriors who had fought at the Gate Pa had assembled to welcome me in the most cordial manner on my first visit to their country. In the korero now held to greet the Duke of Edinburgh they vied with the Arawas in expressions of loyalty to the Queen and of good-will to the English settlers. At the conclusion of his speech Enoka te Whanake said: "It is true that I fought against the Queen at the Gate Pa; but I have repented of this evil and am now living under the shadow of her laws. As for this Tawhiao, who styles himself the 'King of the Maoris,' let him be brought hither as a footstool for the son of our Queen, whom we welcome among us this day." I annex the substance of the speeches delivered at this Native meeting by the Duke of Edinburgh and by myself respectively.
- 4. From Tauranga we proceeded to Maketu, the principal kainga, or settlement, of the Arawas, and celebrated in Maori tradition as the spot at which their ancestors, some twenty generations back, first landed in New Zealand. Here, as elsewhere throughout our tour, the "Queen's son" and the Governor were greeted with enthusiastic demonstrations of respect. No Europeans have as yet settled in the inland districts of this portion of New Zealand; but His Royal Highness was as safe among the Arawas in their own country as he would be among the Gordons in Aberdeenshire. We were, however, attended by a guard of honour, consisting of a strong escort of the clansmen in arms for the Queen. The Duke of Edinburgh and his officers were much interested by the many striking scenes and incidents of life in a Maori camp, especially by the war-songs chanted by the Arawas round the watch-fires which they kindled every night in front of our tents. On the other hand, the Native warriors were delighted by His Royal Highness's power of enduring fatigue; by his good horsemanship and swimming; by the skill and vigour with which he paddled his canoe across their lakes; and, perhaps, above all, by his constantly wearing the kilt, which is the favourite dress of the Maori as of the Scotch Highlanders.

- 5. I shall not trouble your Lordship with an account of the hot lakes, solfataras, and geysers of this Island, for they have been fully described in the well-known work of Dr. Hochstetter, and by other writers more competent than myself. Suffice it to say that, on the 14th instant, we rode from Maketu to Ohinemutu, the principal inland settlement of the Arawas, a distance of nearly forty miles, the road leading us along the shores of the beautiful Lakes Rotoiti and Rotorua. It will be remembered that (as I reported at the time) this road was spontaneously made by the Arawas, the chiefs and clansmen labouring together, for the use of the Duke of Edinburgh more than two years ago, when his visit was first expected. On the 15th instant, after swimming in the tepid waters of the solfataras, and inspecting the principal geysers, we rode over the hills to Lake Tarawera, which we crossed the following day in Native canoes, encamping for the night on the famous terraces of Lake Rotomahana. After examining the wonders around, we returned on a subsequent day to our previous camp at Ohinemutu, where we spent quietly Sunday, the 18th instant. The Rev. S. Spencer, a missionary clergyman resident at Maketu, who had accompanied our party, read the service of the Church of England in the open air on the shore of Lake Rotorua. It was a calm and beautiful day, and the scene was highly picturesque and suggestive;-the little knot of Englishmen surrounding the "son of the Queen," and the large congregation of Maoris repeating the responses and joining in the hymns of our Church in their own sonorous language;-amid some of the finest prospects of lake and mountain, and near some of the most wonderful natural phenomena in the world; in the very heart, moreover, of the Native districts of New Zealand, and of the country most renowned in Maori song and legend; and on a spot where, in the memory of some men still living, human victims were sacrificed, and cannibal feasts were held.
- 6. On the 19th we rode back from Ohinemutu to Maketu, where happened one of the most important incidents of our tour. Te Waru, a formidable rebel chief from the neighbourhood of Poverty Bay, who has been in arms against the Queen for several years past, came in with forty-six of his principal followers, and surrendered to me. Though dejected, he maintained in the presence of His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh and myself the usual dignified bearing of Maori warriors. I told Te Waru that as he had never taken part in the murders of women and children, or in the other atrocities of Te Kooti and Titokowaru, he would come under the terms of the Peace Proclamations, and would be treated with great lenity. The Colonial Government intend to place him and his people on a tract of land in the country of one of the loyal clans, which will watch over their future conduct.
- 7. From Maketu we returned by sea to Auckland. So ended a very successful tour, which will be productive of much public advantage; for the visit of the Duke of Edinburgh to the Arawas has (as was anticipated) at once rewarded and confirmed their loyalty.

General Report on the State of the Natives. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 20th May, 1871.
My Lord, —

The monthly mail [unclear: vi] San Francisco will leave Auckland to-morrow; but I have little of importance to add respecting the present condition of Native affairs to the contents of my Despatch No. 29, of the 24th March ultimo, and of Mr. McLean's memorandum of the 28th ultimo, transmitted (Enclosure No. 3) with my Despatch No. 39, of the 1st of May instant, to which latter document I would request special attention.

- 2. Since my arrival in Auckland after my recent official tour in the southern provinces, I have received at the Government House several of the principal Maori chiefs of the North, and, in particular, Tamati Waka Nene and his brother Eruera Patuone, who assured me of the continued loyalty of the great clan of the Ngapuhis, the most powerful in New Zealand; whose country, character, and position were described in my Despatch No. 51, of the 26th May, 1870, written immediately after my last visit to them.
- 3. With reference to paragraph 7 of the last-mentioned despatch (No. 51), your Lordship will learn with interest that the Bishop of Auckland, Dr. Cowie, recently consecrated the church which has been built by the Maoris who fought against the Crown in the war of 1845–48, but who are now among the most loyal subjects of the Queen, on the site of the pa of Ohaeawai, near the Bay of Islands, in the attack on which, in July, 1845, the British troops suffered a severe repulse, with heavy loss both in officers and men.
- 4. I regret to say that the adherents of the so-called Maori King in the centre of this Island still decline to surrender the murderers of Mr. Todd, and that the Hauhaus at Ohinemuri still refuse to allow the telegraph line to be carried from Tauranga to the River Thames, a distance of about forty miles. This gap in the general system now extended over the remainder of the colony has the effect of isolating Auckland, in some degree, from the southern provinces. But it is hoped that this difficulty will be ere long overcome, and I trust that next year I shall be able to furnish a practical proof of the cessation of all active hostility by travelling overland myself from Wellington to Auckland, a journey which has not been undertaken by any European since the beginning of the second Maori war in 1860.
- 5. On the east and west coasts of this Island general tranquillity continues to be maintained, and several fresh bodies of Natives recently in open rebellion have given their submission and engaged to live peaceably for the future.
- 6. In several previous despatches I have expressed a strong opinion that the surest plan to keep the Maoris quiet and to train them to habits of industry is to give them constant employment at good wages on roads piercing their own mountains and forests; in short, that the pickaxe and the spade are the true weapons for the pacification of the highlands of New Zealand, as formerly of the Highlands of Scotland. This policy has been steadily pursued for some time past by the Colonial Government; as will be seen by the annexed memorandum and map, which have been prepared in the Native Department under the direction of Mr. McLean, and which will well repay a careful perusal and examination.
- 7. It will be observed that contracts for roads within their own districts were, in the first instance, offered to the friendly clans, who responded willingly to the invitation of the Government. By degrees the wavering, and even the hostile, tribes began to appreciate the advantages of the new policy, and requested to have similar benefits extended to them. The result is that a large number of Maoris recently in arms against the Queen are now peaceably labouring on public works, and that (as will be seen by the annexed map) a great portion of the country infested two years ago by the rebel bands of Te Kooti and Titokowaru is now thrown open. Already upwards of four hundred miles of road have been completed or are in course of construction in the Native districts by Native labour, and this system is capable of almost indefinite extension. In connection with this subject reference may be made to the "Correspondence relative to the Construction of Roads in the North Island" (A.-No. 17 and 17a), in the papers presented to the New Zealand Parliament in the session of 1870.
- 8. As I have remarked on a previous occasion, in addition to the many obvious advantages, civil and military, of opening up the interior of this Island in the manner described above, the Government will thus be enabled to keep in constant employment and under useful industrial training a number of the lawless spirits that abound among the Maoris, eager for the excitement of war and plunder, but not caring much on which side they fight. Finally, it will be remembered that Earl Grey, in his work on Colonial Policy, has recorded that the late Duke of Wellington strongly advised that the construction of roads should be one of the very first objects to be aimed at in New Zealand.

No. 103. Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir G. F. BOWEN to the Right Hon. the Earl of KIMBERLEY.

government House, Auckland, N.Z., 10th June, 1871

My Lord,—

In my Despatches Nos. 20, 21, 28, 31, and 37, of this year, I gave some account of the progress and present condition of the Provinces of Otago and Canterbury and of the County of Westland, which I visited during my recent official tour in the South of this colony. I propose now to make a similar report respecting the Province of Auckland, in which I am at present residing. Soon after my return to Wellington next month, I hope to transmit like information respecting the remaining provinces of New Zealand, viz., "Wellington, Nelson, Taranaki, Hawke's Bay, and Marlborough.

- 2. The Province of Auckland, which embraces the larger half of the North Island of New Zealand, celebrates as the anniversary of its settlement the 29th January, that being the date of the arrival, in 1840, of the first Governor, Captain Hobson, E.N. The first seat of Government was the Town of Kororareka (afterwards named Russell), in the Bay of Islands, where a few hundred Europeans had established themselves before the cession of the sovereignty of the country to the British Crown by the Treaty of Waitangi, on 5th February, 1840. But in September, 1840, Captain Hobson removed to the site which he selected for the future capital of the colony, on the Harbour of Waitemata. The city which he there founded was named Auckland, in honour of Lord Auckland, then at the head of the Admiralty. It continued to be the seat of the General Government of the colony until 1864, when Wellington was adopted in preference, in accordance with the views of a majority of the New Zealand Parliament, and on account of its central position in Cook Strait, which separates the two principal Islands.
- 3. The Province of Auckland has had to contend with great and peculiar difficulties, for it contains the large majority of the Maori race, including those clans which still remain hostile to the British Crown. It was, moreover, the chief field of the operations of the first and of the second Maori wars. While the Native title to land was extinguished by purchase many years ago in the provinces of the Middle Island, somewhat more than two-thirds, i.e., about eleven-sixteenths, of the entire area of the Province of Auckland is held by the Native owners; a considerable number of whom, being adherents of the so-called Maori King, refuse to permit the further settlement of Europeans, and, indeed, to hold any intercourse whatsoever with them. The map transmitted with my Despatch No.49, of 1868 (see New Zealand Papers presented to the Imperial Parliament in July, 1869, pages 130–39), shows the territory enclosed by the aukati, in which your Lordship will recognize a "pale," in the sense familiar in Irish history, though (as I remarked on a previous occasion) with the important difference that in Ireland the "pale" was set up by the colonists against the natives, whereas in New Zealand it is set up by the natives against the colonists.
- 4. When the above and other powerful obstacles to the rapid advance of colonization in this province are taken into account, the progress and present condition of Auckland cannot be described as otherwise than satisfactory. The census taken in last February shows a European population of 62,335, being an increase of 14,014 on the population as shown by the census taken in December, 1867; and 37,915 on the population of 1861. Thus it appears that during the last ten years the population of this province has advanced at the rate of 155 per cent. The City of Auckland, with its suburbs, now contains about 21,000 inhabitants. This is about the amount of the population of Dunedin, the capital of the Province of Otago.

The two next largest towns in New Zealand are Christchurch, with nearly 11,000, including the suburbs; and Wellington, with nearly 8,000 inhabitants.

- 5. The latest official statistics prove the annual public revenue of the Province of Auckland from all sources to be, in round numbers, £300,000; and the annual trade; including imports and exports, to the amount in value of nearly two millions and a quarter. The shipping, inwards and outwards, in 1870 showed 532 vessels, with crews of 9,369 men, and 173,452 tonnage.
- 6. The number of stock held by the colonists in Auckland is far less than in the great pastoral communities of the South; but it is steadily increasing. Of horses, there are in 1871 in this province 11,620, against 9,436 in 1867; of horned cattle, there are 80,443, for 53,066; and of sheep, 210,760, for 172,030 at the last enumeration four years ago. These figures do not include the horses and other stock in the possession of the Maoris, of which it is impossible to furnish a reliable estimate.
- 7. The Maoris in the Province of Auckland are supposed not to exceed at the present from twenty-five to thirty thousand souls; but these figures are little more than guesswork, for it is of course impossible to calculate accurately the numbers residing in the country of the so-called Native King. Moreover, in estimating the relative strength of the two races in this part of the colony, it should be borne in mind, among other considerations, that the Maoris are for the most part entrenched (so to speak) in the mountains of the interior, while the English dwell chiefly in the seaport towns, and in small settlements and isolated farms dispersed along a coast-line of, in the single Province of Auckland, above a thousand miles. It will be remembered that I have already described, in a series of previous despatches, my repeated visits during the past three years to all the principal Maori clans—to the Ngapuhis, the Ngatiwhatuas, and the Rarawas, in the north of this province; to the Ngatitamateras, the Ngaiterangis, the Arawas, and the Ngatiporous, in the east and south; and to the Waikatbs and, Ngatihauas, in the central and western districts.
- 8. The principal exports of the Province of Auckland include, in addition to gold, wool, flax, and other articles common to it with the southern provinces, the timber and gum of the kauri pine (Dammara australis). These two last-named articles are peculiar to this province, for the kauri pine is found only in the northern districts of the North Island. It is hoped that measures will be taken for the preservation of the forests of this magnificent tree. The value of kauri spars for ships has long been known in Europe. The gum or resin produced by the kauri resembles amber in appearance. It is used for glazing calico and in various manufactures, and is largely exported both to England and to the United States.
- 9. Before concluding this brief and imperfect sketch, it seems proper to refer once more to the rapid development of the gold field discovered in 1867 near the River Thames, between forty and fifty miles from the City of Auckland. In my Despatches No. 6, of the 10th, and No. 8, of the 15th January, 1870, as also in other reports, I have already transmitted full information respecting this gold field, and the liberal payments made by the Colonial Government to the Native owners of the soil for their consent to its being thrown open to the enterprise and industry of the colonists. The value of the gold exported from the Thames Gold Field alone, since the 1st August, 1867 (when it was first proclaimed), already amounts to nearly a million and a half pounds sterling. Some of the auriferous quartz recently found at the Thames is said to be the richest hitherto discovered in any part of the world.
- 10. I may take this opportunity of mentioning that the aggregate exportation of gold from all parts of New Zealand up to the present time is valued at nearly twenty-three millions sterling. I hope to be able shortly to forward full official statistics on this subject.
- 11. Most of the gold hitherto exported from New Zealand is the produce of the gold fields of the Middle Island

At the present date, however, the Thames is producing more gold than any other field in New Zealand.

during the last ten years; but the earliest discovery took place so far back as in 1852, at the Harbour of Coromandel

The Maori name is Waiau.

(so called from the name of the English ship that first visited it), about twenty miles north of the mouth of the River Thames. Much excitement at that time arose among both the colonists and the Natives, and fears of a dangerous collision between the two races were entertained. However, Te Taniwha, the principal chief of the district, convened a meeting of his countrymen to decide the terms on which the Europeans should be allowed to dig for the precious metals on Maori land. Lieutenant-Governor Wynyard, Chief Justice Martin, Bishop Selwyn, and other prominent English functionaries and settlers were invited to be present; and, through the influence of Te Taniwha, an equitable arrangement was promptly and peaceably made, the requisite permission being granted by the Maoris on payment of a moderate license-fee by each miner. Mr. Swainson, a former Attorney-General of New Zealand, has put on record (see Mr. Swainson's "New Zealand and its Colonization," Chapter I.) a graphic description of the remarkable scene presented by the above-mentioned meeting. He writes: "The presence of the aged chie

Te Taniwha died in 1853.

Te Taniwha, the last of his race, who could tell the date of the white man's first arrival in New Zealand, his remarkable appearance, and the occasion itself, gave to the meeting an unusual interest. Though bowed down and enfeebled by age, the old man still retained the use of his faculties, and in a remarkable degree possessed that bold outline of head and face which formerly distinguished the chieftains of the country. There stood the last living link between the past and present of New Zealand: one who in time long past had himself stood face to face with England's honoured navigator, and who then still lived to tell of Captain Cook's first visit to New Zealand; how the Natives all thought that his ship was a whale with wings, and that his crew were gods; how for some time he, Te Taniwha himself, then but a little boy, was afraid to go on board; how Captain Cook spoke little less than the other officers—but took more notice of the children, patting them kindly on the head; and how he gave them the first potatoes they had seen;

On another occasion, Te Taniwha further related that Captain Cook, on landing, almost, invariably walked rapidly about, waving his right hand to and fro, doubtless scattering the seeds of Europe in the soil of New Zealand. (See Thomson's New Zealand, Chapter IX.)

*And soothed with gifts and greeted with a smile
The simple native of the new-found isle.*

And now this venerable chief, as the crowning act of a long and eventful life, and confiding in the justice of the British Crown, came forward to welcome the Queen's vicegerent to the new-found fields of gold. When the first specimens were shown him of the gold discovered on his land he said he should now be content to die: that he had lived many days, but that this was the brightest of them all. He did not seem to value the consideration of the gain it would be to him, so much as the thought that his land, the land of his ancestors, should be the first to produce the precious metal for which the white man so carefully sought. Glancing at the time-honoured peak of Motu Tere, and turning to the setting sun, he appeared to commune with the generation that he had outlived."

- 12. The aggregate yield of gold at Coromandel has hitherto been comparatively small, and has been entirely eclipsed (as we have seen) by the rich produce of the gold fields discovered, at a later period, near the River Thames in the same neighbourhood, and in Otago, Westland, Nelson, and other quarters of the Middle Island. But valuable quartz reefs are now being worked at Coromandel as well as on the Thames. On this subject one of the daily journals published at Auckland recently made the following comments: "Many causes have contributed to retard the development of certain features of colonization in our midst. Not the least influential of these disturbing elements has been the large production of gold. But though this, for obvious reasons, has invariably at first a tendency to distract attention from other more sober but less lucrative pursuits, there will be few to doubt that the present enormous production of gold within the Province of Auckland will ultimately give a great impulse to settlement and production of every kind; and great as has been the increase of population in the past, and unmistakable as have been the signs of progress, we have the strongest reasons for believing that the next enumeration of our people and our wealth will show results to which the past affords no parallel."

Concerning Death of Chief Tamati Waka Nene. Downing Street, 15th November, 1871.
Sir,—

I have received and have laid before the Queen your Despatch No. 72, of the 23rd of August, reporting the death of Tamati Waka Nene, the principal chief of the great clan of the Ngapuhis. Her Majesty desires me to convey to you the expression of the regret with which she has heard of the death of this distinguished chief, who was so loyally attached to Her Majesty, and who exerted himself on all occasions to promote that good understanding between the two races so essential to the welfare and prosperity of both. It is the Queen's desire that an expression of Her Majesty's sympathy in their loss should be conveyed to his widow and to the clan to which he belonged.

No. 105. Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir G. F. BOWEN to the Right Hon. the Earl of KIMBERLEY

Account of Governor Bowen's Second Visit to Taupo. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 15th May, 1872.
My Lord,—

In my Despatch No. 27, of the 9th ultimo, I reported my setting forth on my journey overland from Wellington to Auckland, through the central and recently hostile districts of this Island; my arrival at the great Lake (or "Sea," as it is called by the Natives) of Taupo, in the heart of the Native districts; and the cordial and respectful welcome given to me by the Maori clans,—alike by those which had remained loyal throughout the war, and by those which had lately been in arms against the Queen.

The Maoris call Taupo "moana," i.e., sea, not "roto," i.e., lake.

- 2. I have now the satisfaction of reporting that the second half was as prosperous as the first half of my expedition; and that I reached Auckland on the 24th ultimo, at the end of what has been truly called "an important and memorable journey." All those who are best acquainted with the Maoris and with this country generally agree with the opinions expressed in the annexed leading article of one of the principal journals of New Zealand: "The tour overland through an extensive tract of country chiefly owned and occupied by the Native tribes of New Zealand, which has just been accomplished so successfully by His Excellency Governor Sir G. F. Bowen, will go farther to reassure the people of England with respect to the satisfactory settlement of the Native difficulty than a thousand arguments and ex parte statements on the subject. Throughout the entire distance traversed by His Excellency and the few attendants who accompanied him from Napier northwards till they reached the Upper Waikato, the most cheerful demonstrations of welcome and good-will were every where accorded to the Queen's representative. Not only by the numerous influential chiefs who remained firm in their allegiance to the European cause in days gone by, when the colony stood so much in need of their assistance, but by many who were at one time prominent leaders among the most determined of our enemies, the same hearty desire was expressed that the past should be forgotten, and that all occasions for difference between the races should be carefully guarded against for the future. We look upon this as a most encouraging feature in the prospects of the country at the present time. It speaks volumes for the foresight and wisdom of our Native policy, which, while it aims at bringing the Natives under the dominion of the law as far as practicable, leaves them, in other respects, to the free exercise of their own free-will and judgment. The colony is now reaping the advantage of this course of treatment. On every hand the Native people are manifesting a desire to return to habits of peace and industry. They are beginning to appreciate the unmistakable benefit to themselves from the opening-up of the country to trade and settlement. In this respect their general concurrence in, and approval of, the great colonizing policy of the country is something remarkable. Only three years ago they, would have unitedly resisted any attempt on the part of the Government to encroach upon their territory in districts where, last month, Sir George Bowen was received most loyally, and where the principal desire of the resident Native chiefs was to be 'instructed in all the laws, thoughts, and works of the Europeans.' The general anxiety of the Natives on the subject of education is particularly deserving of commendation. This more especially, we would fain believe, betokens a favourable turning-point in the history of the Maori people. The desire evinced by them to be employed upon public works is of itself also an indication of a fixed determination to return to more settled habits, if only the opportunity for doing so is afforded them. Altogether this visit of the Governor of the colony to the Native tribes has proved most opportune, and it cannot fail to produce a good effect on the general prospects of the country. His Excellency and party were both surprised and delighted with the magnificence of the scenery they witnessed throughout the entire route, as well as with the flattering reception they everywhere met with, and we shall not be surprised if the results of their journey should in many respects prove even more beneficial to the colony than was at first anticipated." ...

Governor Bowen's Third Visit to Waikato. Ngaruawahia, Waikato, N.Z., 10th June, 1872.

My Lord,—

In continuation of my despatches respecting my recent journey overland across the centre of the North Island of New Zealand, I have now the honour to report that I left Auckland on the 31st ultimo, on my third visit to the Waikato District.

- 2. Full accounts of this important part of the colony, which was the principal field of the operations of the Imperial and Colonial forces, under General Sir Duncan Cameron, in the campaigns of 1863 and 1864, will be found in my Despatches No. 49, of June 30, 1868, and No. 31, of March 7, 1870, written immediately after my two former visits; and in the maps and other documents accompanying those despatches. To the above-mentioned papers, several of which have been laid before the Imperial Parliament, I would request your Lordship's attention.

- 3. I now address your Lordship from Ngaruawahia,

This name signifies "the meeting of the waters."

and Waipa, and commonly called "the old Maori capital," because (as I have explained on a previous occasion) it was the residence of Potatau te Wherowhero, who was elected, in 1857, to be the first (so-called) Maori King. This celebrated chieftain and warrior, who had been a firm friend and ally of the English in the early days of the colony, and who never took part in any hostilities against the Queen's troops, died in 1861, and was buried at Ngaruawahia. On my first visit to the Waikato, in 1868, I caused his tomb, which had fallen into decay, to be repaired; and this act is said to have produced a very favourable impression on his son and successor, Tawhiao, and on their family and clansmen.

- 4. On my journey hither from Auckland, I have proceeded by short stages, visiting all the English settlements and Native kaingas, or villages. I have been everywhere received with the most cordial respect and welcome.
- 5. Nothing can be more satisfactory than the general progress made in the Waikato since the date of my first visit in 1868, and especially during the last two years. The colonists and the Natives alike appear to feel that permanent tranquillity and confidence have now been finally established.
- 6. I annex a clear and concise report from Mr. McLean (who is also in the Waikato) on the present aspect of Native affairs.
- 7. After completing my visit to this district I shall return to Auckland, and thence proceed to Wellington in time for the opening of the next session of the New Zealand Parliament, which is summoned to meet for the despatch of business on the 16th July.

I have, &c.,

G. F. BOWEN.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Kimberley.

Enclosure.MEMORANDUM by Mr. McLEAN, C.M.G.

The Native and Defence Minister submits to His Excellency the following brief sketch of the aspect of Native affairs:—

A calm reviewal of Native affairs at the present moment affords the assurance that the attitude assumed by the different tribes throughout the Island is of a most satisfactory character. The majority are either engaged on roads and other public works, or are evincing an anxiety to follow the example of those of their countrymen who are thus helping to open up the country. The taste for peaceful avocations is resuming its way, and each year sees an addition to the breadth of land under cultivation by the Natives. It is gratifying to find that the ex-rebels who made their submission last year are fully carrying out their pledges of amity, and are living in peace and quiet; and that the behaviour of the prisoners lately under sentence for their participation in acts of rebellion, and who have been released from confinement, is such as to warrant the leniency which has been shown to them.

The most interesting feature at present in connection with the Native race is the prevalence of a strong desire for the education of the children, and for the acquirement by them of the English language. For this purpose the Maoris have, by their contributions aided the Government in the erection of schools; and the progress made by the pupils has been far more rapid than could ever have been hoped for.

A marked moderation is perceptible in the tone of those tribes who have hitherto been the most violent in opposition. Even among the most extreme section of Hauhaus, that are under the immediate control of Tawhiao, the so-named King, there has arisen and been expressed a desire to meet His Excellency and the Native Minister. Owing, however, to various tribal differences, the interview is likely to be deferred; and it has been deemed advisable that no undue impatience should be displayed to hasten negotiations until a more complete understanding shall have been arrived at between the opposite factions of the party. To effect this wished-for object no pains are spared, and there is every probability that its attainment at no distant period will be the prelude to a satisfactory disposal of all difficulties.

Te Kooti, who during his career has proved himself a formidable foe, is now a miserable fugitive, having cast himself for protection upon the King party, amongst which he is no more than a prisoner at large during quiet behaviour. Several chiefs of importance, in different parts of the Island, who had not made their appearance in the European settlements since the beginning of the late war, have spontaneously come out of their seclusion and visited the Native Minister.

The Native Minister regrets to have to inform His Excellency that a considerable failure has taken place this season in the potato crop, and that the result is likely to be a certain degree of distress on the part of the Natives. The Government have, however, taken steps to afford relief to the tribes which appear the most probable sufferers, and are distributing a quantity of seed wheat and other cereals, for which the ground is being prepared with the utmost alacrity. The Natives are also repairing their old flour-mills, and are on all sides resuming the industrial pursuits which they had more or less abandoned for several years.

At no time have there been fairer evidences of peaceful progress on the part of the Natives than at the present; and the results already apparent from the policy of conciliation adopted towards them render it a matter of little doubt that its continuance must lead to a prosperous future for both races.

Among the subjects for congratulation which are submitted to His Excellency, not the least is the fact that all military operations in the field have come to an end; and that the colonial force is released from active service, and is engaged on the construction of public works.

His Excellency's tour through the interior of the Northern Island has doubtless been fully notified to the Imperial authorities; and the Native Minister has only to add, on this point, that it has been productive of the most beneficial results.

DONALD MCLEAN.

8th June, 1872.

No. 107.MEMORANDUM by Mr. McLEAN.

Condition of Native Affairs.

There is but little to remark on the general state of Native affairs in the Northern Island of New Zealand, as these have not undergone any material change since my memorandum of the 8th June, 1872; the only exception of importance having been the settlement of some complications hitherto existing on the West Coast, in the Province of Taranaki. It will be remembered that it was in this district that the chief difficulties of late years had their origin, and that it was from it that fanaticism and disaffection extended to other parts of the colony. The Native Minister is happy to be able to state that the causes which led to these troubles have been in a great measure removed, and that the settlement of the question of the confiscated lands is in progress.

Natives formerly in rebellion, and several of whom had suffered imprisonment in consequence, have been permitted to occupy lands set apart within the boundary of confiscation for their maintenance; and there appears to be every probability that they will follow the example set them by the previously hostile tribes of the Bay of Plenty, and that they will settle down peaceably side by side with the Europeans.

A considerable section of the Waikato tribes continue to exhibit the same friendly relations as at the date of my last memorandum. Another portion still declines to come to formal terms, and wishes to be let alone. In this desire the Government acquiesce, as they see no reason for interference. The tribes of the East Coast and the Ngapuhi in the North remain steadfast in their allegiance: they, as well as other tribes, are employed on roads and public works calculated to open up and improve the various districts.

Generally there is a tendency on the part of the Natives to resume industrial pursuits, and this is evinced by the cultivation of larger quantities of land; and by the anxiety shown to obtain agricultural implements. All persons imprisoned for political offences have been released.

It has been the aim of your Excellency's Government to encourage and foster in every way the arts of peace and industry among the Natives; to open up the country by main and branch roads; to promote education by the establishment of village schools where the English language is taught; to cultivate friendly relations with the several tribes; and to use the utmost endeavours to bring the Natives to a higher state of civilization.

Inauguration of Waka Nene's Monument. Bay of Islands, New Zealand, 19th March, 1873.

My Lord,—

In continuation of my Despatch No. 24, I have the honour to report that I took my final departure from Auckland yesterday afternoon. My family and I were accompanied to the place of embarkation by the principal public functionaries and local authorities, by the public bodies, by the friendly societies, and by many thousands of all classes of the community. The demonstrations of regard for us, and of regret at our departure, were very lively and affecting.

- 2. This morning the "Hero" stopped for a few hours (as previously arranged) at the Bay of Islands, to enable me to unveil the monument of Tamati Waka Nene, I annex the substance of the address delivered by me on this occasion. The ceremony was performed in the presence of the chiefs and clansmen of the Ngapuhi and of the other Maori tribes of the North; and of a large concourse of the leading colonists, who had assembled to pay honour to the memory of their firm friend and gallant ally.
- 3. I am unable to write at length, for the "Hero" is ready to proceed forthwith on the voyage to Australia. I will only add that it is an interesting fact that my last despatch from New Zealand should be dated from the Bay of Islands, which has filled so prominent a place in the early annals of this country; and that my last public act here should be a mark of respect to the memory of the Maori chief who was mainly instrumental in procuring the cession of the sovereignty of these Islands to the British Crown.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the OFFICER ADMINISTERING the GOVERNMENT of NEW ZEALAND to the Right Hon. the Earl of KIMBERLEY.

Government House, Wellington, N.Z., 10th April, 1873.

My Lord,—

I have the honour to inform your Lordship that I left Auckland, viâ the port of Onehunga, for this, the seat of Government, on Monday morning, the 31st ultimo, per p.s. "Luna," accompanied by the Hon. Mr. Vogel (Colonial Treasurer) and the Hon. Mr. McLean (Native Minister). On the evening of that day we were driven by stress of weather to take shelter under a projecting headland called Albatross Point. On the following morning, it being evident that a heavy and confused sea was still running outside, it was not deemed prudent to put the "Luna" to sea; and as our anchorage lay near to the Harbour of Kawhia we weighed anchor, crossed the bar, and entered that port. This unexpected visit led to interviews with the Natives who inhabit the shores of the harbour, including several influential chiefs—among them the chief Tapihana and Tu Tawhiao, the eldest son of Tawhiao, known as the Maori King.

- 2. The Hon. the Native Minister has sent me a memorandum narrating the leading incidents which occurred at those interviews, which memorandum I beg to enclose, for your Lordship's information.
- 3. In so doing, I desire to convey to your Lordship my appreciation of the tact and discretion evinced by Mr. McLean on that occasion. While a proper firmness was shown in discouraging all unreasonable expectations in the Natives, the utmost care was taken that no act should be done or expression uttered which could awaken suspicion or wound their smallest susceptibility. And if beneficial results should arise out of our visit to Kawhia, and our interesting interview with the young chief Tu Tawhiao, I shall attribute those results in no small degree to the personal influence of the Native Minister, and to the judicious manner in which that influence was applied.

I have, &c.,

G. A. ARNEY.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Kimberley.

Enclosure. MEMORANDUM by the Hon. DONALD MCLEAN, C.M.G., Native Minister.

The Native Minister begs to submit, for His Excellency's information, a memorandum respecting the late visit to Kawhia and interviews with the Natives of that place, including Tu Tawhiao, the eldest of the King's sons. The chief interest connected with this event arises from the fact that the port of Kawhia had been closed to shipping for the last twelve or thirteen years; Europeans had been strictly prohibited from visiting the place by land; and the Natives, all of whom were of the Hauhau faith, were particularly sensitive of any infringement of the laws of isolation which they had for many years so rigorously maintained.

On the morning of the 31st ultimo, His Excellency, accompanied by the Hon. Mr. Vogel, Colonial Treasurer, and by the Native Minister, left Manukau Harbour for Wellington, encountering a heavy gale, which rendered it necessary to seek shelter at Albatross Point. The following morning, as the gale continued, the Harbour of Kawhia was entered, and notice sent to the chiefs that His Excellency had been compelled by stress of weather to run into their port. The Natives readily accepted this explanation, and the deck of the "Luna" was soon crowded with visitors from different parts of the harbour. Several of the Natives who came on board were personally acquainted with the Native Minister, and expressed much satisfaction at seeing him after the lapse of so many years. Past incidents and events were freely discussed; but most of the speakers frankly intimated that no other vessel but the "Luna" would be permitted to anchor in Kawhia, the only harbour in the North Island not open to shipping, and where no vessel had been seen since the visit of Sir George Grey in Her Majesty's ship "Eclipse," in the year 1865.

During the forenoon a small canoe was seen paddling towards the "Luna" from the opposite or north arm of the harbour, bringing the notoriously turbulent chief Tapihana, who took a conspicuous part in the Taranaki war, and afterwards in planning and effecting the escape from Kawau (Sir George Grey's island) of himself and other prisoners who had been captured by General Cameron at Rangiriri during the Waikato war. After some slight hesitation, Tapihana stepped on board, and addressed a long speech to the Native Minister and the chief Wi Tako, a member of the Legislative Council, who formed one of His Excellency's party. The Native Minister replied to Tapihana, after which Wi Tako made a most effective speech, pointing out the advantages of peace and friendly intercourse with the Europeans. As the discussion progressed, Tapihana's tone, from being somewhat defiant, became very friendly and temperate, and he requested that the "Luna" should visit his side of the harbour, where the Native Minister had, through messengers, been arranging an interview with Tu Tawhiao, who resides there, and who sent a special invitation to the Native Minister. On landing, Mr. McLean and Wi Tako were first welcomed by Honi Wetere, and as they approached the entrance to the King's residence were met in a frank and cordial manner by Tu Tawhiao, the eldest son of the King, a fine young man of about nineteen years of age. An interesting and friendly conversation took place, frequent references being made by the chiefs to Tu Tawhiao's grandfather, Potatau, the first King, and to his friendship with Mr. McLean.

When the meeting was over, Tu Tawhiao accepted an invitation to come on board the "Luna," and was accompanied by a few of his chiefs, all of whom were introduced to His Excellency, who spoke in friendly and assuring terms to the young chief and his companions. Tu Tawhiao at first displayed considerable emotion, no doubt feeling that by this act he had broken down the barriers of isolation which had so long separated the Europeans from his people. After luncheon with His Excellency, Tu Tawhiao and his friends visited all parts of the "Luna," and seemed much interested and full of inquiry as to the working of the engines and other particulars new to them about the vessel.

It is quite evident, from the interest displayed by the Natives, that the accidental Visit of the "Luna" has been productive of results the importance of which it would at present be difficult to estimate.

Tu Tawhiao was most anxious that the departure of the vessel should be delayed until his father could be communicated with. Finding that it was impossible to comply with his request, the Native Minister promised to return shortly to Kawhia to meet the King and his adherents. As the "Luna" left, three English cheers were given by the Natives from the shore, which were responded to from the vessel.

A recent telegram from Waikato states that the Natives generally are gratified at what has taken place, and are very desirous to attend the proposed meeting, which, it is expected, will pave the way for effecting more permanent friendly relations with the King party, who now form the only section of the New Zealand tribes that have preserved their ancient manners and customs, and independence of European progress and civilization.

The Native Minister begs to be permitted to congratulate His Excellency on this remarkable and auspicious event occurring at the commencement of his administration.

No. 110. Copy of a DESPATCH from the OFFICER ADMINISTERING the GOVERNMENT to NEW ZEALAND of to the Right Hon. the Earl of KIMBERLEY.

Kawhia.—Report of Sir George Arney's Visit. Government House, Wellington, N.Z., 10th April, 1873.
My Lord,—

Adverting to my recent visit to Kawhia, and to the memorandum of the Native Minister transmitted in my Despatch No. 31, of this date, it may be superfluous for me to add any remarks thereon; but, as sanguine anticipations are formed that our visit to Kawhia will be followed by important results, I venture to invite your Lordship's attention to some of the conditions on which those anticipations are based.

The Harbour of Kawhia, as your Lordship is doubtless aware, is nearly midway the ports of Manukau and Whanganui, on the western coast of the North Island, and opens by far the most valuable inlet in that long, often tempestuous, line of coast. Its waters cover a considerable area, and ramify up two principal channels into the surrounding hills. Those hills fold back into the interior, connecting themselves at no very distant interval with the great Pirongia ranges, which latter, after rising in some parts more than 2,000 feet, at length descend upon the lower waters of the River Waipa, and enclose that side of the great Waikato basin. Amidst and behind the hills which encompass the Harbour of Kawhia, but with easy access to its waters, the Maori King and his immediate adherents have planted themselves. An aukati, or pale of separation, which the colonist is rarely allowed to pass, having been established on the side of the Waikato, the progress of settlement and civilization from the interior of this Island is barred; and, while the Harbour of Kawhia continues closed to seaward, the exclusion of the settler and the isolation of the Natives are complete. Regarded with a view either to strategic objects or to the isolation of the inhabitants, the site is but too judiciously chosen; and this exclusive arbitrary control of an extensive and commodious harbour forms perhaps the most real, if not the only, symbol of true sovereignty held by Tawhiao.

On the other hand, it may reasonably be expected that if the Harbour of Kawhia be once again opened to shipping its shores will again become the scene of European enterprise, and that totally different relations will thenceforward arise, not only between the Natives and the settler, but between the Natives and Her Majesty's Government. I say "again," for Kawhia was formerly settled, to the reciprocal advantage of both races. Vestiges of the settlers' improvements still remain; and, after steaming a considerable distance up the harbour, we first anchored opposite a European-built house and store (now deserted), wherein a settler formerly conducted a lucrative trade with the Natives, and is reputed to have laid the foundation of a fortune which he now enjoys in a neighbouring colony.

The soil up the hill-slopes from the water's edge, while it is sometimes open and at others covered with bush, is generally productive, and not unfrequently is of excellent quality. Cattle also were visible in various directions along the shore and along the hill-sides. The Native occupiers formerly raised and brought to market large supplies, the product of those slopes, upon which occasionally are still seen traces of fencing and cultivation. Indeed, we shared the benefits of their cultivations; for shortly after the "Luna" anchored Natives appeared tracking their courses from different directions to the shore, for whom Mr. McLean at once sent one of the ship's boats to bring them, on board, and who brought with them good melons of different kinds, grapes, apples, &c., lamenting only that they had no previous notice of our intention to visit them, and thus had failed of an opportunity to bring much larger supplies. But, notwithstanding their advantages of soil and climate, these Natives appeared to be miserably poor. On the Waikato side of Tawhiao's aukati the Natives are less poor; for the Hauhau, although he banish the pakeha beyond the pale, is not reluctant himself to cross that pale, or to avail himself occasionally of the settler's stores and merchandise. But the isolation of the Kawhia Native is more exclusive and more stringent. He has only the hills on one side of him, and the dreary ocean on the other. He may, indeed, command a sufficiency of food, attainable by moderate labour? fish, flesh, fowl, vegetable, and fruit; but he wants to be clothed as well as fed. Many of those who came on board the "Luna" were scantily covered; others were in rags; and one finely-grown man crouched for a while under the ship's side, and hesitated to come on board from mere shame at his ragged clothing. Another Native despondingly complained that it was no use for them to come among the Europeans, because they had no money to buy clothes. In others, the hollow cough and sunken aspect betrayed a constitution which already, before the winter is yet on, was suffering from cold and exposure. These poor people evidently felt the evils which they had brought upon themselves by their self-imposed isolation, and must needs long for those comforts which a resumed intercourse with the settlers would diffuse amongst them.

Your Lordship will probably believe that the welcome offered by them to their waters was sincere. That welcome was earnestly conveyed also, by their chiefs. Seated round the poop deck of the "Luna," they conducted their debate with the regularity of a formal runanga. The memorandum of the Native Minister gives the general course of the discussion. Suffice it for me to add that the chief Tapihana, both while replying to the chief Wi Tako, M.L.C., and on his being presented to and shaking hands with myself, declared himself reconciled; while it was repeatedly urged that the "Luna" should visit Kawhia again and again, after which it was intimated the harbour might be opened to all vessels. This assurance was confirmed in the presence of Tu Tawhiao. Nothing could be of fairer promise than was the whole bearing of that young man. His demeanour was dignified, yet modest and becoming. On being presented to myself he bid me the usual Maori salutation, Tena koe, not with the jaunty—even bantering—air often assumed by the Natives, but slowly, and in a tone of intense melancholy. He then stood before me awhile, with his right hand in mine, his head drooping, in silence, and under visible emotion; until suddenly he drew back, retreated to a bench at the side of the deck, and there sat for a considerable time between two attendant chiefs, his head bent down, his face buried in his two hands, and in silence. At length he rose, stepped forward, and again shook hands with me, after which he preserved a more assured composure. The whole conduct of the young man led me to the same conclusion as that formed by the Native Minister—viz., that Tu Tawhiao attributed to his own visit the significance of breaking down the barriers of isolation, and pledging himself henceforth to a reconciliation with the Europeans.

Upon conditions like the foregoing, it is not unreasonable to hope that the Natives of Kawhia, reduced as they have been by their isolation from prosperity to poverty, will ere long accept the introduction of those comforts which they evidently wish to obtain, and that, as ancillary thereto, the Harbour of Kawhia will be reopened to the trade and enterprise of the colonist. But that trade would almost of necessity be accompanied, if not introduced, by the locating of the colonist himself upon those shores; and it is, I believe, invariably found that the introduction of the settler among the Natives is followed by that of the Magistrate, Native as well as European, whose jurisdiction the Natives themselves become ready and eager to invoke in the adjustment of their disputes. Such relations, once established, are not easily dislocated.

The Natives have never of themselves failed of their confidence in our Courts of justice as such; and in 1861, after the first year of the Waitara war, the Resident Magistrate's Court of New Plymouth disposed of a greater number of causes in which Natives were plaintiffs than had ever been disposed of in any one previous year before that tribunal. Having regard, then, to the geographical position of Kawhia, as already described, in connection with the district immediately under the control of Tawhiao, it is not too much to expect that, if such relations as are above indicated should be established on the shores of Kawhia Harbour, the Natives from the other side of the ranges would find it their interest gradually to accept them likewise. Meanwhile it is a vital object to induce all Natives alike to resort and submit themselves to the supremacy of the criminal law of the country. The Hauhaus living within the borders of Tawhiao's district have evinced a certain disposition to recognize that supremacy—at all events as regards offenders who may come within those borders in order to escape from justice. The following example has recently occurred: An accused person, not a Native, fled from Tauranga, and took refuge within the aukati: the police boldly pursued him, and were at first threatened with death by the Hauhaus, but on explaining the object of their mission the police were allowed to search for the offender, and the Hauhaus, although declining formally to surrender the fugitive, yet gave such directions to the police that they could not miss the capture, which they ultimately effected, of their man. He was brought to trial before myself, and convicted. The Government are anxious that Tawhiao should be induced to recognize and act on the same principle in all cases, especially those of homicide, whether committed by Native or European, and whether within or without the borders of the Hauhaus territory; for they consider that, if even thus much should be accomplished, the substance of sovereignty would be in a great degree conceded, the barrier between the Natives and the Government would soon disappear, and the authority of the Queen's warrant would be recognized throughout every part of New Zealand.

After observing for so many years the Natives' mode of action, I am not prone to form hasty anticipations of their improvement: they move slowly and after long deliberation, but I am hopeful that they will still yield to conciliatory treatment. I also wish to assure your Lordship that during the short time that I may administer the Government I shall abstain as far as practicable from interfering in questions of policy, whether Native or European, and shall avoid doing any act which may commit His Excellency Sir James Fergusson to this or that line of conduct. My humble duty will be to so carry on the Government, under the advice of my Ministers, that no heavy arrears of business may be cast upon Sir James Fergusson when he arrives, and to hand over the machine to His Excellency in the same admirable working order as Sir G.F. Bowen has left it. But I agree with my Ministers in thinking that, for the purposes and with the objects above specified, we ought not to delay, but should accept the first opportunity, should any occur, to improve those friendly relations with the Natives which were initiated on my recent visit to the Harbour of Kawhia.

In conclusion, I beg to apologize to your Lordship for this long and, I fear, wearisome despatch. It will probably be the only occasion for my so trespassing upon your Lordship's time. In that hope,

I have, &c.,

G.A.ARNEY.

Auckland.—Governor Fergusson's Visit to Native Districts. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 8th June, 1874.

My Lord,—

I have the honour to inform you that I have lately visited some of the most important Native districts in the North Island, and your Lordship may desire to know the general result.

- 2. On the 16th March I left Napier, Hawke's Bay, and travelled by Lake Taupo to Tauranga, Bay of Plenty. Between the two latter points I had four meetings with considerable bodies of Natives. They are uniformly contented and well-affected. They prize highly the advantages they enjoy by means of the main line of road, now complete, through the district, along which a mail coach now runs twice a week, travellers and live stock are continually passing, and the electric telegraph is in operation. Several schools are established, and are well attended. At Ohinemutu, Rotorua, I visited one attended by nearly fifty children, whose intelligence and drill were remarkably good. The chief requests made to me by the chiefs were for more roads, telegraphs, and schools. Towards the support of the last they are willing to make liberal grants of land.
- 3. On the 20th April I left Auckland on a visit to the Waikato District, which was of some consequence, as being that immediately joining the "King's," and the Government thought it proper to be attended by considerable detachments of the various forces employed upon the "frontier." I was accompanied by Governor Du Cane, of Tasmania, who was visiting me at the time, the Colonial Secretary, and all the local officers of the Government. In accordance with the policy which has been of late pursued, only the European settlers and the loyal Natives were invited to attend, which they did in considerable numbers, at a meeting at Newcastle on the 21st. I beg to enclose a newspaper report of the proceedings.

Extract from New Zealand Herald, 9th May, 1874.

- 4. From Newcastle I proceeded to Cambridge, where I remained for two days, and visited some of the redoubts which are erected along the line of the confiscated boundary. Settlement is rapidly increasing in Waikato, and fine farms are to be seen throughout the district, indicating a growing sense of security and an increasing investment of capital. The railway is in course of construction as far as Newcastle, where there are coal mines; and its completion so far, which may be expected by the end of another year, cannot fail both to advance rapidly the progress and prosperity of the district, and to secure it against disturbance from without.

- 5. From Cambridge I travelled across the country to Rotorua, not only to show the Hot-Lake district to Mr. Du Cane, but because the ability of the Governor to pass through the Native districts without any unusual escort is calculated to produce good results, giving confidence both to the European and to the loyal Native population. It is not long since a horse-track has been cleared on this route, and I believe it has not been traversed by any former Governor.
- 6. Upon this occasion I was a spectator of a large gathering of Natives near Rotorua, for the settlement of a dispute of long standing about the ownership of a large tract of land known as the Te Horohoro Block. This dispute had lately come to a head, and in former times would certainly have led to a war; but, by common consent, the contending parties agreed to abide by the arbitration of the Government, and certain officers conversant with Native customs, being appointed to act, were able to conduct the inquiry with the utmost regularity in the presence of all interested, and to come to a conclusion in favour of one party without any doubt of the acquiescence of the other.
- 7. Again, on the 13th May I left Auckland on a visit to the district north of that place, inhabited chiefly by the powerful Ngapuhi Tribe, who have always been very friendly since the conflict of 1845, but among whom there have been a good many acts of violence from time to time. I visited the Bay of Islands, passed overland to Hokianga, and upon my return went on by sea to Whangaroa and Mangonui. It is gratifying to see the cordial relations existing between the Europeans and Natives throughout the northern district. Large numbers of the latter are employed by farmers, timber merchants, and others at the current wages of the colony, with mutual satisfaction.
- 8. It is proper that I should inform your Lordship that during the last two months there have been decided indications of a desire, on the part of the Hauhau party among the Maoris, to put an end to their estrangement from the Government. Their chiefs appear to be divided among themselves, and both they and their people desire to share in the advantages which the loyal tribes enjoy. A meeting lately held by Tawhiao, the Maori King, for which preparations had been made during many months, and which had probably been intended to unite his party, proved a failure, and upon its separation the principal chiefs came to the neighbourhood of the frontier, where they have stated that they remain in hopes of receiving terms from the Government. A loyal chief of the Waikato, who has for many years been active in support of the Government, has twice waited upon me and assured me of his belief in the willingness of the separated tribes to come under subjection, provided that they be permitted to manage their own affairs under their own chiefs upon which basis they would be ready to admit communication through the district, and provide for the surrender of criminals. I trust that the Government will not lose an opportunity of so desirable a consummation; but in the meantime nothing is being done on account of the absence of Mr. McLean, the Native Minister, upon public business in Australia. It remains to be seen, indeed, whether the Hauhau chiefs are really disposed to surrender their independence, a step which would be distasteful to many of their followers.
- 9. With the exception of the danger of incursions of some turbulent members across the boundary, against which due precautions are taken, there is no disturbing element in connection with the Native population. Europeans are constantly becoming more intermixed with them, and they more habituated to and dependent upon the comforts of European products, and the money derived by the sale or lease of their lands. There is, however, much cause for regret in the demoralizing influences which invariably accompany the influx of Europeans. Few Natives of any class can resist the temptation to drink, habitually and to excess, while they have the means of indulging in it. There are chiefs who set an example of sobriety or total abstinence, but it cannot be doubted that the frequent excess in ardent and often bad spirits by both sexes, and their inordinate use of tobacco from a very early age, are permanent causes of the rapid and almost general diminution of the numbers of this fine and capable race, which is presented alike by the paucity of births and the mortality among the children (rather than among the infants). At the same time there is reason to hope that a remnant will be saved, and that the considerable number of children receiving instruction upon the English system in our schools may raise up a certain number so educated as to resist the temptations which have proved fatal to so many. The full capacity both of Maoris and of half-castes to acquire and employ all branches of knowledge induces the belief that there will long survive in New Zealand representatives, and more widely infusions, of the Maori race.
- 10. I wish that some systematic effort were made to fit the children of chiefs by higher education for their proper work among their people, and even for taking a part in the future government and business of the country. In spite of the comparative failure of some former attempts, I hope, through private association if not by the action of Government, to set on foot some definite organization for this purpose.

I have, &c.,

JAMES FERGUSSON.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon.

Downing Street, 29th October, 1874.

Sir,—

As the period for your retirement from the Government of New Zealand on the appointment of the Marquis of Normanby is now at hand, I take this occasion of conveying to you my congratulations on the success which has attended your administration of the affairs of the colony during your term of office.

I have, &c.,

Governor the Right Hon. Sir J. Fergusson, Bart. CARNARVON.

No. 114. Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor the Right Hon. Sir J. FERGUSSON to the Right Hon. the Earl of CARNARVON.

Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 25th November, 1874.

My Lord,—

I have the honour to inform your Lordship that, having been apprised by the Marquis of Normanby of his intention to proceed from Sydney to this place by a steampacket, which will probably arrive on the 30th instant, I have come to meet his Lordship, and have made arrangements for his being sworn in immediately upon his arrival, after which I shall leave the colony upon my return to England.

I have, &c.,

JAMES FERGUSSON.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon.

No. 115. Copy of a DESPATCH from the Most Hon. the Marquis of NORMANBY to the Right Hon. the Earl of CARNARVON.

Government House, Wellington, N.Z., 21st December, 1874.

My Lord,—

I have the honour to inform your Lordship that, on my arrival at Auckland on the 3rd instant, I took the oath of office before his Honour the Chief Justice, Sir George Arney, and have assumed the government of this colony.

- 2. The reception which was accorded to me by the inhabitants of Auckland, and also at Wellington, was most gratifying and enthusiastic, and it was the more pleasing to me as it evinced the loyalty and affection which the people of this colony feel towards Her Majesty.

I have, &c.,

NORMANBY.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon.

No. 116. Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor the Most Hon. the Marquis of NORMANBY to the Right Hon. the Earl of CARNARVON.

Government House, Wellington, N.Z., 7th June, 1875.

My Lord,—

I have the honour to inform your Lordship that on the 29th ultimo I returned to Wellington, after paying an official visit to Christchurch and Dunedin.

- 2. My visit south was unfortunately unavoidably delayed until too late a period of the year to enable me to see the country to the best advantage; but, at the same time, I did not feel justified in postponing my visit to those great centres of population till next summer. I therefore left this on the 20th April, and arrived in Christchurch the next day.
- 3. The reception which was there accorded me as Her Majesty's Representative was most gratifying, as evincing the loyalty and attachment which are entertained by the inhabitants towards the Government of Her Majesty.
- 4. Although I had heard much of the flourishing condition of the Provinces of Canterbury and Otago, I own I was quite unprepared to witness the evidences of prosperity and advancement which presented themselves to me on every side. I have long been accustomed to see the rapid progress which takes place in young countries; but I can assure your Lordship that in no place have I seen so much accomplished in so short a period.

- 5. I landed at Port Lyttelton, and at once proceeded by railway to Christchurch. This railway is seven miles in length, and was in the first instance constructed as a provincial undertaking, but has subsequently been purchased by the General Government as a portion of the main trunk line. It is a work of considerable magnitude, as the range of mountains which separates the plains from Port Lyttelton necessitated the formation of a tunnel one and three-quarter miles in length. The undertaking was a bold one for so young a community, but I am happy to state that the result has proved the wisdom of the step; as not only has this ready communication with a safe and commodious harbour given to Canterbury an importance which it could otherwise never have obtained, but the railway itself is at the present moment paying far more than the interest on the cost of construction, after deducting the working expenses.
- 6. The Town of Christchurch is well laid out with wide well-made streets, while many of the public buildings and churches are fine substantial edifices built of stone, and even in an architectural point of view possessing considerable merit. Among these I may especially mention the Provincial Buildings, the Supreme Court, the Normal School now in course of construction, the Wesleyan church, and St. John's Church. A large English cathedral is also in course of construction. The environs of the town are studded with comfortable well-built villas, the land for miles round is well farmed, and the fields are enclosed with neat well-trimmed gorse fences. The roads are also wide and well kept; and there is a general appearance of prosperity and refinement about the whole place which reminds me forcibly of a prosperous country town in England, and makes it hard to believe that the whole thing has been the creation of only twenty-five years.
- 7. I remained in Christchurch for a fortnight, and during that time I visited the various public institutions and schools, which I found, upon the whole, to be in a very satisfactory condition.
- 8. On the 4th of May I quitted Christchurch and proceeded overland to Dunedin, where I arrived on the 7th, passing through Timaru, Oamaru, and Palmerston on my way. For the first seventy miles out of Christchurch I was enabled to proceed by railway, but after that I had to travel by road. I believe that it will take about two years before the railway is completed the whole way, although sections of it will be opened before that time.
- 9. If I was most agreeably surprised with the appearance of the country about Christchurch, I was certainly not less so with the general character of the country that I passed through on my journey south. I say nothing of the scenery, although that would well justify comment of the most favourable kind; but I confine myself rather to the evidences of material advancement and prosperity which presented themselves to my view in all directions.
- 10. On the southern portion of the Canterbury Plain the land is poor and unfit for cultivation, but it answers well for pastoral purposes. After passing Geraldine, a little to the south of the Rangitata River, however, the soil improves; and from there to within a few miles of Dunedin one passes almost uninterruptedly through a splendid agricultural country, the whole of which is under cultivation; and the numerous cornstacks with which the fields are studded bear ample evidence of the richness of the harvest during the last summer. I was also much struck by the manner in which the land was cultivated, which was far superior to that which is usually seen in a colony.
- 11. The towns of Timaru and Oamaru, through which I passed, were both of them very pretty, flourishing country towns, chiefly built of stone, and some of the buildings are large and handsome. Both towns are situated on the sea-coast; but, owing to the heavy surf which runs upon the shore, considerable difficulty is experienced in the shipment of goods. To obviate this, at Oamaru a large and substantial pier of concrete is being constructed, which, when completed, will afford good shelter for vessels; but at present only about 400 feet, out of the 1,200 to which it is proposed to extend it, has been built.
- 12. Dunedin, which is beautifully situated, is undoubtedly the largest, best built, and most important city in the colony, and presents all the appearance of a busy commercial town in an old country, and its dimensions are rapidly extending. The public buildings are all substantially and handsomely built, and the streets and shops would do no discredit to any town in England; and various manufactories have been started, which, I am informed, are in a prosperous condition, among which I may especially mention a very fine woollen factory, where they make most excellent cloth.
- 13. Throughout my journey I was much struck by the magnitude of the public works that have been completed. The country in various places is intersected by larger torrent rivers, all of which either are or will shortly be traversed by bridges of great length and substantial construction. These rivers are most dangerous to cross, and annually cause a considerable sacrifice of valuable life. The high roads are, generally speaking, most excellent, and equal to any high roads in England; and when once the main line of railway from Christchurch to the South is completed there will be little left to desire for the full development of the resources of that portion of the colony. The construction of these works has undoubtedly caused a large expenditure of public money. Much has been paid for out of the provincial revenue; but still more, especially in the construction of the trunk line of railway, has to be provided out of the general revenue under the Public Works and Immigration Act. At the same time, great as the expenditure undoubtedly is, and largely as the public debt has been increased, I believe that the policy which suggested it is a sound one, provided that it is not carried too far; and I am the more fortified in this opinion by observing the wonderful manner in which the various sections of railway throughout the country, as they are opened for traffic, at once bring in returns in excess of their working expenses; and I believe that when once they are all completed, and through traffic is established, the railways will themselves pay the greater part of the interest on the money raised for their construction, even if they do not, as in Victoria, become an actual source of revenue. Be that as it may, in a country possessing the resources, the climate, and the class of population which is settled in New Zealand, I can entertain little apprehension for the future. Slight checks and reverses may, and no doubt will, occur; but, with ordinary prudence in the management of affairs, the ultimate success and prosperity of the colony is, I believe, secured, and I have little doubt that in the course of another twenty-five years, if not sooner, it will not be surpassed by any colonial possession in Her Majesty's dominions.

- 14. I cannot conclude this despatch without mentioning the strong feeling of loyalty and attachment to the Mother-country which I found pervading all classes of the community—a feeling which evinces itself, not only in expressions, but also in the constant endeavours to acclimatize everything that is English, and to reproduce as far as possible, in their far distant home, the tastes, refinement, and the recollections of the Old Country; and the reception which I received as Her Majesty's Representative was in every instance of the most cordial and hearty character.

I have, &c.,

NORMANBY.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon.

No. 1. Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor HOBSON to the PRINCIPAL SECRETARY of STATE for the COLONIES.

Remarks on Report of the Chief Protector. Government House, Auckland, New Ulster, 15th December, 1841.
My Lord,—

I have the honour to forward the half-yearly report of the Protector of Aborigines, Mr. Clarke, in which he sets forth the very peaceable and tractable state of the Native population; but, at the same time, he remarks upon the apprehensions entertained by them respecting their land; and I certainly admit that a people who are in the highest degree jealous of their territorial rights, and amongst whom those rights are very imperfectly defined, are not unlikely to resort to force sooner or later, rather than suffer the occupation of lands which may have been fairly bought from one tribe, but are claimed with great apparent justice by another.

I take for instance the Waikato Tribe, under the chief Te Wherowhero, who are extremely powerful. They conquered and drove away the Ngatiawas from Taranaki in 1834, leaving only a small remnant, who found refuge in the mountains of Cape Egmont; and having pretty well laid waste the country, and carried off a large number of slaves, they retired to their own district on the banks of the River Waikato. It appears that in 1839 Colonel Wakefield visited the country, and bought a considerable portion of it from the few Ngatiawas who had resumed their habitations on the retreat of Te Wherowhero. Now, Te Wherowhero claims the country as his by right of conquest, and insists on it that the remnant of the Ngatiawas are slaves; that they only live at Taranaki by sufferance; and that they had no right whatsoever to sell the land without his consent. In illustration of his argument he placed a heavy ruler on some light papers, saying, "Now, so long as I choose to keep this weight here the papers remain quiet, but if I remove it the wind immediately blows them away: so it is with the people of Taranaki;" alluding to his power to drive them off. Te Wherowhero certainly has a claim to the land, but not a primary one, as the received rule is that those who occupy the land must first be satisfied. But he is the most powerful chief in New Zealand, and I fear will not be governed by abstract rights, but will take the law into his own hands. I had hopes until a few days ago that he would consent to take a moderate compensation for his claim, but he suddenly broke off a negotiation entered into with him because, his conditions being large, I determined on referring them to Colonel. Wakefield before I paid the price stipulated. Where he has gone, or what his intentions are, I cannot yet learn; but he will probably call on me again when his impatience has moderated.

I have mentioned this case as the type of a hundred others merely to show your Lordship how difficulty it is, unsupported by power, to conclude any real bargain with the Natives, for it is clear that in this case Te Wherowhero has presumed on his imposing position, and on my evident weakness; and I am compelled to assume an independence which I certainly cannot maintain.

Mr. Clarke very properly calls my attention to the want felt in all the districts of sub-protectors for the direction and instruction of the Native population, but I am wholly unable to find suitable persons for the office....

Hitherto purchases of land from the Natives have been effected through Mr. Clarke; but his dealings with them in these matters interfere in some measure, I fear, with his conservative vocation of Protector; for although he, as an individual, acts most conscientiously both towards the Natives and the Government, yet there is no natural connection between the office of a land commissioner who buys land for the Government and that of protector of the rights and liberties of the aboriginal proprietors of the soil. The New Zealanders are a shrewd people, and are not a little apt to attribute all the kindness and advice Mr. Clarke may offer them to the more sordid view of obtaining their lands; besides which, he is often obliged to place himself in a false position with regard to them while resisting their unreasonable demands for large payments.

It is for your Lordship to make any other arrangement you may please; but, in the present low state of our finances, I cannot with propriety recommend the employment of an additional officer. Yet I feel it my duty to call your Lordship's attention to the case, and to request you will at some future period provide against this anomaly.....

Subsequently to the foregoing letter being drafted, and prior to the date which shows the time of its transmission, a most bloodthirsty murder has been reported at the Bay of Islands, the particulars of which shall form the subject of another despatch, which I have the honour to forward herewith.

I have, &c.,

W.HOBSON.

General Report. New Plymouth, 30th November, 1843.
SIR,—

I have little more to state than that the settlers have been busily employed on their farms and gardens, and that the prospects of the season remain very fair, although the proportion of rainy and squally weather has been greater than is usual in this month. Several mechanics, unable to obtain employment at their own trade, have become cultivators of land, and there is now scarcely any person in the settlement who is not in some way employed upon land.

Maori Immigration.

I am informed that a considerable number of Waikanae Natives intend to make the Taranaki District their future place of residence, and from other quarters immigration of Maoris may soon be expected. The Bishop of New Zealand (at present staying at my house) insists upon the Native reserves being let for the benefit of the aborigines, and not occupied by them. On behalf of the Company I protest against their occupation of other land than their "tenths," as I understand the blocks granted, or to be granted, to the Company are entirely the Company's property, with the exception of the Native and public reserves. The Native reserves would afford room enough for the occupation of the Natives now in the district, and a considerable surplus to be let; but the case would be altered if a large immigration from the North and South should take place. This is a matter which does not at present occasion much annoyance, but may be the source of future difficulty.

Manganese.

We have just discovered a considerable quantity of manganese in the town, close by the Carrington Road. I send a specimen, which you will oblige me by forwarding to the Directors, who may perhaps notify a large Cornish firm,—John Williams, junior, and Brothers, Scorrier House,—of the existence of this valuable article of commerce in New Zealand.

MEMORIAL from the INHABITANTS of NEW PLYMOUTH to Governor FITZROY.

Memorial of Settlers on Native Interference with their Lands. To His Excellency Captain ROBERT FITZROY, R.N., Governor of New Zealand.

The memorial of the inhabitants of the Settlement of New Plymouth, in the District of Taranaki, New Zealand, sheweth—

That your Excellency's memorialists, either under the purchase of land from the New Zealand Company, or as purchasers or cultivators of land from private parties, or dependent for employment on the cultivation of land, emigrated from England to this colony with a guarantee of title to the land so purchased, except as against the acts of Her Majesty's Government. That, shortly after the arrival of your Excellency's memorialists here, their right to such land, so bond fide purchased from the said Company or otherwise, was disputed by the aboriginal owners or alleged owners thereof, who evinced in the outset the usual feeble and indecisive opposition to civilized enterprise, but which not having unfortunately received any wholesome check, and, in addition, emboldened by an imaginary protection they presume to be exclusively given to them by Her Majesty's Government, they have not only menaced, and continue to menace, by threats of violence, the location of many settlers on their land, but have, in one instance, destroyed by fire the dwelling of a European in this settlement, and have, in addition, very recently assembled to the number of fifty, armed in different ways, to stop the New Zealand Company's servants in their prosecution of a road in this district. That your Excellency's memorialists beg most particularly to urge on your Excellency the important fact that the Natives extend their interference to Europeans in this district desirous of settling on uncultivated ground and, in many instances, heavily-timbered land, and also on fern land, which is never cultivated by the Natives, and that therefore there is not the extenuating circumstance of the soil having been in possession of, or in present or contemplated future cultivation by, the Native claimants. That your Excellency's memorialists have applied to Her Majesty's Representative in this settlement for assistance, to enable your memorialists to settle on their land, but, to their surprise, they were informed that such aid could not be afforded them. That your Excellency's memorialists, with all respect for and due deference to the acts of his late Excellency the Officer Administering the Government, beg to state that, since the issuing by him of a Proclamation, bearing date the 12th June, 1843, and having reference to the land disputes, the Natives have not only greatly increased their opposition to your Excellency's memorialists, but have also laid claim to, and in some instances seized on, land in the possession of and in cultivation by Europeans in this settlement. That the settlement of New Plymouth, from its nature and locality, is essentially agricultural, and that, as nearly the whole of your Excellency's memorialists rely on their land for subsistence, and eventual prosperity, the steady, unrestrained, and increasing opposition of the Natives to the cultivation of, and, in many instances, to the mere location of Europeans on the land in question is severely felt by your memorialists, whom a continuance of it will involve in inextricable ruin.

Your Excellency's memorialists, therefore, entirely resting their hopes and prospects of the future on their appeal to British protection, respectfully and earnestly request that your Excellency will devise speedy measures for the security and tranquillity of Her Majesty's subjects in this settlement from the aborigines of the soil, who, in most instances, not only deny the right of your memorialists to the land so purchased, but openly threaten infraction of their will with arson and other alarming crimes; endangering the perfect understanding which should be reciprocated by the two races, compromising the security of property, and even personal safety, and fatal to the interests of a people dependent on peaceful colonization, whose present and future interests are so closely interwoven with the land they are effectually forbidden to cultivate. And your Excellency's memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

JOHN GEORGE COOK, J.P.
Richard Chilman.
Josiah Flight. And 51 others.

New Plymouth,

18th September, 1843.

ANSWER of Governor FITZROY to the ADDRESS of the INHABITANTS of NEW. PLYMOUTH.

GENTLEMEN,—
Auckland, 14th March, 1844.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt on the 11th instant of your memorial, dated the 18th September, 1843, and return you my sincere thanks for your congratulations and kind expressions.

I am fully aware how vital a question is the settlement of claims to land, and I am most anxious to forward it as speedily as possible. I have desired Mr. Commissioner Spain to proceed from Wellington to New Plymouth, and I believe that he will be accompanied by the New Zealand Company's Principal Agent, to endeavour to arrange matters in the Taranaki District as satisfactorily as they have been arranged at Wellington.

I am aware of the opposition made by certain aboriginal natives of Taranaki to the progress of some of the settlers, but I have reason to fear that the asserted purchase of much land in that neighbourhood does not rest upon sure grounds, and that the Natives did not consent to our taking possession.

Recommending earnestly the exercise of forbearance, kindness, and justice towards the Natives; reminding you that the Government can never encourage or sanction any aggressive or unjust conduct; and assuring you of the utmost assistance and countenance that the Government has it in its power to show, while it has justice and good feeling on its side,

I have, &c.,

ROBERT FITZROY, Governor.
Messrs. J. G. Cooke, R. J. Flight Chilman, and other gentlemen residing at New Plymouth.

Reporting Probable Settlement of the New Zealand Company's Claims at Taranaki
SIR,—
Taranaki, 17th December 1844.

I do myself the honour to forward, for your information, the following report on the feelings evinced by the Natives of this district respecting their lands claimed by the New Zealand Company, and on other subjects connected therewith.

Taniwha and Waitara Districts.

First. The Natives of the Taniwha and Waitara who occupy the northern portion of the land claimed by the New Zealand Company have not shown at any time an inclination to dispose of the land in their neighbourhood; nor do they consider themselves empowered to negotiate for the same without the consent of several absentee chiefs residing at Kapiti, who own the greater portion of the land. They do not acknowledge the claims of the Company to any part of that district. They never received payment, and were not cognizant of a sale thereof, and will not be induced to suffer European settlers to establish themselves there.

Puketapu Tribe: Katatore.

Second. The Puketapu Tribe, residing at Mangaoraka and the Hua (over whom Katatore, with whose name you are now familiar, assumes chieftainship), a few of whom received a payment given by the Company for land, are desirous that the Europeans who have established themselves there should remain on the lands they have cultivated, but are prevented by the above Native, who will not allow or consent to any information being given as to land, or individual portions pointed out, fearing it might prejudice his assumed influence, his own claim being but small. From what I could learn, the determined hostility of this person towards the Europeans has arisen from a quarrel with one of the settlers. This, along with the damage done by their cattle to his plantations, and not being paid for his land, are the only obvious reasons for his conduct.

Ngamotu Tribe.

Third. Ngamotu: The claims of this tribe extend from the Waiwakaiho River on the north to the Sugarloaves on the south; a line of demarcation has been drawn by them from the northern to the southern boundary, which line is about two miles from the sea-beach. This they are willing to sell, stating that at a future period they would prefer selling their lands gradually in smaller portions, rather than in extensive blocks. Their ideas, and those of the Natives generally, of the value of land are extravagant, arising in a great measure from exaggerated statements made by Europeans, of the price they have paid for the lands they occupy, which tends so much to enhance and overrate in their minds the value of land that nothing but a desire which I am glad to observe they express to have the Europeans settled amongst them would induce them to accept of a moderate compensation.

Disputes.

The state of excitement under which you are aware the Natives have laboured owing to the unsettled state of the land question has given rise to many disputes among themselves, as well as with Europeans, which have been duly adjusted; and I think the settlement of those grievances, trifling as some of them appear in their origin, has caused that better feeling which I observe to be springing up between both races; the Natives having, in many instances, come forward to the assistance of Europeans, and where injury to the property of the latter has been sustained they have been the first to bring their own people, when aggressors, before me to have the matter settled.

Governor Fitzroy's Second Visit to New Plymouth, 8th November, 1844.—3,300 Acres of Ngamotu Land obtained for Out-settlers.

His Excellency the Governor, whose arrival had been anxiously looked for, paid his second visit to this settlement on the 8th November, when I laid before him such information as I could procure, agreeably to your letter of the 22nd August; in addition to which I placed before him maps of the settlement showing the extent of individual claims, both European and Native, as far as the claims of the latter could be obtained; also a statement of the feeling evinced by the Natives respecting their lands: after which His Excellency visited the neighbourhood of Mangaoraka and Waitara, accompanied by Messrs. Whiteley and Turton (Wesleyan Missionaries), Mr. Hamilton (Private Secretary), and myself, when he had an opportunity of conversing with the Natives, who still evinced no desire to allow the Europeans to remain. He also saw some of the settlers and the extent of their cultivations in that locality. As there had been no general disposition shown by the Natives to dispose of land, or encourage the settlement of Europeans, and as Katatore and his party were still persisting in requiring the removal of the settlers, the attention of His Excellency was turned to the land belonging to the Ngamotu Natives, on which the town is situated and the majority of the settlers established. A meeting was accordingly held of the Natives principally concerned, when, after some difficulty in obtaining the quantity of land which His Excellency was desirous of purchasing to enable him to place all the Europeans who occupy land in this settlement in quiet and indisputable possession, after much discussion he succeeded in obtaining their consent to sell about 3,300 acres, with an understanding that their cultivations be reserved. Messrs. Whiteley, Forsaith, myself, and a surveyor, with a party of the Natives, perambulated the boundaries of the block of land under treaty; after which a deed was prepared and signed by eighty-four Natives, being within fourteen of the whole number of adults in the tribe, a certified copy of which deed has been forwarded. I have since had staked out the lands and cultivations to be reserved, having given previous notice to the Resident Agent of the Company of the days on which I would be employed in doing so, that either he, or some, one on his behalf, might accompany me to see its extent and position in order to prevent any future misunderstandings. A map of the block of land purchased, showing these reserves, is now sent, and with my next despatch a tracing of the same will be transmitted to you.

Difficulties of Negotiation. Instance of Native Democracy. Moturoa's Position disputed. Division of Purchase Goods. Disturbance.

The principal difficulties to contend with in the negotiations with the Natives arose, in a great measure, from their elder men not having sufficient influence to direct and advise the younger and more unreasonable members of their tribes, the hereditary despotism of chieftainship having become more apparently extinct in this district than in any other portion of the Island, in consequence of the exterminating wars which have been so prevalent here, when many of the chiefs were taken captive, placing them on an equality with their followers, so that every one, young or old, has a voice in their deliberations, and which often causes dissatisfaction and annoyance. This was very apparently seen on one occasion in town. The day after His Excellency left several of the young and unpractised orators of the Puketapu Tribe had been waiting to exact a part of the payment from the people of Ngamotu for land they assumed a claim to in their district, and which occasioned a general dispute. Moturoa (the chief from Port Nicholson) at this time got up to assert his claim to some land at Omata (a considerable distance from the settlement), and, as much jealousy existed towards this chief, from his having arrived at a time when there was so great an excitement, and which caused him to be treated with much indifference and inhospitality,—the resident Natives stating that he had no right to come and assert his claim to land from which he had been so long absent, having possessed himself of other lands in Cook Straits, which he had sold to Europeans without consulting his relatives, who were left behind to keep possession of and defend lands which he had forsaken,—Moturoa, being a chief of considerable importance and unused to such insults from parties whom he did not consider his equals in rank or standing, was very indignant and sent word to his friends at Port Nicholson to acquaint them with the uncourteous treatment he had received, and, had it not been, for the dangerous illness of his wife, he would have left the place in disgust. Several of his and his wife's relatives formed themselves into a party to avenge the treatment he was receiving, arming themselves with whatever weapons were at hand. Fortunately no collision then took place, and after their angry feelings had partially subsided they all agreed to commence dividing the goods for their land, There being twenty-one distinct families in the Ngamotu Tribe, the goods were consequently divided into twenty-one equal lots, consisting of blankets, prints, and various articles, and in addition a calf or double-barrelled gun for each family. All had been going on with the greatest quietness and regularity, having had the assistance of the most influential among them in making the division, which was giving entire satisfaction, when unfortunately a woman took up from a parcel belonging to another family several articles, which she tried to conceal and run off with. When this was discovered it caused much indignation, and, from the state of excitement many of the Natives had been under, the example she had thus set was quickly followed by others, who made a rush for the calves and guns, being the most valuable property then at hand, the stronger party getting the greater number. It happened fortunately that some cash was still on hand to await the wants of those who did not receive a fair share, and which sum I have advised them to lay out in purchasing two breeding mares, and they are now in possession of them.

Mangaoraka Settlers dispossessed.

His Excellency whilst here having arranged that all such settlers who lived on disputed land, particularly at Mangaoraka, should remove (on their not being able to obtain the free consent of the Natives to remain) to the land he had purchased, having visited the Mangaoraka, and had several interviews with the Natives, I am sorry to observe no desire to allow the settlers to remain; consequently some of them have chosen land within the recent purchase.

Land seized by Puketapus. Omata. Puketapu Claim disputed by Taranaki tribes. Quarrel between Puketapu and Ngamotu. Hostilities imminent.

Since the disturbance to which I have alluded in a former part of this report, a considerable degree of mutual animosity and ill-feeling had been gaining ground amongst the Natives, in which the Puketapu Tribe bore the most conspicuous part, being dissatisfied at not receiving a greater share of the payment that had been given to the Ngamotu Tribe. Headed by Katatore, they took forcible possession of land to which they could only urge a claim from having at some early period conquered it. On this land they planted potatoes, felling all the trees, which aroused the anger and recollection of some old feuds of the Taranaki Tribe who claimed the land. They immediately collected from eighty to a hundred fighting men, with an intention to expel the intruders. Some of the Ngamotu Natives, who disapproved of the proceedings, acquainted me with what was going on, and requested my interference. I immediately proceeded to the place, calling, in my way, on Mr. Webster, Justice of the Peace, and the Rev. Mr. Turton, the Wesleyan Missionary, to accompany me to where the Natives were assembling, and who promptly rendered their assistance, Mr. Turton remaining behind with the Puketapu and those of the Ngamotu who had assembled, whilst Mr. Webster and myself proceeded to meet the Taranaki people, whom we found collected several miles down the coast, quite prepared for an engagement.. Having expressed great surprise to them that they should, at a period when Christianity was so far advanced, attempt to revive their old feuds, which the light of Christianity ought entirely to have obscured,—this, with all the persuasive and conciliatory arguments that I could adduce, had the effect of cooling their resentment, and they wished me to endeavour to settle the difference then existing between them, when, if the Puketapu men would agree to meet them without their arms, they would do the same, and talk the matter over, after which they would be desirous of disposing of their lands, then in dispute, to Europeans. Being satisfied that conciliatory measures had the desired effect, we returned to where Mr. Turton had stopped with the Natives, when we found that a violent altercation had arisen between the Puketapu and Ngamotu tribes, who were there collected to the number of 110. A scene of bloodshed was likely to have ensued, and there was a general rush for guns and other weapons. A few had already laid violent hands on each other, and others of the Puketapu Tribe, who had been well prepared with loaded guns, were standing ready to discharge them. Messrs. Turton and Webster and myself were successful in depriving some of the most exasperated of their guns and tomahawks, and prevailed on the Ngamotu Tribe, who were more unprepared and had been taken by surprise, to leave the place. They accordingly went off to a mile from thence with Mr. Turton, whilst I remained persuading the Puketapu Natives to give up their hostile intentions. Having returned to the settlement at a later hour that night, I apprised Captain King, the Police Magistrate, of what had taken place, when that gentleman accompanied me at an early hour the next morning to visit the contending parties, when we found no desire on the part of the Ngamotu Natives to resent the conduct of the Puketapus. We found the Puketapu Natives, along with whom was Moturoa, still determined to quarrel with either of the other tribes. Having seen the Taranaki Natives, who were still at the place where I had left them the previous evening, we prevailed upon them to return quietly to their homes, as the Puketapu people would not agree to their proposal. I am sorry to find, although, we are at present comparatively quiet, the bad feeling amongst the Natives has not as yet disappeared.

In conclusion, I am happy to observe that all differences between Europeans and the Natives, arising from trespasses of cattle, &c., are up to this time satisfactorily settled.

In fulfilment of His Excellency the Governor's desire that you should be furnished with a copy of the map of the block of land recently purchased from the Ngamotu Tribe, showing the extent and position of land reserved for the Natives, I herewith do myself the honour of enclosing the same. The Rev. Mr. Bolland, the clergyman of the Church of England resident here, being desirous of purchasing two acres of land reserved (No. 16 on the map), as it is a desirable site for a church and schoolhouse, I beg to inquire if there will be any objection to this proposal.

Report of Visit to Whanganui, and Negotiation of Peace between Te Heuheu and Waitotara Natives. Narrative of Past Transactions.

Taranaki, New Plymouth, 28th February, 1845.

I do myself the honour to furnish you with the following information, obtained during my recent visit to Whanganui, respecting the hostile movements of Heuheu, the principal chief of Taupo, who, with Taonui and Potomo, chiefs of Waikato, came with several of their followers to that settlement early in January last. Before I relate the various incidents which occurred, I would first direct your attention to the causes which principally influenced Heuheu's proceedings, who came by invitation of an old chief belonging to that place, named Turoa, a relative of his who had had a misunderstanding with some of the Whanganui Natives about the lands sold there to the New Zealand Company, and for which a sum of money, awarded by Mr. Spain, was in expectation of being paid. Turoa, fearing he would not get a large share of the payment, had written to Heuheu to come to his assistance, stating that a fair opportunity offered to surprise Ihupuku, the Waitotara pa, twenty miles north of Whanganui, inhabited by the Ngaraurus, and avenge the death of some of the Taupos who had been slain there during an engagement in which they were defeated.

Expedition of Te Seuheu to Waitotara in 1840.

Te Heuheu accordingly prepared his expedition with such secrecy, unusual with the New Zealander, that his relatives and particularly his eldest son (who he knew would be strongly opposed to it) were entirely unacquainted with its objects. Prior to the engagement above alluded to, the Natives of Taupo and those inhabiting the West Coast, from Taranaki to Waitotara, had very little intercourse, the latter tribes being quite unacquainted with any reasons for a hostile visit; and the only one assigned by the Taupos themselves was that, having been defeated by another party, they came to seek revenge by attacking them, supposing they were so much reduced by the Waikato wars as to be unable to offer any resistance.

Build a Pa at Patoka.

Accordingly, about the close of the year 1840 the Taupos came at night without giving any notice, and entering a small pa on the Waitotara River, in which a party belonging to the Ngarauru Tribe resided, they took some of the inhabitants; some were killed, whilst others escaped to Ihupuku, a few miles distant. The Taupos then built themselves a pa at Patoka, a hill within a quarter of a mile of Ihupuku. In the meantime messages were despatched from the latter place to Waimate and Taranaki to request the assistance of their friends, which was promptly rendered, and in a few days they were collected at Ihupuku, when they sent three persons as messengers of peace to their foe, expressing their unwillingness to fight and hoping they would depart. Those messengers were made prisoners, and one of them stripped of the European clothing in which he was clad.

Conflict at Ihupuku. Taupos defeated with Loss of a hundred Men, including the Chief Tauteka. Revenge taken by Te Heuheu, and Ihupuku burnt down.

During the night the people at Ihupuku collected materials, and before the following morning had erected a temporary encampment at the foot of the hill on which the Taupos had placed their pa. An armed party of their men, having gone to their plantations to procure food, were attacked by the Taupos, when one man was killed. A skirmish ensued, and the Taupos were driven back to their camp, the victors seating themselves in front of it. Many of them, however, supposing the affray ended, returned to their encampment. A few shook hands with the Taupos, and others were engaged taking prisoners (the shaking of hands is often spoken of by Heuheu as having been a most treacherous act). The Taupos, perceiving they were thus losing some of their people, resisted, and the conflict was renewed, when they lost about a hundred of their men, including their leading chief, Tauteka. Many were captured: these were afterwards put to death, and but a small party escaped to Taupo. Heuheu was not present on this occasion, but came a few months after with a party to seek satisfaction. The people of Ihupuku, being again taken by surprise, fell back to one of their pas named Tihoi, leaving behind them an old man and woman too feeble to travel, whom the Taupos killed, and burnt the pa, when Heuheu returned, threatening to pay that neighbourhood an annual visit till sufficient satisfaction had been obtained, which threats have kept the people along the coast in a perpetual state of fear and anxiety.

Assistance sought from Taranaki. Accompanies the Northern Tribes.

Messengers having been despatched to New Plymouth with the information that Heuheu had come a second time, and to request the assistance of their friends, I considered it necessary to go to Whanganui, and, accompanied by the William Bolland, proceeded towards that place. In my journey, the Natives who went from New Plymouth and other settlements along the coast behaved themselves in a very creditable manner, their principal leaders recommending they should be guided entirely by their Missionaries and Protector; and Christianity appeared to have so far spread its influence that they would not attempt an attack on their enemies, even if they were sure of being conquerors, which, from their overwhelming numbers (1,109) when assembled at Ihupuku, there could be little doubt of, the Taupos mustering only two hundred, and the greater number young and inexperienced in warfare.

Arrival at Ihupuku, 11th, January, 1845. Taupo Depredations.

We arrived at Ihupuku, where the Natives were assembling, on Saturday, the 11th January. On coming towards the pa we were loudly welcomed. We found the Rev. J. Skevington there, who informed us that Te Heuheu was, with his Waikato allies, encamped near the village of Whanganui, and had been visited several times by the Rev. R. Taylor, who, on inquiring the reason of his coming there, was told by Te Heuheu that he had come by invitation of his friend Turoa to settle the land question, and to get satisfaction for his dead. We also learned that several petty thefts had been committed on the Europeans, and that on their way to Whanganui they had carried off and destroyed three hundred pigs from a pa called Mangowai, a number of which were afterwards sold by them at unusually low prices; also that a white child of four years of age had been indecently exposed, which occasioned a report that several European females had been ill-used by them.

Arrive at Whanganui. Taonui, of Mokau. Bishop Selwyn arrives. Visit to the Taupos' Encampment.

On the 13th instant, the Rev. Messrs. Skevington, Turton, and myself went to Whanganui, Mr. Bolland having gone there previously. On arriving there we proceeded to the Taupo encampment, but found the greater number of them were absent plundering the potato-fields of the Mission Natives of Whanganui, who, by Mr. Taylor's advice, resisted their aggressions. Our arrival occasioned considerable sensation, and there were, anxious inquiries made of us as to the strength of the party who had assembled. One of the chiefs, Taonui, was evidently agitated, and expressed his regret at having come there. During the day his Lordship the Bishop arrived from Taupo. Shortly after his arrival he visited Heuheu, who appeared pleased at seeing him. He told him that his son had opposed his coming, as well as several of his friends, and from the persuasive conversation of the Bishop, for whom he professed much friendship, he appeared to have regretted his coming. On the following day a second visit was paid by the Bishop, the Rev. R. Taylor, and the Rev. Messrs. Bolland, Skevington, Turton, and myself. The Bishop had a short conversation with Ngawaka, one of the Waikato chiefs, who, presenting an empty pipe, begged for some tobacco. After talking to him some time unheeded, he replied that were he to fill his ears with tobacco he would probably listen to him. This was considered by the Natives around, who were all heathens, as a curse, and one slightly touched the Bishop's hat, who very properly took no notice of the insult. At this time I was with Heuheu, when his Lordship joined us, and expressed his disapprobation of their behaviour, and remarked that if his head was not sacred, as in accordance with their customs, still his being a chief ought to have gained him some respect.

Arrival of Major Richmond, Superintendent of Southern Division. His Meeting with Te Heuheu.

From the anxiety and alarm occasioned by so formidable a body of Natives collected so near the settlement, the Police Magistrate had taken the precaution of writing to his Honor Major Richmond, the Superintendent of the Southern Division, for protection, who came in the "Hazard," sloop of war, on the 15th instant. After landing he held a consultation with the Magistrates and proceeded to the Taupo encampment, where he told them, through Mr. Forsaith, that if they had only come to settle their own differences he would not have interfered with them otherwise than as a mediator; but, as they had been aggressors on the Europeans, it would be imperative on them to remove without delay, as such conduct could not be overlooked. Heuheu replied he was sorry injury had been suffered by the settlers; it had not been his wish; but as to his immediate removal it was a matter to be considered. On this we all left, after which there were fewer complaints.

In the meantime I had several interviews with the chiefs, some of whom were desirous of withdrawing themselves could they do so consistently with their ideas of honour. They accordingly proposed to go to Kai-iwi, which was half-way to Ihupuku, there to give vent to their feelings by firing off their guns, and then take their departure. They had not, however, mentioned definitely a day on which they would do so. On his Lordship and Mr. Taylor becoming acquainted with the determination of the Taupos to leave, it was thought a good opportunity for Mr. Taylor to fulfil a promise he had made to Heuheu on his first arrival, who had requested it, of a present if he left in peace; the Bishop also, noticing his superior behaviour to that of many of his followers, and from obligations he had been under to him when visiting his place, gave an additional present. Nor was this without its good effect, the presents not being confined to Heuheu alone, as his brother and the two Waikato chiefs received each a blanket, and was I believe the means of strengthening their resolution. During the distribution of the articles they wrote a note by Mr. Forsaith requesting his Honor Major Richmond, the Bishop, and all the other gentlemen who had exerted themselves in bringing about a reconciliation, to accompany them on the following day to Kai-iwi, that in the event of meeting with the other party they might assist in preventing any undue advantage being taken of them.

Hostile Natives proceed to Kai-iwi.

On our accompanying them to Kai-iwi we found that a small quantity of food had been piled up. This they took as a bad omen, there not being a sufficient quantity of food to satisfy them all. One of their tohungas or priests performed a superstitious ceremony over the food, which he condemned to be burnt. Having remained a short time with them we proceeded to Ihupuku, when Major Richmond directed Mr. Forsaith to communicate all that had been done in order to a peaceable arrangement, with which they were satisfied.

Interchange of Civilities, and Peace made.

The following morning we had a further meeting, when a few of the party had expressed an unwillingness to meet Heuheu on friendly terms. It was then considered that from the overwhelming numbers at this place it would be better to warn Heuheu from coming there, which having been done, he expressed himself highly pleased with such kind consideration. The people of Ihupuku much regretted that the meeting with Heuheu had been opposed: they accordingly wrote a very friendly letter, a copy of which is enclosed, and which I read to Heuheu at Kai-iwi, who returned the enclosed answer, which concluded peace between the tribes, who then dispersed themselves on their return to their homes.

Superintendent Richmond leaves in H.M.S.

"Hazard." Return to New Plymouth. Native Woman murdered by her Husband.

The "Hazard" heaving in sight, Major Richmond, the Bishop, and Mr. Forsaith took their departure also, and Heuheu, with his followers, went in a day or two afterwards, on a visit to Rauparaha, at Otaki. I remained at Whanganui till all had become perfectly quiet at that settlement. I then commenced my journey to New Plymouth. Before I had quite arrived I heard a report of the murder of a woman by her husband, a Native of Mokau, which had caused some alarm in the settlement. Several of the Mokau Natives, having heard that the Ngatiruanuis (the tribe to which the woman belonged) were likely to avenge her death, armed themselves in defence, coming to one of their stations this side of Mokau. I immediately proceeded to meet them, but the greater number had then departed, having heard it had been a false report. For the more detailed particulars of the case I would refer you to the evidence taken before the Police Magistrate, where you will find all particulars.

Te Heuheu's Return to Taupo.

I am glad that Heuheu's party has quietly returned to Taupo, having, before their arrival there, quarrelled with their Waikato allies about some canoes, which, I expect, will have the effect of preventing their assistance on a similar expedition.

Taupo.—Report of Visit.

At Taupo I met with a most friendly reception from Te Heuheu, when, after partaking of some food, he introduced me to various members of his family, and commenced talking about the Bay of Islands, of Mr. Shortland's visit, and of the pleasure he had in seeing him and hearing the news from the North, adding that he was always happy to be visited by respectable Europeans.

Conversation with Te Heuheu.

In speaking of Hone Heke, he said he considered him to be in the right; that he was asserting his freedom and that of his country; that pakehas (Europeans) had advised him to do what he had done; and that the British Government intended to deprive the New Zealanders of their lands, their liberty, and their rights as chieftains, but that they would be found a determined race of people, strong, well skilled in war, and not easily subdued. The English were an insatiable people, desirous of conquering all nations; that Napoleon Buonaparte would have been a match for them, had he not been taken by stratagem. The Americans also were too strong for us, but the Natives of Port Jackson had fallen victims to our encroachment, which, he feared, would ultimately be the fate of himself, and his people.

Iwikau.

Iwikau, his brother, urged the same arguments, saying that he was himself at the Bay of Islands when Captain Hobson first arrived; that the Ngapuhi Natives received His Excellency with suspicion, having been told that his object was to deprive them of their lands, which occasioned the movements of Government to be watched with jealousy and suspicion; and that the disasters that have happened since were the natural result. He had frequently advised other tribes not to encourage the settlement of any Europeans amongst them, excepting traders, who brought them blankets and tobacco in exchange for their productions, and never troubled them for land; but that he and his brother had, notwithstanding, been imposed upon by one who had taken several pigs from them without payment, for which he would have satisfaction from some European traveller passing that way. This was one reason why he had not more strenuously prohibited the robberies on the settlers at Whanganui. The chiefs along the coast might very properly have settled amongst them....

Whanganui River.

On passing down the River Whanganui I was struck with the denseness of the population on the northern banks, the inaccessible situations of many of their pas, only to be approached by ladders up the steep sides of precipices, which places, as fenced by Nature, have been their safeguard when attacked by the irresistible force of the Waikato Tribe, who failed in their attempts to subdue the inhabitants of those rugged wilds, when other parts of the Island were obliged to submit. This part of the river has been rarely visited by Europeans, which caused them to think the more of my coming to see them at a time when the Island was under such excitement. They manifested great anxiety to learn the intentions of the Waikato and Taupo tribes towards them, from whom they were in daily fear of an attack, more especially those towards the coast, who, their situation being more protected from the features of that part of the country, had greater reason to dread a hostile invasion. They were pleased to hear that Te Heuheu had preferred my interference to a visit from himself and all to the Mission-station at the entrance of the river, promised to refrain for the future from provoking the anger of the tribes in the interior, and through me wrote a friendly letter to Te Heuheu by the return of the canoe that carried me down the river.

Te Ihupuku.

In returning from Whanganui to New Plymouth, I visited Te Ihupuku, where there is always a large body of Natives. These I found agitated by various fears not only of an attack from Taupo, but also from a suspicion that the Government, after quelling the revolt in the North, might be inclined to seek satisfaction from the inhabitants of the other parts of the Island, agreeably to their own custom in such cases. I assured them from the latter they need have no apprehensions; and from the former their own conduct would be the best preventive, giving the message sent by Te Heuheu. At this they were greatly pleased, and appeared to think the presence of a young Waikato chief with me an earnest of good feeling towards them.

Two Murders committed on the West Coast.

The want of influential chiefs amongst this people is generally felt by themselves, as well as by their Missionaries and Protectors, being often led to commit serious acts that well-disposed chiefs would prevent, and which sometimes end in loss of life. I am sorry to state two instances of this nature have recently occurred at Iringahoe, near Waimate. The death of one was occasioned by his having killed some pigs that were destroying his kumara plantations, and the other in a quarrel between two young men about a Native female. These murders caused a considerable sensation, some of the Natives desiring that the murderers should be brought to New Plymouth to be punished according to English law, whilst others opposed it. I would here remark that the frequent visits of the Protector to those parts of the district less under the influence of chieftainship would prevent many such occurrences, by deciding the disputes which lead to them. The numbers of Natives returning from captivity, as well as from Cook Straits, also frequently occasion disputes. Some of these I was enabled to settle, which having done I returned to New Plymouth, where, I was glad to find, no serious difference had arisen during my absence.

DONALD MCLEAN, Sub-Protector of Aborigines, Western District.

Giving detailed Account of Journey to Taupo, Rotorua, &c.

SIR,—

New Plymouth, Taranaki, 26th January 1846.

I have now the honour, agreeably to the intimation expressed in my letter of the 2nd instant, to furnish you with a more detailed account of my journey to Taupo and Rotorua, as well as amongst the tribes of my district.

I commenced my journey on the 20th of October last, in consequence of the application from the Rev. R. Taylor and the chiefs of Whanganui, who were desirous that I should accompany that gentleman to the inland tribes, as mediators on their behalf, and endeavour to allay the excitement they were said to be under, which gave considerable alarm to the inhabitants of the West Coast, who feared another hostile incursion. In passing along the coast the Natives flocked towards me, making inquiries respecting a religious belief that had arisen amongst the Ngatiruanui Tribe, and extended towards those of Taranaki; some of whom asserted that they had seen the Almighty and His angels; one of them stating himself to be Jesus Christ; others, his disciples, were inviting their friends and acquaintances to come and worship the true God at their places. The further I proceeded the more I found of this fanatic delusion, but was glad to observe a majority opposed it, and were industriously pursuing their usual occupations.

Taranaki Coast and Whanganui, Upper Whanganui, and Taupo.

The country occupied by these tribes towards Whanganui is rich and fertile, producing most luxuriant grasses, intersected with rivers and beautiful lagoons, well suited for agriculture; or, if occupied by stock proprietors, would prove beneficial to them as well as to the Natives, by creating a desire amongst the latter to become owners of sheep and cattle, which will be in all probability the first property to confer a real benefit upon them. Nothing further of particular importance presented itself on my journey until I arrived at Whanganui, where I could perceive a very great improvement in the Natives within the last year, which is shown in some of their dwellings being built in imitation of the European style, and in an anxiety to be possessors of sheep and cattle, as well as fruit trees and seeds, which latter they receive from the Mission gardens and the settlers, who are mostly a respectable class of people, and interest themselves in their behalf. To the exertions of the Rev. Richard Taylor I should principally attribute the progress they are making, and the influence he has over the tribes of his district proves of the greatest benefit to the settlement generally.

Having remained some days at the Mission-station, and visited the Native villages in the vicinity, Mr. Taylor and I pursued our inland journey on the 5th of November by the Whanganui River, a distance of forty miles, on leaving which we travelled for three days across a forest country, with patches of available land, and occasionally some fine timber of the rimu and tawai. We next entered an open country, resembling much the plains of Bathurst, New South Wales. The soil is of a dark, sandy loam, covered with coarse grass (termed by the Natives poaka), which improves, towards Tongariro. We encamped at night on the banks of the Waitakaruru River, which flows through this extensive plain. In ascending towards the Taupo mountains, which were partially covered with snow we experienced a sudden change of climate and aspect, our path leading over volcanic ashes and lava, until our approach to Rotoaire, the first of the Taupo lakes, being the only settlement since we left the Whanganui River. Here the country again assumes a fertile appearance. The settlement is situated at the southern extremity of the lake from whence the Waikato River takes its source. We were much pleased with the chief personage of this place (mother-in-law to Heuheu), who had a dignified and graceful appearance. She received us kindly, and pressed our staying the night, not to pass without receiving some marks of her hospitality, which we gladly accepted, remaining there till the following day, and at night reached the settlement of Herekieke, a young chief of Taupo, who has been long meditating an attack upon Waitotara, to revenge the death of his father Tauteka, who was killed there. We had reason to suspect he still intended carrying his design into execution whenever an opportunity offered, though professing friendship, and diverting our attention to the various objects worthy of notice in his neighbourhood, one of which in particular, a spring of boiling water, excited our curiosity, which, at intervals of one or two minutes, gushed upwards with a foaming rage similar to the bursting of a whirlpool, accompanied by a simultaneous rumbling, as if the earth was about to open and swallow up the unwary spectator.

Native Excitement concerning the War at the North.

The following day we arrived at Te Rapa, and met with a friendly reception from the old chief Heuheu, who had guns fired on our approaching his place, and whom, on our arrival, we found seated on a large stone in front of his residence, surrounded by his tribe, who all bade us welcome, after which he led us to his house; and, on inquiring for some of his friends with whom we were acquainted, he entered into a long conversation respecting the war at the North, saying he considered Hone Heke (one of the least of the New Zealand chiefs in prowess) was more than a match for us; that Hongi, his relative, who went to see King George, advised Heke (when he was a little boy, attending on him during his last illness) to be friendly to Europeans, but should it happen that, after his death, a flagstaff were erected in New Zealand, he should be careful to prevent such erection on his own territories, as that would show a desire on the part of the Europeans to possess his lands and deprive the New Zealanders of their country. He said Taraia was a restless chief, and not unlikely to take part with Heke; that he was himself looking quietly on, but could not help having a friendly feeling towards him, as a man of the same colour and country as himself; that, indeed, all New Zealanders were of the same colour, a continuous race of chieftains, possessing spirited but yet obstinate minds that no fair means could subdue; that there was a strong inclination on the part of the tribes of Taupo and Rotorua for more fighting; that the Ngatipikiao, of the latter place, headed by their chiefs Rupe and Matangi, sent him a basket of cartridges as a token that they were disposed to attack the Ihupuku Pa and try the strength of the large number who collected there last year, as well as to be revenged for the death of some of their relatives killed at Patoka. These cartridges Heuheu fired off, to show that he was not disposed to use them for that purpose, his desire being for peace, and through him it had been preserved up to the present time. Still he could not suppress the warlike propensities of other tribes, who were only waiting the result of the procrastinated war at the North, which kept them all in commotion, and made it difficult to keep them in proper subjection. He had himself declined assistance against his former enemies along the West Coast, and was even sending his women amongst them unprotected (carrying presents to Te Rauparaha and the Ngatitoa) as an earnest of his forgiving disposition. The conduct of the Mission Natives had given him dissatisfaction, but he highly respected the European Missionaries, who were all very kind to him, and regretted the Bishop had not placed one at his settlement, not wishing that a preference should be given to inferior chiefs whilst he was neglected.

Assumption of Christian Natives.

Iwikau, his brother, who is generally averse to Europeans, and much feared, by Natives from his bold, determined character, was exceedingly friendly to both Mr. Taylor and myself; to the former gentleman he felt indebted for kindness shown him when at Whanganui, and said he would be glad to see him oftener at Taupo, when he would think of becoming a "Missionary" if it were not for the haughty bearing of some of the Mission Natives, who considered their religion placed them higher in rank than himself, which was a feeling he could not endure. Mr. Taylor told him that it was expected from all Christian Natives to behave with respect to their chiefs, and that he would lose nothing of his rank by becoming one. Iwikau seemed pleased at this, and here I could perceive the benefits that would result from the more frequent visits of such persons as Mr. Taylor. He also expressed himself grateful for my interference in the affair between him and the trader mentioned in my report of the 11th July, 1845, and said, had it not been settled, he was determined to have taken payment from some other white man, or have tried the strength of the English, as Heke was doing; but its being arranged satisfactorily, and his own life probably saved by my advising the opposite party to lay aside their firearms before he arrived at their place, led him to be more friendly to all Europeans.

On the 17th Mr. Taylor performed the marriage service between a European and a Native woman, after which we took our departure from Te Rapa, Heuheu accompanying us across the Lake in his canoe, which afforded me an opportunity of a conversation, when I pointed out to him the benefits likely to be conferred on the Natives of Taupo by having a European settlement at Whanganui, and how much it would be to his interest to urge the tribes over whom he had influence to behave well to them (the settlers), mentioning that Turoa, a chief of Whanganui, before his death strongly recommended peace to all his relatives, reminding them that they all originally came in the same canoe; that he had been a man for war, but he wished that now to die with him. I then explained to him the advantages of peace, and Mr. Taylor pointed out the evil consequences of war.

Heuheu replied that a grandson of Turoa had been to see him, but had not said a word about peaceable intentions, and if Turoa had expressed himself to him in the same terms when he had put the question to him twice at Whanganui, peace would long since have been restored as far as he was concerned; but, as regarded the settlers there, whatever might happen in other parts of the Island, he would defend them. He apparently apprehended, a rising against the Natives of the West Coast, and strongly recommended my visiting the chiefs of Rotorua, mentioning their names, and to advise Hikairo, the leading chief of that place, against doing so.

We landed at a large pa to the north of the Rapa, to which Heuheu and his tribe resorted in time of war. He showed us some of his houses, handsomely finished in the Native style, and neatly carved. Here we took our leave of the kind old chief, who urged us to visit him frequently, and appeared to regret our departure, Heuheu having given me the names of the several chiefs, of Rotorua that were disposed to attack Ihupuku, and informed me that the feeling was not confined to them alone, as Taraia and Te Horeta evinced a similar disposition.

Here would take the liberty of observing that there are appearances of excitement amongst the tribes around here, and a desire to return in a great measure to their old habits, when those innumerable feuds and grievances that have lain dormant for years will be revived, the consequences of which might seriously affect our English settlements, and which demand every exertion on the part of those interested in the peace and tranquillity of the Island being used. I therefore determined on seeing as many of the chiefs as I could, and accordingly visited Rotorua with Mr. Taylor. After leaving Heuheu the first place we came to was Waimarino, where we found a body of Church Natives more advanced in religious information than any we had met at Taupo, which arose, no doubt, from their chief being the teacher and zealous in performing his duties. The next pa, Motutere, presented quite a different appearance, the inhabitants being in a perfect state of heathenism, continually begging from ourselves or Natives; but during our short stay we succeeded in shaming them out of such conduct.

On the 18th we came to Orona, a small settlement, where we found some Natives who had separated from those of Motutere, and had built, with the assistance of Mr. Taylor's teacher, a large chapel for themselves. We found them friendly. From thence we continued our journey along the banks of the lake, some parts of which are very beautiful, especially a small village at its northern end, round which we observed several cultivations. In turning off on the road to Rotorua we came to Rotokawa, a picturesque lake about a mile long, the water of which is unfit for use, being strongly impregnated with sulphur. The country after leaving here presented a barren and dreary appearance until we arrived at the Waikato River, where we found a small settlement with twelve Church of England Natives. Takiri, the chief, who terms himself a "Missionary," was more inclined to annoy us by begging than to behave in accordance with the character he had assumed.

A short distance beyond this place the country presented the same barren appearance, nor did we meet with any change until we arrived at Pukaraka, where there is a level road running through some cultivations, and a fine clump of timber. From thence we got to a lake of Rotorua named Motutawa, with a small island in the centre, where a portion of the Ngatipikiao Tribe live. In the evening we arrived at the Rev. T. Chapman's, having visited Tarawera and all the pas that lay on our way to that place. Here we heard of the arrival of His Excellency Captain Grey as Governor of New Zealand. The scenery here is interesting and romantic, but the soil is poor and unproductive. Many vegetables which grow abundantly on a small island in the lake do not here come to perfection. In my interviews with the Natives around here I observed that the majority of them were desirous of relinquishing their warlike habits, and frequently mentioned the chief of Taupo as the grand mover of their actions. They said that some of their people were still restless, and only looking to the result of the northern war to see how far the Europeans could conquer their countrymen.

Accompanied by Mr. Chapman we visited Hikairo, that gentleman having to settle a difference respecting some goods stolen from Kororareka, in the possession of his Native teacher, for which he was suspended from his office for one month. In conversing with Hikairo, I informed him of Heuheu's friendly disposition, at which he seemed much pleased and gratified at his considering him the leading chief of Rotorua. He hoped that old grievances would be forgotten, and their newly-acquired religion only attended to. There were a few in his neighbourhood who, he said, wished for war, and he requested me to see them before we left that part of the country.

25th November.—The severity of the weather induced me to remain at Mr. Chapman's, and I was afforded an opportunity of seeing his Native infant school, with which and the progress the children attending it were making in learning English I was much pleased. There are frequently thirty scholars from four to eight years of age; many of the girls are kept at the Mission-house, where they are taught sewing and other useful employments.

As to Policy of Governor Grey.

On the 26th visited all the pas round Mr. Chapman's station, and had conversations with the Natives, who were under an impression that the new Governor was inclined for war, which, they said, would arouse the jealousy of every tribe in the country, who remained neutral until they saw the result of Heke's proceedings. I found among them some Natives who joined that chief in the Bay of Islands, and who were industriously circulating incorrect versions of the several engagements, and striving to excite the better-inclined against our cause. Having removed the impressions formed against His Excellency, and answered the arguments urged against the Europeans by the disaffected, I was returning to Mr. Chapman's when I fortunately met the chief of Maketu, Pukuatua, whom I found a sensible, well-disposed man. He told me he was instrumental in causing peace with the Tauranga Natives respecting Motuiti, an island on the East Coast that had been in dispute for years; that he wished to see the people of Taupo and the West Coast coming to the same terms, and all the tribes unanimous in keeping peace throughout the whole length and breadth of the land. The sentiments of this chief being so favourable, I wished him to convey them through me, by letter, to the Natives of my district, which he agreed to, a copy of which I enclose.

The next place we came to after leaving Mr. Chapman's was Ohinemutu Pa, the largest at Rotorua, where we stayed the night, and had a conversation with the chiefs there, who expressed themselves similarly to Hikairo and Pukuatua, stating they expected most of the Rotorua Natives would come on a friendly visit to the West Coast during the ensuing harvest. We were very much pleased with the young children we met at this place; most of them could repeat the English alphabet, several English words, and count from one to one hundred with ease. The delight they take in bathing in the warm springs, that are so numerous there, gives them a more cleanly and healthy appearance than at any other place we had visited.

On the 27th we commenced our journey homeward, passing, by several hot springs, and valleys of rich alluvial soil. About 1 o'clock we ascended the Arakari Pa, on the summit of a steep but pretty hill, that commanded an extensive view, giving a favourable impression of the whole district. At this place we met a few Natives of the Ngatituaru Tribe. One of the old men there told me that there was a favourable feeling springing up amongst the Natives towards Heke, and a belief that in the next engagement he would be joined by all the Ngapuhi tribes. He had sent messages to all the tribes on the sea-coast to prevent the residing of Europeans amongst them, and that he hoped Rauparaha would declare war against the English.

From the Arakari we came along under the Horohoro range of mountains, which is high and in some parts heavily wooded. At the northern extremity, near our encampment, we ascended the top of the range, but as the sun was then setting we were disappointed in not having the extensive view we anticipated. Here we planted some seeds of the Russian cranberry and bilberry, and descended to our encampment, near a lonely grove, by a small river running through the plain.

Our journey on the 28th was through a plain level country that our guide told us had been seldom traversed by Europeans. In the evening we passed some large rocks that at the distance looked like the remains of a Druidical building. Here the road breaks off to Taupo, Waikato, and Matamata.

Saturday, the 29th, we got to Arohina Pa, where we found some Natives, and remained there during Sunday.

1st December.—Mr. Taylor went to visit Mr. Morgan's Mission-station at Otawhao, whilst I continued journey direct, which enabled me to spend a day with Ngawaka, the chief of Rangitoto. The road to his place lay through a poor hilly country, covered with low stunted fern, with a few patches of timber, near which there are a few most untidy villages and cultivations occupied by the Ngatiraukawa Tribe, who do not appear to have any chief of consequence amongst them, and are considered less hospitable and friendly to travellers than any of the Waikato tribes that live in their vicinity. In the evening I got to Ngawaka's, a distance of thirty-five miles. This chief, who is very high in hereditary rank among the Waikatos, I found exceedingly kind and communicative, in his conversation evincing a general tone of friendship towards Europeans, and has frequently three or four living with him, supplying them with the best his place can afford without remuneration, and from the circumstances of the persons who thus partake of his hospitality it is not probable that he ever expected any. One of his sons, a fine young lad of thirteen years of age, he promises to send, along with Te Heuheu's son from Taupo, to live with me at Taranaki to learn English. The latter chief's son was on a visit to his place, and both of them came along with us a day's journey.

3rd December.—Mr. Taylor returned from Mr. Morgan's much pleased with his visit and the reception he received, the Natives showing him every mark of respect. I could perceive a great desire on the part of the Natives here to become owners of horses, and those who have already got them are, with Mr. Morgan's assistance, improving the roads through the interior very much by placing bridges across the deep creeks and streams, also cutting lines through the fern and bush.

On the 4th we came to Te Paripari (Taonui's place), where we pitched our tents and had a long conversation with that chief. He told us that a report had reached him that Taiaroa, the chief of the Southern Island, was desirous of becoming an imitator of Hone Heke; that Rauparaha had consented to join him, and intended making Wellington the first place of attack: but he assured us if this was true, which he himself doubted, that neither he nor Heuheu will join him in such attempt; that he would rather assist the Europeans, and, should Heke attempt to carry his threats into execution of cutting down the Auckland flagstaff, the Waikatos would turn out to put him down. Notwithstanding, he considered that Heke would be able to conquer the English, had they no Native assistance. Having explained to him the strength of the English, without depreciating Heke, I told him how well disposed the majority of the tribes in the interior were. There is a European living at this place who is married to the chief's daughter, and has a fine family of children by her. He cultivates some land there, and is establishing himself comfortably.

On the 5th we came to Whakatutumumu, a Wesleyan catechist's station, where we stopped and saw all the Natives, who I was glad to learn had made considerable improvement since my last visit. The following day we passed along the banks of the Mokau, a rich, fertile country, with few Natives. After a fatiguing walk of thirty-two miles across limestone ridges, we arrived at Motu Karamu, a German Mission-station. The chief Te Kuri, son of Taonui, came there to see us, and told us that the Natives of Waitara had cursed his father in a quarrel about some land. His father had not yet heard of it, but he expected he would be very indignant, as the Native who cursed him had been a prisoner of his; he would, however, advise his taking payment in satisfaction. The German establishment here consists of one clergyman and a practical farmer, sent out by their society to superintend a farming establishment connected with the Mission. Te Kuri has given them ten acres of land to commence with, in a good situation, with the River Mokau between them and the Native village, at which there are about eighty or a hundred inhabitants. There is a European emigrant living near, who found his way there with some traders from New Plymouth. He has a neat garden, with wheat and vegetables in abundance. The Natives are quickly imitating his mode of agriculture, and benefiting by the various kinds of seeds he introduces, as well as by his industrious habits. This part of the country is productive, and seldom visited by Europeans.

On the 8th we descended the Mokau River, accompanied by the chief's wife and a guide to see us safe over the rapids, the last of which is half-way down, near a vein of coal, which, in all probability, may ultimately become valuable, there being deep water for small coasters to get alongside of it to take in cargo. The land on the banks of the river is principally composed of a rich mould, with a considerable extent available for agriculture, and some portions wooded with a variety of useful timber. It is uninhabited, but there are indications of its having been at one period cultivated and settled, from remains of old tribes, and quantities of heavy timber fallen and now decayed, replaced by a shrubbery of koromiko and ngaio. The enclosed sketch will convey a more accurate idea of the extent and capabilities of this river, flowing through a country hitherto unexplored, or at least unnoticed, though not inferior to any other parts of the western district of this Island.

9th December.—Before leaving the Wesleyan Mission-station (Manutahi), near the entrance of the river, Waitara (one of the Mokau chiefs) came to make inquiries of me respecting his vessel, the "Hydra," lugger, for which he stated he had paid 120 pigs: understanding the Government had seized her for him, he was getting the pigs that were still due, ready to deliver, in hopes that she would soon be given up to him. I informed him that no time would be lost in representing his wishes to the Government.

We then left for Pukearuhi, and took advantage of the night tide, arriving there next morning. This station has been lately occupied by a Waikato chief, who claims it in right of his wife of the Ngatitama Tribe, who formerly inhabited that deserted tract of country, now residing at the Chatham Islands. The chief reminded me of having arranged a payment due to him by a European at New Plymouth, which caused his showing us a good deal of attention. He gave me considerable information respecting the Waikatos, some of whom he said were coming on a visit to Taranaki to see their relatives intermarried amongst that tribe. This place is agreeably situated about half-way from Mokau to New Plymouth, most convenient as a place of call for travellers, which I observed to the chief, who agreed to erect a house for that purpose. As an inducement, I promised him some tables and stools, with plants and seeds for a garden.

From thence we came to Waitara, arriving at New Plymouth late in the evening, and thus concluding a long journey of upwards of seven hundred miles, visiting and conversing with all the influential chiefs in our way, and, I trust, attaining the object for which it was undertaken.

No. 9. Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor GREY to Earl GREY.

Disposition of Natives to impose on Government and Settlers.

MY LORD,—

New Plymouth, N.Z., 4th March 1847.

In order to illustrate the disposition of the Natives now inhabiting this place to impose upon the Government and settlers, I think it right to state the following occurrence, which took place in an interview I had with a large body of them yesterday.

About twelve months since, the chief of a small body of Natives who inhabit a pa called "Waiwhetu Pa," a few miles from Wellington, came to me when I was arranging the land claims in that settlement, and complained that no adequate portion of land had been reserved for himself and his people. Upon inquiring of the Superintendent of the Southern Division whether he considered this complaint to be a just one, he informed me that he considered the interests of the inhabitants of this particular pa had been overlooked, and that the Government ought to procure more land for them.

The chief, a young man, was therefore directed to choose a section of land (containing about 125 acres) in the vicinity of the pa, and he was informed that I would then endeavour to purchase it for them from the owner (the Government at that time having no land in the vicinity of Port Nicholson which was applicable to the wants of these people). A section of land was accordingly selected by the Waiwhetu Natives, which I was informed was one of the finest in the district. The Government had to pay the sum of £350 for it, and it was then made over to these Natives, who were delighted with the unexpected liberality which had been shown to them, and admitted that their claims to land had been settled by a most just and liberal arrangement. Yesterday, however, at the interview I had with the Natives, a young Native got up and addressed me, requesting to be informed whether it was my intention, in the arrangement I was making here, to act so unjustly as to leave him and his people without lands or the means of subsistence. As the face of this young man was familiar to me, I stopped him until I had made inquiries about him, and found to my surprise that it was the young chief with whom so liberal an arrangement had been made at the Waiwhetu twelve months previously. It appeared that this chief, having acquired all he could from the Government at Port Nicholson, and finding that the land question at this place had been again opened up by my predecessor, had come on here (not expecting to be recognized) to try what he could obtain from the Government at New Plymouth. I at once taxed him, in the presence of the assembled Natives, with his ingratitude in adopting such a line of conduct towards me, after my having previously treated him so generously. He was evidently very much ashamed and abashed at the discovery I had made, and after a few moments' thought he publicly and candidly admitted that he had acted very wrongly; that my treatment of him had been most liberal and kind, and that he was much ashamed of what he had done. He then sat down again.

This instance—and there are many others of a worse nature—will show that if once the cupidity of the Natives is excited it is impossible to satisfy them: indeed, I have never seen the Native character under so bad a point of view as at Taranaki.

G. GREY.

No. 10. EXTRACT from LETTER of the SUPERINTENDENT of the SOUTHERN DIVISION to # Governor Sir GEORGE GREY, dated 26th July, 1847.

New Plymouth.—Re Migration of Waikanae Natives to Waitara. Wellington, 26th July 1847.

When I was up the coast last week, I was met at Waikanae by a large concourse of the Ngatiawa Tribe, including William King and many of the most influential chiefs, to whom I made known your Excellency's views relative to their meditated move to Taranaki, and was much gratified to find that no disposition existed on their part to act in opposition to them; their demeanour was quiet, respectful, and exhibited no symptom of annoyance with or resistance to the Government. William King stated that, although they were still bent upon going to that district, yet they repudiated the idea of doing so by stealth, or before consulting with the Governor and learning the time he would permit of their removal; adding that the Ngatiawa Tribe had always been friendly to the Europeans, and it was their desire to continue on the same amicable terms they have hitherto been. I, however, much incline to the opinion that the emigration, if it ever takes place, will be very partial, probably merely William King and his followers, as I found many indifferent and some altogether averse to leaving Waikanae. At Queen Charlotte Sound also it appears the principal chief, Ropata, has not yet given his consent, and in this neighbourhood the Ngatiawas are cultivating as usual, and now show no symptom of moving. William King, on behalf of those at Waikanae, urged strongly the purchase by Government of the district; and, when I mentioned that I did not think your Excellency contemplated making further purchases of land at present, they evinced the utmost anxiety (engendered no doubt by the scarcely concealed intention of the Ngatitooa Tribe to take possession of the land when they leave it) that a promise should be given, if the Government did not wish to obtain the district when the time was decided upon for their departure, that they should be the parties negotiated with, and to whom the purchase-money should be paid, whenever it was considered expedient to acquire the land.....

J. FLIGHT, Esq., and Others, New Plymouth, to His Excellency the GOVERNOR-IN-CHIEF.

On Depressed State of the Settlement.

SIR,—

New Plymouth, 18th July 1849.

The undersigned, landowners and settlers, beg most respectfully to bring under the notice of your Excellency the present depressed state of New Plymouth, which, we feel assured, it is only necessary to lay before you to induce your Excellency's adopting such measures as may tend to our relief.

On the departure of your Excellency from New Plymouth in March, 1848, we were, under the expectation that you would, within two or three months, return and complete by your presence the negotiations which had been commenced by your direction, namely, the purchasing from the Natives such portions of the land in this district awarded to the New Zealand Company by Mr. Spain as they were disposed from time to time to sell, it being, in the opinion of your Excellency, impracticable to enforce the award. Your Excellency will readily understand us when we say that we have been seriously disappointed in not seeing you for fifteen months, and, since your Excellency has been unable to revisit Taranaki, we expected that at least Mr. McLean, the officer appointed to negotiate with the Natives for the purchase of land, would be kept on the spot; and the more particularly that Wiremu Kingi and his large body of followers so soon after arrived in the district, in a way that rendered some understanding with them, for their future bearing towards the Government, indispensable; but that officer was ordered to Whanganui immediately following your Excellency's departure in March, 1848, and returned in July of that year, only again to be ordered to the southward, when in the midst of an important negotiation with the Natives of Waitara. Procrastination in the all-important question, the purchase of land, has increased among the Natives a habitual disregard for us and our promises, whilst its effect upon ourselves has been still more serious.

Two purchases of land were, it is true, by permission of your Excellency, made by the New Zealand Company's Agent in 1848, and ratified by Mr. McLean in that year, but the largest of them contains only 1,500 acres. The remaining land at the disposal of the Company is unsuited to our wants, being, for the most part, heavily timbered and without roads. The demand for additional land, more accessible and easy of cultivation, will be apparent to your Excellency, when we add that to the forest land we are driven for re-selection in all cases wherein our original choices are not included in the Crown purchases, as well as for upwards of 7,000 acres compensation land, recently awarded to resident purchasers.

We trust that the foregoing observations will induce your Excellency to speedily visit Taranaki, or at least to direct that Mr. McLean be kept among us; so that, henceforth, strenuous efforts may be made, both by the Government and the New Zealand Company, to repurchase lands in this district, and more particularly between Waiwakaiho (the boundary of Governor Fitzroy's block) and Waitara.

This accomplished, we shall have little doubt for the future. A settlement that has survived such an ordeal as New Plymouth, unsupported from without and opposed by various internal difficulties, may, under a new and vigorous policy, yet realize our hopes, and cause us to forget the anxiety and troubles we have for years experienced on its account.

We have, &c.,

Josiah Elight. G. Cutfield. John George Cooke. Thomas
King. Edwin Davy. Richd. Chilman. P. Wilson. John Hursthouse. Edward Dorset.

His Excellency the Governor in Chief, Auckland.

REPLY. The Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY, Auckland, to J. FLIGHT, Esq., New Plymouth.

GENTLEMEN,—

Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 30th August 1849.

In reply to your memorial, dated the 18th ultimo, praying that Government would purchase lands at Taranaki, and that "His Excellency would speedily visit Taranaki, or, at least, direct that Mr. McLean be kept among "you, I have the honour to inform you that it is with very great regret His Excellency has found himself prevented, by duties of the most pressing kind, from visiting New Plymouth so frequently as he would have desired. If no unforeseen event, however, occurs, the Governor will be able to visit Taranaki at a very early period in the summer, and will feel great pleasure in attending, as far as lies in his power, to the wants of the memorialists.

His Excellency will direct that Mr. McLean return to New Plymouth immediately the land purchases in which he is now engaged are completed, and for the future he will be kept at Taranaki as much as possible, but his services are found so valuable that it is feared it will yet be necessary to employ him occasionally in important negotiations in other parts of the colony.

I have, &c.,

ANDREW SINCLAIR. Colonial Secretary.
J. Flight and G. Cutfield, Esqs., and other gentlemen signing the memorial.

No. 12. His Honour the SUPERINTENDENT, Taranaki, to Mr. Commissioner McLEAN.

New Plymouth.—Further Acquisition of Land, expedient.

SIR,—

Superintendent's Office, New Plymouth, 7th February, 1854.

On your arrival in this province allow me to call your attention to the important nature of the questions now pending with the Natives, and on which depend the further acquisition of land for the European inhabitants of the province.

Many of these questions, if not the whole of them, Mr.—informs me, he is precluded from settling without your concurrence; some have been open for a considerable time, some are recent, and others are arising from the fact of your presence here. The confidence the Natives feel in one they know and respect so well as yourself, gives them every hope that you will effect satisfactory arrangements which will dismiss the agitation of the land question from their minds. The interest of the European population in the land question is equal to that of the Natives on the subject; and, as the views of the two races are concurrent, the present course of events, if assisted by yourself, will but further tend to increase the amity and unity of the two races, which, in this province, have never received any serious check. Besides the good effects which would accrue to the two races by the prolongation of your stay, I would suggest for your consideration that some of the best and oldest settlers have left and are leaving this province, from the limited quantity of land. At present the province practically extends only to the land acquired by the Crown from the aborigines, of about fifty square miles: your prolonged stay would render almost certain its extension to double that area by the happy termination of existing negotiations.

In conclusion, I am led to hope that the representations I make, and the assurances which the feeling of the Provincial Council and inhabitants of the province enable me to give you of every support and means which the officers or treasury of the province can place at your disposal, will have their weight on your consideration, and that your stay will be prolonged till, at any rate, some of the more important questions affecting land are settled.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES BROWN, Superintendent.
D. McLean, Esq., Chief
Commissioner.

No. 13. The RESIDENT MAGISTRATE, Taranaki, to Mr. Commissioner McLEAN.

Request of Mr. McLean to prolong his Stay in the Province.

SIR,—

Resident Magistrate's Office, New Plymouth, 16th February 1854.

I have the honour to draw your attention to the pressing wants of this settlement with regard to land, as more fully shown by certain statistics recently taken here. So far as they have been made, it appears that the number of acres in wheat is 525; in oats, 465; in barley, 44; in maize, 7: altogether, in grain crops, about 1,041. In potatoes there are, say, 268 acres; turnips and mangold wurtzel, 88; gardens, 120: together 476, which, with the former in grain, gives 1,517 acres; whilst the land in pasture extends over more than 4,500 acres, on which 170 horses, 1,800 head of horned cattle, and upwards of 11,600 sheep are kept by the European population; thus showing that, whilst the quantity of land under grain and other crops remains stationary, the pasturage, with the stock thereon, has within a few years more than quadrupled. The European population of this settlement now amounts to rather more than two thousand persons, showing a steady but not so rapid increase as might have been expected from the length of time it has been established. This arises from the want of land such as persons returning from the gold fields and others arriving from the Mother-country would select, if further blocks were open for their choice. It should be borne in mind that, with the exception of the Tataraimaka and Bell Blocks, both very limited in extent, no lands have been acquired for the settlement for many year's past. I would therefore urge the necessity of your continuing in this province as long as the interests of other districts which have claims on your services will permit, so that the negotiations already commenced for the purchase of land from the Natives may, if possible, be completed, and others set on foot, to be carried on during your absence.

I have, &c.,

JOSIAH FLIGHT, Resident Magistrate.
D. McLean, Esq., Land
Commissioner.

Loan Ordinance for Purchase of Native Lands disallowed.

SIR,—

Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 21st February, 1854.

I have had the honour to receive and lay before His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government your Honour's letter of the 7th instant, No. 1/132, enclosing a certified copy of an ordinance to authorize the raising of a loan for the purchase of Native lands within the Province of New Plymouth, to which you had assented on behalf of His Excellency.

In reply, I am instructed to intimate to your Honour that His Excellency regrets that he is under the necessity of disallowing the ordinance in question, which will be done immediately the necessary Proclamation has been prepared: but I am, at the same time, directed to state that any advance to the Province of New Plymouth for the purchase of land from the Natives, which may appear advisable on receiving the report of Mr. Commissioner McLean on the subject; will be made from funds available for the purpose.

I have, &c.,

ANDREW SINCLAIR, Colonial Secretary.
His Honour the Superintendent, Province of New Plymouth.

Approval of Mr. McLean's Detention at Taranaki.

SIR,—

Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 13th March 1854.

With reference to your letter of the 20th ultimo, reporting the causes of your detention at Taranaki, His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government has directed me to convey to you His Excellency's approval of your remaining there to adjust the conflicting claims to Native lands, and to facilitate their acquisition by the Crown—questions of such great importance to the interests of the Province of New Plymouth. His Excellency also approves of your employing the services of Mr. Carrington for the above-mentioned purpose.

Although the New Plymouth Land Ordinance has been disallowed, the Government is prepared, I am directed to add, to make advances from other sources for the purchase of such Native lands in that province as may be recommended by yourself.

I have, &c.,

ANDREW SINCLAIR, Colonial Secretary.
Donald McLean, Esq., Land
Commissioner.

Mr. Commissioner COOPER to the Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

As to sending Troops to New Plymouth.

SIR,—

Land Purchase Office, Taranaki, 8th July 1854.

I have the honour to transmit herewith a letter, which has been addressed to His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government by Hone Ropiha, a Government Assessor and one of the principal chiefs of this district, who prays that His Excellency will be pleased to direct that a garrison of troops should be quartered in New Plymouth.

Since the enclosed letter was placed in my hands I have taken some pains to ascertain, in as far as possible, the sentiments of the Natives upon the subject, and I find that the majority are anxious that troops should be sent here, and many of them are apprehensive that unless some such preventive step be taken the insolent and overbearing conduct of some of the aborigines will—especially as large numbers are expected to arrive here from Cook Straits in the course of this year—ere long attain such a height as to endanger the peace of the community. I think, therefore, that, in the event of the question of garrisoning this town being in contemplation, no anxiety need be entertained as to the effect of such a step upon the Native population. On the contrary, it is much wished for by the majority, and it is possible that the circumstances of the province may before long render it necessary, at least as a precautionary measure.

I have, &c.,

G. S. COOPER, District Commissioner.
The Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

Enclosure.HONE ROPIHA to Governor WYNYARD.

New Plymouth.—Requesting Troops to be sent.

FRIEND GOVERNOR WYNYARD,—

Te Purakau, 30th June.

Salutations to you! This is a word from me to you for some men. The thought is with you about sending them, as protectors for us, for the English and Maoris of this place, of New. Plymouth. Do you consent to some soldiers for us. This word is from me alone—from Hone Ropiha. If you say that on this request being made to you by a number you will accede to it, thereupon will the people assemble and write to you, that you may consent to some companions for us. Friend, Governor Wynyard, this is an old word of mine to Governor Fitzroy, but he did not agree to it. My second word was to Governor Grey; neither did he agree. Now it is for you to consent. It is right for me to write to you, because I carry out the laws, namely, your good customs. Mr. McLean and I urged this request upon those two who have returned to England, and Mr. Cooper will send this letter to you. All those good customs of yours are carefully observed by me. I shall never leave them off. I am like a rock which cannot be overwhelmed by waves. That is all. It is ended.

From HONE ROPIHA TE KEKEU, Waiwakaiho.
Governor Wynward.

New Plymouth.—As to the proposed Appointment of Native Agent.

SIR,—

Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 16th June 1857.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, dated 9th February last, enclosing copy of a letter addressed to yourself by the Provincial Secretary of New Plymouth upon the subject of the proposed appointment of Mr. R. Parris as a Native Agent for the Taranaki Province. With reference thereto, I am directed by His Excellency the Governor to inform you that the arrangement proposed by the Provincial Secretary is quite inadmissible, as the Governor cannot permit any provincial authorities to interfere in the purchase of land unless Her Majesty is pleased to alter her present instructions to him.

I have, &c.,

THOS. H. SMITH, Assistant Native Secretary (for Chief Commissioner).

H. Halse, Esq., District Commissioner, Taranaki.

MEMORIAL of the PROVINCIAL COUNCIL of NEW PLYMOUTH.

THE MEMORIAL of the Provincial Council of the Province of New Plymouth, in Council assembled, sheweth,—
To His Excellency Colonel THOMAS GORE BROWNE, C. B., Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Islands of New Zealand, and Vice-Admiral of the same.

That this, province is the only one which has not the advantage of a district suitable for cattle and sheep runs, and that the inhabitants are suffering great loss from the want of land for pasturage and grazing purposes for their increasing stock and flocks, and are compelled to sacrifice their breeding ewes, retarding the prosperity of the settlement, and occasioning universal discontent in consequence. That your memorialists have been given to understand that many of the most influential Natives in the districts south of Warea are quite prepared to lease large tracts of land of the most eligible description, which are unoccupied, and within the boundary of this province. Your memorialists respectfully submit to your Excellency that it is their opinion that the fact of leasing land from the Natives is not calculated to militate against the prospects of eventually purchasing them, and beg to refer your attention to the Districts of Wairarapa and Hawke's Bay, both of which were extensively occupied by Europeans previous to the purchase by Government. Your memorialists therefore humbly pray that your Excellency will take the long-unassisted state of this province in relation to the acquirement of land into your most serious consideration, and, by adopting some measure that will secure the acquisition of more land, either by purchasing the same or leasing it for a term of years, confer an important benefit on the settlement.

EDWARD L. HUMPHRIES, Speaker.

And your memorialists will ever pray, &c. New Plymouth,

August 1857.

Minute by the Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

Recommended that the Speaker be informed that the Government is most anxious to take advantage of any disposition on the part of the Natives in the Province of New Plymouth to part with lands; that, with this object, full instructions have been sent to Mr. Commissioner Parris, and money placed at his disposal; that if the land south of the Warea can be acquired by purchase it will afford the Government much satisfaction; but that the system of leasing lands would be attended with many disadvantages, even if done by the Government, prominent amongst which is the tendency which such a system would have to induce the Natives generally not to sell, but merely to lease lands for the future, which would naturally prevent their beneficial and peaceful occupation by Europeans, especially as to agricultural lands, and would render disputes from temporary and undetermined boundaries almost certain to occur. The memorialists are in error in supposing that the leases from the Natives in Wairarapa and Hawke's Bay Districts have not impeded sales: they have to a very great extent prevented the purchase of these lands, have much enhanced the price paid for what has been acquired there, and have led to much of the most valuable parts of these districts being still unpurchased.

New Plymouth.—Announcing Issue of Proclamation.

SIR,—

Government House, Auckland, 15th February, 1858.

The documents which I have the honour to forward to you with this despatch will give you full information of what has taken place at and in reference to New Plymouth since the date of my last despatch. ...

If the Natives were permitted to fight with each other on the farms of the settlers, the latter would, sooner or later, become entangled in the quarrel, and as soon as blood was shed war would be inevitable. I have therefore thought it necessary (an opinion in which my Executive Council concur) for the honour of Her Majesty's Government, and for the safety of the inhabitants, to issue a Proclamation declaring that all persons whosoever who shall unlawfully assemble with arms within the boundaries of the district described in the Schedule to the Proclamation will, without further notice, be treated as persons in arms against the Queen's authority, and active measures will be forthwith taken against them by Her Majesty's civil authorities and military forces. ...

No. 21. PETITION OF THE PROVINCIAL COUNCIL OF NEW PLYMOUTH relative to the Present Condition of the Native Inhabitants of that Province.

To the Honourable the House of Representatives of New Zealand, in Parliament assembled. The memorial of the Provincial Council of the Province of New Plymouth sheweth,—

That the settlement of New Plymouth was founded at the beginning of the year 1841 under the most favourable auspices; that it received by direct emigration from England more than a thousand settlers during the first two years of its existence; that during the last fifteen years it has continued to receive accessions of population from the Mother-country; and yet that the present inhabitants of the province of European birth and descent are fewer than two thousand five hundred, exclusive of the garrison. That the province contains by estimation 2,176,000-acres of land, 300,000 of which form a belt of the richest arable soil in the colony, extending along a coast-line of 115 miles, and that the remainder, which is covered with a dense forest, is equally fertile and contains but a small proportion of unavailable land. That of this comparatively large extent of available country the European inhabitants occupy only 11,000 acres of open land and 32,000 acres of forest, while a district of 20,000 acres of surveyed forest land remains unsold in the hands of the Provincial Government on account of the outlay required to bring it into cultivation, the superiority of the unoccupied open land in its vicinity, and the insecure state of the province.

The Native population of the province in the year 1856 appears by a census taken by the Assistant Native Secretary to have been only 1,782, and that this number has not since been increased. That the lands held by these 1,782 Natives are estimated to contain more than two millions of acres, one-seventh of which are immediately available for the plough, and the remainder are quite equal in value and position to the forest lands held by the settlers.

That the Natives, even when at peace with each other, are unable to occupy more than a very inconsiderable portion of the extensive country they inhabit; that they have no flocks of sheep, and their horses and cattle bear no proportion to the extent of country over which they range. That the possession of these waste lands entails on the Natives continual disputes, because the tribes that claim them are but the disorganized remains of a once numerous people, which have but recently returned from slavery and exile. That the discord, rivalry, and conflicting claims of this broken people, who have lost all respect for the authority of those who, under other circumstances, would have been their hereditary chiefs, have prevented them from acting in concert for the disposal of the lands they collectively claim, although many sections among them are most anxious to dispose of a species of property which is unproductive of any real benefit to them, and retards their progress in civilization.

That the Native feud, which has for the last four years been raging in Taranaki, originated in the attempt of Rawiri Waiawa, a Native Assessor and the principal chief of his tribe, to sell a piece of land to the Government which had been a cause of quarrel between himself and one of his relatives, Katatore, an inferior chief of the same tribe and a minor claimant who was unwilling that the land should be sold; and on Rawiri proceeding to mark out the boundary for the Government he and several of his followers were shot down by Katatore and his adherents. It was the first blood that had been shed among the Natives since the arrival of the settlers. The local authorities were paralysed, for they were too feeble to apprehend the murderers; but the surviving relatives and friends of Rawiri assembled in arms, and would have proceeded to immediate hostilities had they not been dissuaded from taking such a step by the resident Wesleyan Missionary, who assured them that British law would be enforced. Unhappily at this crisis His Excellency Colonel Wynyard, the Officer Administering the Government of the colony, was daily awaiting the arrival of a permanent Governor. The first General Assembly under the Constitution Act was in session, and the whole machinery of Government was in a state of transition. The Government of the day decided not to act, and despatched Mr. Commissioner McLean to inform the Natives that the murder was the result of a Native quarrel in which the Government could not interfere. The friends of Rawiri, burning for revenge and finding that the law was not to be enforced, expressed great indignation, because the interval which had elapsed had enabled Katatore to secure himself in a strong pa and to assemble around him a number of men hostile to the sale of land. The friendly Natives justly urged that they were friendly to the settlers, that they had conformed to our law in not taking revenge for their slain relatives, and that now they must either submit to the dictation of Katatore, or contest with him, unassisted by the Government, a cause in which the colonists and themselves were equally concerned. They urged, moreover, that such had been their reliance on the justice and power of the Government that they had ceased to reckon on their own strength, they had allowed their guns to rust, and possessed but a scanty store of powder and ball, while their opponents, who had always been hostile to British occupation, were well armed and munitioned, and their ultimate and least demand was that they should be supplied with the means of opposing their enemies.

While your memorialists admit that the critical position of the settlement in 1854 demanded the utmost circumspection on the part of the Government, they are nevertheless of opinion that the enforcement of the law against Katatore and his followers would have been as wise and prudent as it would have been a just act.

The history of the past four years has shown forcibly the lamentable results of a contrary policy. Relieved from all dread of the interference of Government, the wild passions of the Natives at once found vent. Three months after the murder of Rawiri some of the relatives of Ihaia te Kiri Kumara executed summary justice on a Ngatiruanui Native who had been guilty of adultery with Ihaia's wife, and this act was speedily followed by the invasion of Ihaia's land by three hundred men of that tribe. Ihaia's pa was stormed and taken after a stout resistance, and Ihaia and his surviving followers were only saved by a friendly diversion effected by the adherents of Rawiri. The Ngatiruanui, after their victory, visited Katatore, and remained in the vicinity of his pa some days, but, happily for the peace of the settlement, they decided on returning to their homes by the way they had come instead of marching through the town as they at one time contemplated. In the meantime the feud between the friendly Natives and Katatore hourly gathered strength. Arama Karaka, the brother of Rawiri, arrived from the South, and assembled in the Ninia Pa all the Natives in the vicinity who advocated the sale of land; while, Katatore was joined by Wiremu Kingi, and subsequently by the Ngatiruanui. It was at this time that the danger of the settlement became imminent, for the mass of the settlers were known to sympathize with the friendly Natives besieged in the Ninia Pa, and many of them were supplying the besieged with munitions of war. It was also at this time that, at the pressing instance of the settlers and the Provincial Government, a garrison was first stationed in Taranaki. By the arrival of the Ngatiruanui the friendly Natives besieged in the Ninia were reduced to severe straits, and Arama Karaka besought the aid of Ihaia, which was given on the condition that the latter should receive the land at Ikamoana as the reward of his services. Shortly after a battle took place between the Ngatiruanui on the one side, and the Ninia Natives and Ihaia on the other, which terminated in the defeat and retirement of the former.

After the departure of the Ngatiruanui, the belligerents, exhausted by a long continuance of hostilities, were anxious to terminate the feud, and in a short time peace was apparently established; but the elements of discord still existed, to burst forth again with renewed vigour. Ihaia held the land at Ikamoana (the price of his assistance to the Ninia people), but his claim was not assented to by Katatore, for the land in question was the common property of the tribe, and Katatore, himself a claimant, was at war with the majority when the cession was made. After the establishment of this hollow peace, Katatore, who for many years had maintained his influence by opposing the sale of land, suddenly changed his policy and became a most enthusiastic advocate on the other side. He at once took the foremost place in the consideration of the Government, while the men who had only remained consistent were thrust aside for the new man, and the negotiations for the purchase of land which ensued immediately on the establishment of peace depended mainly on the influence of Katatore. Ihaia still held the land at Ikamoana. His position had not been considered in the peace made by the Puketapu family, and his war flag still flew from the pa. Several of the Ninia people who had been adherents of Rawiri, and had fought side by side with Ihaia, now conceived the infamous project of destroying by the same blow Katatore, who had slain their relatives, and Ihaia, who had rescued them from imminent danger. They induced Ihaia to join with them in a conspiracy for the assassination of Katatore, and after the perpetration of the deed rose in arms against him. Ihaia, betrayed by his associates, maintained himself in his pa at Ikamoana for some time, but at length retreated to the home of his people at Waitara, where he was immediately besieged in the Karaka Pa by the followers of Katatore, by his associates in the murder, by Wiremu Kingi, and many of the Taranaki and Ngatiruanui Tribes. The number of his opponents may be rudely estimated at five hundred men, and the immediate supporters of Ihaia at about one hundred. Ihaia, in his hour of danger, besought the aid of his allies in Waikato and Upper Whanganui, and many bodies from those distant places have reached Waitara. Some of these people have merely endeavoured to effect a peace between the contending parties, in the interest of Ihaia; but Wiremu te Korowhiti, a Whanganui chief, is now involved in the feud by the death of a relative, who was shot by Ihaia's opponents. Ihaia has been recommended by his allies from Whanganui and Waikato to secure himself by a retreat to either of these countries, but he has refused to abandon his land. Emissaries from Potatau have likewise assailed him with importunities, but he has refused to listen to them, and says he will rely on the justice of the Government, and is supported by the sympathy of the settlers.

A short time since, when the position of Ihaia seemed desperate, and when his principal opponent, Wiremu Kingi, had evinced a determination to slaughter, without regard to sex or age, the inmates of the Karaka Pa, a memorial was addressed to His Excellency the Governor, praying him to rescue these unfortunate people. That memorial was responded to by the offer to remove Ihaia, with his followers, to the Chatham Islands, which was at once refused, for Ihaia could at any time have secured his safety by retreat to Waikato or Whanganui.

It cannot be a matter of wonder to your honourable House that your memorialists and the settlers have always evinced a deep interest for the welfare of those Natives who, by their efforts to sell land, have been plunged into a harassing war, and have been refused the assistance of the Government. Every act of the Government has hitherto been prejudicial to them, and had they not been upheld by the sympathy of the settlers they would in all probability have long since succumbed to the power and the arts of their opponents; and the two bodies, united by the common feeling of race, and embittered by the mutual losses they had sustained, would have sought satisfaction by despoiling the settlers.

Ihaia, the chief now besieged in the Karaka Pa, has always had most intimate relations with the settlers, and his friendly, honest character has even gained him a foremost place in their esteem. His claims to land at Waitara are considerable, and at the time when other Natives looked with no friendly eye on the progress of the colonists he made the most strenuous exertions to locate settlers at Waitara; but he failed to secure the co-operation of Sir George Grey's and subsequent Governments. If at any time Ihaia has evinced hostility to the wishes of the Government, he has always been actuated by a sincere desire to serve what he thought to be the cause of the settlers. So careful has he been to avoid injuring the settlers, that during the late contest at Ikamoana, when his adversaries posted themselves on a settler's farm, and surprised him and his followers as they passed along the road, he received their fire and refused to return it until he had retreated out of gunshot of the farm, and thereby lost one of his followers. Your memorialists have no wish to palliate the crime of which Ihaia has been guilty; but when they consider the circumstances which preceded the lawless act, and that it only took place after the Government had for years abandoned all control over the Natives, they cannot but express their opinion that the crime is in some measure shared by the more civilized race which compelled a rude people to return to their barbarous customs.

Wiremu Kingi, the most prominent of the besieging party, has never been in intimate association with the settlers. He has had commercial relations with them like other Natives, but he has always lived a purely Native life. He has always been a steady opponent of land sales. He arrived here, from his retreat at Waikanae, with about five hundred followers in 1848, in defiance of the threats of Sir George Grey, and located himself on the south bank of the Waitara, also in opposition to Sir George Grey's wishes. His influence with the Government has since enabled him to prevent the sale of Ihaia's land, and to his presence in Taranaki may fairly be attributed the difficulties and troubles of the past ten years. His power as a Maori chief would be impaired by the civilization of his followers and their emancipation from barbarous customs. His hatred towards Ihaia is therefore of a most malignant kind. He will listen to no accommodation, for his position will never be consolidated until he has annihilated his opponent and obtained possession of his lands. Many of Wiremu Kingi's adherents would willingly be freed from the peculiar influence he wields by his craft and subtlety, but as they find they cannot break the invisible chain which binds them, without involving themselves in greater anarchy, they still follow his banner as their only resource.

Your memorialists believe that the Government is sincerely anxious to reconcile the contending bodies of Natives and to restore permanent peace and prosperity to the province; that the Missionaries have exerted their influence to calm the rude passions of the men to whose spiritual welfare they have been devoted; that the settlers have sought by their interference to benefit the Natives, and to secure the cordial co-operation of the two races in developing the resources of Taranaki; but your memorialists believe that the efforts of all have not only been fruitless, but that they have increased the difficulties which environ the Natives. Conflicting advice, however well-intentioned, can but cause an increase of embarrassment, and the Natives listen now to one opinion and then to another, until they feel their utter helplessness more keenly. The honour of the Natives is deeply concerned in this feud; they wish to emerge from it without shame, and would hail with joy the intervention of a Government which could, by the voice of authority, compel them to make peace, and remove with a kindly hand the cause of difference.

That, while the Natives are retrograding from the non-existence of authority on the part of the Government, the European inhabitants, of whom your memorialists are the representatives, are also suffering from the evils of a partial administration of justice between the two races, arising from the same cause. In population the settlers considerably outnumber the Native inhabitants of the province. They have exhibited, during many years of severe trial, the most marked deference for law and order, and have relied, in all their difficulties, on the just claims they possess to the consideration of a Government composed of men of their own race and country. They have borne for many years all the costs of local improvements, unaided by the Natives. They have constructed roads and bridged rivers by local rates on land, to which the Natives have not contributed, even when holding property under grants from the Crown. They have striven to eradicate the Scotch thistle by the imposition of heavy penalties on members of their own race, and have expended considerable sums in extirpating the weed on Native lands. Their cattle are subject to the penalties of trespass if they graze on Native lauds, while the cattle of the Natives stray at will with impunity. The local Court strictly enforces the payment of debts from the settlers to the Natives, while the latter, when defendants, are free from its jurisdiction. And generally, in the relations of the two races, the colonists perform the duties necessitated by the wants of a civilized people, and the Natives share in the advantages derived from such performance.

That, notwithstanding the deep regard which the settlers of Taranaki naturally feel for the beautiful and fertile region which they have improved and adorned by the care and industry of many years, and their consequent disinclination to abandon it, a continual stream of emigration has nevertheless, for some years past, carried away to other parts of the colony and to Australia a large number of people who, had they been able to find room for their enterprise, would have remained to augment the resources of the province and the wealth of the colony. That the present settlers can no longer find within the province a field for future enterprise and the employment of their increasing families, and that they cannot now seek new homes in the other provinces without first abandoning the accumulated property of many years' toil.

That, in the opinion of your memorialists, the colonists of Taranaki have a special claim to the consideration of the Government and of their fellow-colonists, inasmuch as nearly the whole of the Natives now located in the neighbourhood of the settlement were a few years since dwelling in the present Provinces of Wellington and Nelson, and that the purchase of the lands held by Taranaki Natives by right of conquest at Waikanae and other places has been most prejudicial to New Plymouth, by accumulating in one spot the scattered remains of the tribes which had formerly resided here, and most advantageous to the provinces in which such purchased lands are situated.

That the difficulties under which both races are now labouring can only be removed by an entire change in the policy of the Government, which shall enforce law and order among the Natives and give support and aid to such of them as are willing to sell land.

That the system heretofore adopted by the Government, of requiring the assent of every claimant to any piece of land before a purchase is made, has been found to operate most injuriously in this province, on account of the conflicting interests of the claimants; and that the sufferers by this system are invariably the men who are most advanced in civilization, and who possess the largest share in the common property. Your memorialists are therefore of opinion that such of the Natives as are willing to dispose of their proportion of any common land to the Government should be permitted to do so, whether such Natives form a majority or only a large minority of the claimants, and that the Government should compel an equitable division of such common land among the respective claimants on the petition of a certain proportion of them.

That, in the opinion of your memorialists, no danger of war between the Government and the Natives need be apprehended from the prosecution of a vigorous policy, inasmuch, as a large proportion of the Natives themselves would cordially support it, and the remainder would, from the smallness of their numbers, be incapable of offering any resistance.

Your memorialists therefore pray that your honourable House will be pleased to institute an inquiry into the present condition of the Native inhabitants of this province, and into the causes which have led to the present difficulties; with a view to establish peace, order, and good government among the Natives, and to encourage and assist them to dispose of the common lands they now hold, to the injury alike of themselves, the settlers, and the colony at large. And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

No. 22. COPY OF A DESPATCH from Governor
Gore Browne, C.B., to the Right Hon. Lord M.
P. STANLEY

My Lord,—

Government House, Auckland, New Zealand, 9th June, 1858.

I have the honour to enclose a printed copy of a memorial from the inhabitants of New Plymouth, addressed to the General Assembly, a report on it by the Native Secretary, and the report of a debate in the House of Representatives on the same subject. The two reports contain such full information that I need trouble you with but few remarks from myself. I will, however, endeavour to give a précis of the enclosures as well as I am able.

- The memorial commences by describing the extent of the Province of New Plymouth, and complains that 1,782 Natives hold two millions of acres, while the Europeans (2,488 in number) occupy only 11,000 acres. It will be seen by the Native Secretary's report that the number of Natives is incorrectly estimated; nor is it easy to draw any special conclusion from the quantity of land in their possession, as it is well known that the Maoris still hold seventeen or eighteen millions of acres in the Northern Island. Every proper exertion is, and has always been, made to acquire lands not required for the actual support of the Native race, particularly at New Plymouth, for which purpose money has been left for some time in the Treasury at that place.
- After relating in detail the circumstances connected with the murder of Rawiri in 1854, the memorialists express their opinion that the enforcement of the law against his murderers would have been wise and prudent. On this head I need make no remark, as I had not then arrived in the colony, but I may observe that, in abstaining from interference, Colonel Wynyard did but continue a policy never yet departed from.
- In the next paragraph they speak of the lamentable result of the policy pursued during the last four years; but I am not aware of a single instance in which a European has been interfered with, without his obtaining prompt redress.
- Memorialists complain that Katatore, a murderer, "took the foremost place in the consideration of the Government, while the men who remained consistent were thrust aside." It is to be regretted that Katatore was received with honour by the Provincial Government, who did so without seeking the consent of the Colonial Government, and without my approval. The Colonial Government has always maintained a strict neutrality.
- After describing the assassination of Katatore by Ihaia, and the helpless condition to which the latter was reduced by his opponent, W. King, they proceed to say that a memorial was addressed to me, praying me to rescue Ihaia and his people, and that it was "responded to by the offer to remove Ihaia and his followers to the Chatham Islands, which was at once refused, for Ihaia could at any time have secured his safety by retreat." On this I must observe that it was only on an assurance that Ihaia could not effect a retreat that I consented to interfere at all, and that I only did so in the hope of preventing a massacre of helpless followers (including women and children) which, I was assured in a memorial from the settlers, was otherwise inevitable. (Vide Enclosure No. 6 in my Despatch No. 23, of 6th April last.)
- Memorialists proceed to say that the settlers have always "evinced a deep interest for the welfare of those Natives who, by their efforts to sell land, have been plunged in a harassing war, and have been refused the assistance of the Government." This is the gravamen of the complaint; and I therefore state distinctly that I am most anxious to acquire land at New Plymouth, and that I foresee there can be no permanent peace until the Native title is extinguished (with exception of the necessary reserves) over all the lands between the town and the Waitara River. To obtain this desirable object, I will, however, never permit land to be taken without the consent of those to whom it belongs; nor will I interfere "to compel an equitable division of common land among the respective claimants," as desired by the memorialists in one of the concluding paragraphs of the petition. This decision is not less one of expediency than of justice, for the whole of the Maori race maintain the right of the minority to prevent the sale of land, held in common, with the utmost jealousy. An example of this on a large scale may be seen in the Waikato district, where the election of a King is proposed, and defended on the plea that a King is necessary to give strength and assurance to the League established to prevent the sale of land to the Colonial Government. To accede to the request of the memorialists in this particular would, therefore, attract the attention and awaken the suspicions of the Maoris, not only at New Plymouth, but throughout the colony, and would, in all probability, produce a general commotion. W. King has no sort of influence with me or the Colonial Government: we believe him to be an infamous character; but I will not permit the purchase of land over which he has any right without his consent.
- The memorial goes on to say, "Conflicting advice, however well-intentioned, can but cause an increase of embarrassment, and the Natives listen now to one opinion and then to another, until they feel their utter helplessness more keenly." These remarks corroborate what I stated in my Despatch No. 38, of the 17th May; I entirely concur in them, and have no hesitation in saying that the interference of unauthorized individuals, and the comments and advice made and given by the newspapers, paralyse the efforts of the Government, and may any day mislead or irritate the Natives into aggressions, the necessary repression of which will be the commencement of a serious war. To prevent such indiscretion in a free country is, of course, impossible; but an admission of the fact by the Speaker, on behalf of the Provincial Council, is worthy of remark.

- The memorialists complain of emigration from their province, and consider that they "have a special claim" to consideration "inasmuch as nearly the whole of the Natives now located in the neighbourhood of the settlement were a few years since dwelling in the present Provinces of Wellington and Nelson; and that the purchase of the lands held by Taranaki Natives by right of conquest at Waikanae and other places has been most prejudicial to New Plymouth." This statement is thoroughly incorrect, and Waikanae has not been purchased; but for the particulars I must refer you to the Native Secretary's report.
- Memorialists desire an entire change in the policy of the Government, and wish "to enforce law and order among the Natives, and give support and aid to such of them as are willing to sell land." As soon as this feud is entirely settled, I purpose (unless reasons of which I am not at present aware should prevent it) to declare the Queen's law to be in force as far as the extreme boundary of the land over which the Native title is extinct. This boundary will include some lands belonging to Natives, but I apprehend no objection on their part, and am only withheld from issuing a Proclamation to that effect now, because the present time is not opportune. Were I to do so now, either of the disputants who found himself in danger would, as a matter of course, come within the proclaimed boundary and demand protection as a right: the Government would then find that it had incurred a heavy responsibility, and that a duty was imposed upon it which it might not be easy to perform. I therefore hope to maintain a strict neutrality until this feud is at an end, and then to enforce obedience absolutely on those who dwell within the English boundary.
- As it has been fully admitted in the House of Representatives that no inquiry is necessary, and that the Government is in possession of information not coloured by local or party feelings, I need make no remarks on the final paragraphs of the memorial.
- In the enclosed report of the debate in the House of Representatives, I beg to call your attention to the speech of Mr. Ollivier, a member of the Province of Canterbury.

No. 23. COPY OF A REPORT BY THE NATIVE SECRETARY ON THE MEMORIAL OF THE PROVINCIAL COUNCIL OF TARANAKI.

The memorial of the Provincial Council of Taranaki contains so much of the early history of the settlement, and of the Native feuds that have arisen there, that I need not advert to these points, inasmuch as they are already well known to the Government. The Native population within the province is altogether under-estimated, and the return of 1,782 made by the Assistant Native Secretary can only apply to a portion of the province: the Native population of the whole province is certainly not less than 3,000 souls. It is true that the land held by these Natives is much in excess of their requirements: so conscious have the Government been of this fact that every exertion has been used to acquire by purchase from the Natives the cession of their surplus lands at much higher rates than have been offered for Native land in any other province. A large sum of money available for this purpose is now deposited at New Plymouth. An officer strongly recommended by the Provincial Government has been appointed to conduct negotiations with the Natives, and it has been found that any more vigorous action than has been already taken for the acquisition of land could only lead to the creation of fresh feuds among the Natives, in which the settlers and the Government might become seriously involved. Moreover, it is clearly the duty of the Government to abstain from acquiring land when the consequence of its acquisition is in any way likely to bring about serious differences among the Natives. The strict observance of this rule has been enjoined by His Excellency on all the officers of the Land Purchase Department. The memorial states that "Conflicting advice, however well-intentioned, can but cause an increase of embarrassment:" this is so perfectly true that it is to be hoped that means will be taken to prevent such advice being tendered in future; such interference has done more to retard the purchase of land at New Plymouth than can be easily imagined. The memorial sets forth that "the colonists of Taranaki have a special claim to the consideration of the Government and of their fellow-colonists, inasmuch as nearly the whole of the Natives now located in the neighbourhood of the settlement were a few years since dwelling in the present Provinces of Wellington and Nelson, and that the purchase of the lands held by Taranaki Natives by right of conquest at Waikanae and other places has been most prejudicial to New Plymouth, by accumulating in one spot the scattered remains of the tribes which had formerly resided here, and most advantageous to the provinces in which such purchased lands are situated." The facts of the case altogether disprove the foregoing assertions, for, in the first place, Waikanae is not yet purchased, and, although it has been repeatedly offered by William King and other Natives, the Government declined to purchase, from a fear that its acquisition would drive the Natives to Taranaki.

- The migration of Natives to Taranaki commenced years before any extensive purchases were made from the Natives at the South.
- Taringa Kuri and his one hundred followers were prevented from going to Taranaki three years ago, by a purchase of land made for him at an expense of £400, lent to him for the purpose of inducing him to remain at the Hutt instead of going to Taranaki. With the same object in view, Sir George Grey purchased land for the Waiwhetu Natives; and at Nelson the following paragraph from my report on the final cession of the Native lands of that province to the Crown in 1856 will show that the interests of Taranaki were not sacrificed or overlooked: "28. The unsettled state of the Ngatiawa Tribe, and the disposition manifested by them to return to their former possessions at Taranaki, where their presence could only increase the troubles that already beset the land question in that province, rendered the present negotiation with them one of no small difficulty and delicacy,—which might, if in any way mismanaged, affect the general tranquillity of the country. I was induced therefore to agree to reserves of considerable extent being assigned to them in the various bays they were then inhabiting, with which they appeared to be fully satisfied."

I do not know what change of policy the memorialists desire: it is very evident that nothing short of strong coercive measures would effect an immediate solution of the present difficulties at Taranaki, and it is not easy to discover on what principle such measures should be resorted to in this instance, unless the Government is prepared to apply them to every similar case that may arise throughout the colony.

With reference to the prayer of the petition that His Excellency should be pleased to cause an inquiry to be instituted into the present condition of the Native inhabitants of this province, and to the causes which have led to the present difficulties, with a view to establish peace, &c., I am not aware, from the full and complete information that the Government now possess, that such an inquiry would lead to any good result. On the contrary it would raise false expectations on the part of some, doubt and apprehension with others. A succession of such inquiries among a barbarous people will only exhibit weakness on the part of the Government, if not followed by measures which it may not be prudent to undertake.

LYTTON to Governor Gore Browne, C.B.

Sir,—
Downing Street, 20th November, 1858.

I have received your despatch of number and date as per margin, enclosing a memorial addressed by the inhabitants of New Plymouth to the General Assembly, together with a report on that address by the Native Secretary, and a further report of a debate in the House of Representatives.

There are many questions of policy to be pursued by your Government to the Natives, which are raised in these papers, and for many years to come they will be attended with difficulties of no ordinary kind; but I rely with confidence upon your judgment, and I concur in the views which you have on this, as on several previous occasions, expressed.

A straightforward and equitable course of proceeding towards the Natives, especially in those negotiations which relate to the purchase or cession of land, is not only a matter of duty, but will, I am persuaded, be found to be most consistent with the interest of the colonists and the general peace and welfare of the colony.

No. 25. EXTRACTS FROM GOVERNOR BROWNE'S SPEECH TO THE NATIVES at New Plymouth in March, 1859.

....The Governor wished them to understand that the Queen regards equally her subjects; that all her Governors have had and would have the same instructions, viz., to do their utmost to promote the welfare of her subjects without distinction of race. The Missionaries had imparted to them the blessings of Christianity, and translated the Bible for their use. It was not in the power of man to confer any other gift which would bear comparison with that of the Bible; but, out of regard for the Natives, His Excellency had caused an abstract of English law to be translated into Maori. He had no wish to enforce this law; on the contrary, it would only be put in force in those districts where the people are wise enough to desire it, and prepared to carry it into effect themselves. Some tribes in the North had already desired to have English law, and a Magistrate had been appointed to instruct them how to put it into practice; they were now engaged in doing so, with every prospect of becoming a peaceful and prosperous people, and uniting themselves with the pakeha. This tribe is the Ngapuhi. The Governor had but two subjects on which he desired to speak, particularly to the tribes living near Taranaki, and they were: First, in reference to criminal offences; second, in reference to land. He wished these subjects to be considered separately, and as having no sort of reference to each other. The tribes in the vicinity of Taranaki have greater advantages than most others, as they are much intermixed with the pakeha, and ought to profit by their intercourse with them. If they chose to live peaceably and cultivate their lands they would grow rich and multiply, instead of which they were constantly at war with each other, and their numbers were decreasing. Their disputes were almost always about matters of little or no importance, or about land which was not worth quarrelling for. Had the Governor been in New Zealand when Katatore slew Rawiri, he would have had him arrested and brought before the Judge, and, if the Judge had sentenced him to be hanged, he would have caused him to be hanged; that he had not thought proper to arrest Ihaia, because, though the murders to which he was a party were horrible and disgraceful, yet they admitted of some extenuation, inasmuch as they were committed in retribution for the murder of Rawiri. All this, however, now belongs to the past; but, for the future, he had determined that every man (whether he be Maori or pakeha) who may commit any violence or outrage within the European boundaries shall be arrested and taken before the Judge, and the sentence of the Judge, whatever it may be, shall be carried into effect. He was determined that the peace of the settlers should no longer be disturbed by evil-doers; and those Maoris who are not content to live in peace among the pakehas had better go elsewhere. In reference to the second subject, the Governor thought the Maoris would be wise to sell the land they cannot use themselves, as it would make what they could use more valuable than the whole; but he never would consent to buy land without an undisputed title. He would not permit any one to interfere in the sale of land unless he owned part of it; and, on the other hand, he would buy no man's land without his consent....

May it please your Excellency,—The undersigned, settlers of the Province of Taranaki, are desirous that your Excellency should not take your departure from New Plymouth without an expression of their satisfaction to have had the advantage of a personal visit from your Excellency. They are of opinion that such a visit must have tended to bring before you more vividly than could be done by the best official documents the actual position of the settlement, and the real amount and character of their difficulties and discouragements. They beg respectfully to thank your Excellency for your prompt assent to their request for the early return to Taranaki of Mr. Commissioner McLean; for your expressed anxiety to promote the further acquisition of land from the Natives, and for the efforts now being made to that end; and they will rely with confidence on your Excellency's assurance that no pains shall be wanting to attain an object so vitally important to them. They trust that the sustained endeavours of the Native Land Purchase Department may lead to the desired results, and to the benefit alike of the European and Maori races; that Taranaki may cease to be a source of trouble and anxiety to the Government, and that she may be rendered a contented and prosperous province under your Excellency's administration. They beg to express their sincere hopes for your Excellency's speedy restoration to health.

New Plymouth.—Martial Law to be proclaimed, if necessary, &C.
Sir,—
Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 26th January, 1860.

Referring to instructions which you will receive from the Officer Commanding the Troops in New Zealand, relative to the employment of a military force, if necessary, in maintaining occupation, on behalf of the Crown, of a block of land at the mouth of the Waitara, purchased by the Crown from Te Teira, and ordered to be surveyed, I have the honour to forward to you herewith a Proclamation by His Excellency the Governor, proclaiming that martial law will be exercised throughout the Province of Taranaki from the date of the publication in that province of the said Proclamation. I also transmit an instrument appointing you to be the Governor's deputy, for the purpose of directing the Officer Commanding the Militia in the District of Taranaki to draw out for actual service the Taranaki Militia, or such number thereof as you may judge necessary.

It will be obvious to you that this Proclamation should only be published by you, and the operative effect given to the other instrument, under such circumstances as in your opinion render it impossible to carry out the wishes of the Government without resorting to the powers conferred by these documents.

(1.) ADDRESS OF THE CANTERBURY PROVINCIAL COUNCIL, now in Session. *Offering Aid to Taranaki Settlers during the Native Rebellion.

To His Excellency Colonel Thomas Gore Browne, C.B., &c., Governor of New Zealand.

May it please your Excellency,—The members of the Provincial Council of Canterbury, assembled in Council, desire to express their deep sympathy in the trying circumstances surrounding your Excellency by reason of the violence and insubordination of a portion of the Maori population of the North Island. While they express their thankfulness to the Almighty for having cast their lot in a portion of the colony in which they are spared the infliction of the personal consequences of a like revolt, they feel that their provincial prosperity depends in a great measure upon the maintenance of peace and good order in the colony at large. Entirely confiding in your Excellency's judgment, and in your determination to uphold the dignity of the Crown, the members of this Council desire to assure your Excellency of their willingness to co-operate with you to the utmost of their ability in the assertion of that authority, and to bear their share of the burden which under unlooked-for and adverse results may possibly fall upon their fellow-colonists in the North; and, while they do not doubt that many of the young men of this province are ready to place themselves at your Excellency's disposal in case of need, they believe that some portion of the difficulty you experience may be removed by a proposal on the part of this province to afford an asylum to those of the out-settlers in the Province of Taranaki who, driven from their homes, may be exposed to inconveniences and sufferings in consequence of being forced into the town for shelter, and which its limited accommodation is not capable of affording to them. Should these troubles increase, the Council offer in the name of the settlers in Canterbury the protection of their province, and they are ready to provide an immediate asylum for those women and children who may be cast upon your Excellency's care. In conclusion, this Council earnestly trust that the efforts which your Excellency has so laudably made in the extension of civil institutions suited to the wants of the Native population may ere long be appreciated by them, and that the present resistance to your authority may speedily give place to the conviction that under your rule the British Crown desires to form one people, under one law, of the colonists and the Native tribes.

By order of the Provincial Council.

CHARLES C. BOWEN, Speaker.

Canterbury, March, 1860.

(2.) ADDRESS OF THE INHABITANTS OF WHANGANUI. *Expressing Approval of Governor's Policy.

To His Excellency Colonel Thomas Gore Browne, C.B., Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over Her Majesty's Colony of New Zealand.

We, the undersigned, inhabitants of Whanganui and district, desire to express our warm approval of the policy pursued by your Excellency in the Native disturbances existing in Taranaki. We regard the grounds on which your Excellency has taken up arms to be just and necessary, and respectfully assure your Excellency of our cordial support (should we be called upon) to measures calculated, by a just and firm determination, to convey a lesson to the disaffected, which may speedily end present and prevent future outbreaks of the Native population of these Islands.

(3.) RESOLUTIONS OF PUBLIC MEETING AT NELSON. *Approval of Government Decision to suppress the Native Rebellion.

- That this meeting entirely approves of the decision with which the Government has acted in confronting a Native rebellion at Taranaki, and trusts that it will make no peace excepting on the terms of the unconditional submission of the rebels, on which basis alone the meeting believes that any peace must be founded if it is to be lasting.
- That, while desirous of living on friendly terms with the Maoris, and rejoicing in every instance of their progress in civilization and material comfort, this meeting considers that it is no less due to them than to the British colonists that proceedings on the part of any of them subversive of all natural justice and moral law, and leading, as at Taranaki, to bloodshed and destruction of property, should be promptly and

- decidedly punished by the Government.
- That copies of the above resolutions be forwarded to His Excellency the Governor and to his Honour the Superintendent of Taranaki.

New Plymouth.—Increase of Military Force necessary.

Sir,—

Taranaki, 17th March, 1860.

From the present combination among the Native tribes around this settlement, I feel it my duty to report to your Excellency that the present military force is not sufficient for the protection of this place. It is stated on good authority that the Ngatiruanui and Taranaki Tribes, mustering 1,200 warriors, are prepared to make an attack on the town, while William King and his immediate followers at least three hundred strong, will fight to the last at the Waitara. Independently of this combination, it is much to be apprehended—now that the Natives have buried the hatchet among themselves and yielded allegiance to King Potatau—that the powerful Waikatos, several thousand strong, and many of the numerous and disaffected tribes of the East Coast, in the vicinity of Poverty Bay, may be implicated in the present contest, with a view of asserting their national independence, and throwing off their nominal allegiance to Her Majesty. This circumstance, together with the manifest symptoms of bad feeling recently displayed by the Natives, induces me to urge most respectfully on your Excellency the necessity of obtaining a stronger force without delay for the protection of the English settlements, and for vindicating Her Majesty's sovereignty over the Island.

I am of opinion that it would require a force of not less than five thousand men to defend the various isolated, and scattered settlements of the Northern Island.

No. 30. COPY OF MEMORANDUM FROM MR. C. W. RICHMOND to Colonel GORE BROWNE.

Insufficiency of Military and Naval Force in New Zealand. New Plymouth, 20th March, 1860.

I have read the letter dated the 17th March, addressed to His Excellency the Governor by the Native Secretary, Mr. McLean, in which that officer urges the necessity of an immediate augmentation of the military force in New Zealand.

The leading promoters of the Maori King movement in Waikato and elsewhere assert the national independence of their race, and oppose the farther extension of European settlement. They sympathize profoundly with armed resistance to the British Government, more especially with armed resistance to the further cession of territory to the Crown.

It has long been manifest that the first attempt to enforce obedience to the Governor's decision on any question affecting Natives might bring the disaffected tribes to the point of open rebellion. Hence the anxious desire so frequently expressed of His Excellency and his Advisers for an increase of the military and naval forces in New Zealand.

An occasion has now arisen on which it has become necessary to support the Governor's authority by a military force. The issue has been carefully chosen, the particular question being as favourable a one of its class as could have been selected. In the absence of a powerful Native party, leagued and organized to oppose the sale of land, it could be easily disposed of. But in the present condition of Native feelings it cannot be doubted that the state of the colony is critical, and British authority is in jeopardy, simply because it has been boldly asserted. I therefore entirely concur in the opinion of the Native Secretary, that the military force in this colony should be forthwith augmented to the greatest extent practicable.

Resolution of the Provincial Council of Hawke's Bay.

Provincial Council Chamber, Napier, 20th March, 1860.

THAT the Provincial Council of Hawke's Bay, ere it terminates its second session, is desirous of placing on record its full and entire sympathy with the Province of Taranaki, at present under martial law owing to the meddling of disaffected aborigines. That this Council also congratulates the Province of Taranaki on the manly and self-relying spirit which evidently appears to animate the bosom of its settlers, and on the very efficient aid so promptly rendered by the Governor of this colony. And while heartily and unanimously thanking His Excellency for the same, and for his equitable and open declaration of policy,—which this Council also sincerely believes to be both suited to and beneficial for the entire interests of the Province of Hawke's Bay,—it further begs to be allowed to express the hope that such policy will be for the future everywhere alike steadily and zealously adhered to. And that a copy of this resolution be early forwarded by the Speaker of this Council to His Excellency the Governor and to the Superintendent of the Province of Taranaki.

The Governor's Reply.

Sir,—
Government House, Auckland, 6th April, 1860.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter conveying to me a resolution passed unanimously by the Provincial Council of Hawke's Bay; and in return I beg to offer the Council my best thanks for the expressions of confidence contained in their resolution. It may be satisfactory to the Council to know that the policy in question has been approved by Her Majesty's Government.

No. 32.CIRCULAR TO OFFICERS OF THE NATIVE DEPARTMENT AT TARANAKI.

New Plymouth, 23rd March, 1859.

The Governor wishes to impress upon the officers connected with the Native service that he desires to maintain a strict neutrality. If criminal offences are committed within the English boundary the law must take its course without distinction of race. Any one claiming the protection of the British flag must be permitted to avail himself of it, and be guarded from all danger while under it; but no aid shall be given to enable Natives to elude or overawe their opponents in order that they may reach the settlement. It must be clearly understood that no force must ever be used against the Natives, or any party of them, unless in order to punish some direct and distinct outrage on their part. Individuals, should not be allowed to pass through or out of the town armed as if for offence. Armed bodies would be prevented from doing so by the Officer Commanding the Troops.

By His Excellency's command.

F. G. STEWARD, Private Secretary.

PROCLAMATION.

By His Excellency Colonel Thomas Gore Browne, Companion of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over Her Majesty's Colony of New Zealand and its Dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c.

Whereas on or about the forenoon of Tuesday, the twenty-seventh day of March instant, certain aboriginal natives named Haneti Rihari, Manahi, Minarapa, Mautaranui, Te Karira Rangirunga, Pene, Tahuna, Ihaka te Aka, and certain others them aiding and abetting therein, did foully, wantonly, and with malice aforethought murder or cause to be murdered Harry Passmore, Samuel Shaw, Samuel Ford, James Pote, and William Parker:

Now, therefore, I, the Governor, do hereby proclaim and declare that the sum of one hundred pounds will be paid to any person or persons who will deliver up to Colonel Gold any one of the above mentioned murderers or their accessories: Provided also, that if the person or persons, or any of them, so delivering up any of the above-mentioned murderers shall have himself or themselves been concerned in the said murders or any of them, or in any way accessory thereto, then and in that case he or they shall also receive a free pardon.

No. 34. COPY OF A DESPATCH from Governor Sir H. Barkly, K.C.B., to his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE.

New Plymouth.—Re Military Assistance rendered.

My Lord Duke,—

Government Offices, Melbourne, 20th April, 1860.

Although the steps taken in the Australian Colonies in consequence of the outbreak of another Maori war in New Zealand will no doubt be reported by the military and naval officers commanding, to their respective departments, it may be well that I should inform your Grace of them so far as this colony is concerned. I enclose, therefore, copies of my letters to Major-General, Pratt and to the Governor of New Zealand, from which it will be seen that this Government not only readily acquiesced in the reduction of the garrison, but placed the Colonial war steamer "Victoria" at the disposal of the Imperial Government on the most liberal terms.

I have suggested to the Governors of the other colonies that they should follow the example likewise here set of prohibiting in Council the exportation of arms and ammunition to New Zealand, as all experience proves the importance of cutting off the supply of such articles at the commencement of any struggle with an uncivilized race incapable of their manufacture.

I trust the precautions taken will lead to the speedy extinction of the present war; but, as the presence of a considerable body of troops in the Northern Island will no doubt be requisite for a considerable time afterwards, I feel it my duty to urge most respectfully upon Her Majesty's Government the expediency of sending strong reinforcements from Home without delay, since the small detachments allotted respectively to these colonies cannot be permanently reduced without extreme inconvenience. Already, indeed, has a discussion arisen in the Legislative Assembly of this province on the subject, as your Grace will perceive from the enclosed newspaper extract; and though the feeling of the House was clearly against Mr. Ebdon, the former Treasurer, by whom the question was raised, I could not answer for the result if the next mail should bring more warlike news from Europe.

I have, &c.,

HENRY BARKLY.

His Grace the Duke of Newcastle, &c.

No. 35. His Lordship the Bishop of NEW ZEALAND to the Hon. Mr. TANCRED.

Protest against Resolution of Provincial Council of Hawke's Bay respecting the Native Disturbances at New Plymouth.

Sir,—

Auckland, 28th April, 1860.

After reading in the New Zealand Gazette of the 23rd April the resolution of the Provincial Council of Hawke's Bay, passed on the 30th March, 1860, I feel it to be my duty most respectfully to record my deliberate protest against the statements contained therein.

Because martial law was proclaimed at Taranaki before a single Native was known to have taken up arms against the Government, and when no offence had been given by the Natives beyond an unarmed obstruction of the work of the surveyors.

Because the persons described in the resolution as "disaffected aborigines" were the faithful and efficient allies of the Government in the war at Port Nicholson, and were always considered as among the most loyal, peaceable, and industrious of the New Zealand tribes, till they became entangled in the land questions raised by the English settlers at Taranaki.

Because, in entire opposition to the resolution in question, I claim, on behalf of the New Zealanders,—(1.) An investigation of all questions relating to their title to land, before a regular tribunal, with the usual safeguards against partiality or error, viz., evidence on oath, arguments of counsel, and a right of appeal; (2.) That military force shall not be employed till the civil power shall have been tried, and shall have been found insufficient to carry out the judgment of the Court; (3.) That, inasmuch as this colony was avowedly formed, not for the acquisition of territory for the English race, but for the protection of the New Zealanders, this primary object shall not be sacrificed to the aggrandizement of the English provinces.

Because the willing and prompt surrender by the New Zealand tribes of millions of acres of land, including all the best harbours, for very trifling payments, deserves the respect and gratitude of the whole colony, and especially of the Province of Hawke's Bay, where the extinction of the Native title has been unusually rapid, and where the greater part of the land was offered to Government for sale in 1842, and declined for want of funds.

Because, finally, I am so far from concurring in the hope "that such policy will for the future be everywhere alike steadily and zealously adhered to," that I believe that the repetition of any similar policy would be as unwise as it would be unjust, and would lead to the most disastrous consequences to the English colony and to the Native race.

I have, &c.,

G. A. NEW ZEALAND.

To the Hon. Henry John Tancred, acting for the Colonial Secretary.

No. 36. MEMORANDUM ON BISHOP SELWIN'S PROTEST.

Auckland, 25th May, 1860.

His Excellency's Responsible Ministers recommend that the letter recently addressed to the Acting Colonial Secretary, Mr. Tancred, by the Bishop of New Zealand, in which his Lordship records his deliberate protest against the statements contained in a resolution of the Provincial Council of Hawke's Bay, be forwarded to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, together with the resolution which called forth the protest.

Ministers make this recommendation because the Bishop's letter is the only tangible manifestation of his Lordship's opposition to the course taken by His Excellency in reference to the purchase of Teira's block at Waitara—an opposition which is nevertheless open and active in the colony, and likely to be influential wherever the facts of the case are imperfectly known. For the Bishop of New Zealand may claim to be regarded, in matters affecting the relations of the settlers and Natives, as a disinterested witness—a character which will (rightly or wrongly) generally be denied to colonists. It should, however, be remembered that the philanthropist, notwithstanding the high ground he takes—which gives him perhaps an undue advantage in public opinion over those who are discharging the ordinary duties of life—is often found to be liable, even beyond other men, to the disturbing influences of prejudice and passion. The Abolitionists of North America, for example, are certainly disinterested, but few statesmen will hold that they take a sober and just view of the great question of humanity, to which they have devoted their lives.

It is not easy for supporters of His Excellency's policy to meet an attack so indirect as that which his Lordship the Bishop has made in the protest under consideration. Notwithstanding that his Lordship styles the document his "deliberate protest," it ought probably to be regarded rather as the outbreak of irrepressible feeling than the expression of calm and matured opinion; and it is for that reason, but only for that reason, difficult to meet it at all points with a logical reply.

The real matter of the protest is contained in its third clause, which is as follows: "Because, in entire opposition to the resolution in question, I claim, on behalf of the New Zealanders,—(1.) An investigation of all questions relating to their title to land before a regular tribunal, with the usual safeguards against partiality or error, viz., evidence on oath, arguments of counsel, and a right of appeal; (2.) That military force shall not be employed until the civil power shall have been tried, and shall have been found insufficient to carry out the judgment of the Court; (3.) That, inasmuch as this colony was avowedly formed, not for the acquisition of territory for the English race, but for the protection of the New Zealanders, this primary object shall not be sacrificed to the aggrandizement of the English provinces."

Looking to the whole tenor of the Bishop's letter, and to the attitude of open opposition to the Governor which his Lordship has unfortunately assumed in reference to the Waitara land question, His Excellency's Ministers have no hesitation in treating the three subdivisions of the clause as really meaning—

- That William King's right was not fully and fairly inquired into:
- That military force was prematurely employed to take possession of the land at Waitara:
- That the interest of the Natives of the Taranaki district has been sacrificed in the transaction to the interest of the European settlers.

It is proposed to reply to these charges in succession, adverting to various collateral topics.

I. In answering the charge that the right of King was not duly investigated, Ministers would, in the first place, refer to their memorandum of 27th April, 1860, as showing that the negotiations for the purchase of the block in question were carefully conducted, and unusually prolonged.

Secondly, it is to be observed that William King has never put forward any proprietary or other claim, of a nature that would be recognized by the British Government, to the land on the south bank of the Waitara. A few words will here be necessary to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the position which has been taken by the British Government in reference to the Taranaki land question, and to explain the true nature of King's pretensions.

Governor Sir George Grey, on the occasion of his visit to New Plymouth in 1847, distinctly repudiated the claims of the Atiawas who had returned, or might return, to Taranaki, to anything beyond fair compensation for the value, as wild land, of the block comprised in Mr. Commissioner Spain's award after proper reserves should have been made for them. Accordingly, his instructions to Mr. McLean (the present Chief Land Purchase Commissioner), which bear date 5th March, 1847, after directing that ample reserves should be made, and not exceeding 1s. 6d. per acre offered for the residue of the block, declare that "those Natives who refuse to assent to this arrangement must distinctly understand that the Government do not admit that they are the true owners of the land they have recently thought fit to occupy." (Parliamentary Papers, December, 1847, p. 12.) Notwithstanding this explicit declaration, which accords with what Governor Grey had previously announced to the Natives at his interviews with them (see his despatch to Earl Grey, ibid., p. 4), he thought proper (probably on grounds of policy) to acquiesce in the assertion of proprietary rights by the ancient occupants; and the precedent thus set has been followed by His Excellency the present Governor. On the occasion of the Waitara purchase the proprietary right has been respected in the persons of Te Teira and the other members of his section of the tribe, who will be paid at the rate of £1 per acre for the land they cede. King fully admits their rightful ownership, and opposes the sale on another ground.

The right set up by King is simply the old title of the Maori chief—the right of the strong arm, which he asserts under quite novel circumstances. At the meeting in March, 1859, when Teira's offer was accepted by the Governor, King plainly took his stand: "Waitara," said he, "is in my hand; I will never let it go" —thus defying Governor Browne, as he had before defied Sir George Grey. It is well known that when King, in 1848, deserted his pa and cultivations at Waikanae, and was moving northward to Taranaki, Sir George Grey forbade him to settle on the south bank of the Waitara. But King, having first obtained the leave of Raru (Teira's father) to build his pa on the south bank, disregarded the Governor's prohibition, and now pretends to claim Waitara in virtue of a species of conquest achieved by his defiant return.

The European apologists of King, as might be expected, are not satisfied with the naked simplicity of this claim, but have contrived a more elaborate and technical defence. By a strange jumble of Maori customs with the feudal notions of English law, they assert that King is now entitled in Taranaki to what they call "a manorial right"—a species of minor sovereignty—over the whole district. This right, they assert, has survived the migration to Cook Straits of King's section of the Ngatiawa, which they declare was voluntary, and not in fear of the northern tribes, and which took place twenty years before King's return. Being based upon neither the English nor Maori rule, but upon a compound of the two, uniting the advantages afforded by either law to antiquated claims, this right is supposed to be unaffected by the Waikato conquest, the consequent slavery or dispersion of the remnant of the tribe, and the transfer of the title of the conquerors to the British Government. Nor is it prejudiced by the fact (vouched for by Mr. Spain) that Colonel Wakefield's original treaty for the purchase of the district was entered into with the approbation of some, and with ample notice to all, of the Ngatiawa chiefs, including King's own father. Every other claimant, it is admitted, has been satisfactorily dealt with; but, in virtue of this shadowy pretension, King, it is asserted, is now justified in putting his veto upon the cession of the rights of the ancient Ngatiawa occupants of Waitara, in refusing all propositions for the settlement of this long-vexed question, and even in armed resistance to the British Government.

Considering the position assumed by Sir George Grey upon the Taranaki land question, and that nothing has ever been put forward by King, or on his behalf, but pretensions which are either insolent or flimsy, it will scarcely be thought that his claim admitted of elaborate investigation. Had he set up any right of ownership, it would doubtless have been looked into by the experienced officers intrusted with this duty. But King has repeatedly disclaimed any such right, and admitted Teira's proprietary title. This has been shown at large in Ministers' memorandum of 27th April, 1860, already cited.

The question of King's rights over Waitara, it will be observed, is a special one, and is quite independent of the vexed question of the right of Maori chiefs over the lands of the tribe, which is probably incapable of any general solution. It may be true, as is alleged, that where a tribe has a recognized head such head has, according to Maori usage, a power distinct from any right of ownership of prohibiting the alienation of any part of the lands occupied by members of the tribe. The question does not, it is repeated, arise in the present case, or it would deserve consideration how far the exercise of such a right is consistent with the stipulations of the Treaty of Waitangi, whereby the chiefs, parties to the Treaty, yield to Her Majesty the exclusive right of pre-emption over such lands as the proprietors thereof may be pleased to alienate, at such prices as may be agreed upon between the respective proprietors and persons appointed by Her Majesty to treat with them in that behalf.

Thirdly, as it is partly implied in what has been already stated, the facts of the case were not simply known, but notorious and undisputed. On this ground, therefore, no elaborate investigation was requisite, and the purchase might without blame have been speedily concluded, though in fact its transaction occupied eight months.

Lastly, the matter, it has been already shown, was, to all intents and purposes, res judicata. But, had this been otherwise, a trial "with the usual safeguards against partiality or error, viz., evidence on oath and arguments of counsel," would, under the circumstances, have been something more ludicrous than has yet been seen in our public dealings with the New Zealanders, which is saying a great deal. To suppose that King would have submitted himself to the jurisdiction would be a piece of such pure simplicity that it is impossible to imagine that the Bishop of New Zealand really believes he would have done so.

As regards his Lordship's claim on behalf of the New Zealanders of a regular judicial investigation of all questions relating to their title to land, his Lordship's anxiety to see such a tribunal established, and rendered effective, cannot exceed that of the Governor and his Ministers. All persons at all acquainted with the affairs of New Zealand are aware that the difficulty in the way of the establishment of such a tribunal lies with the Natives themselves. One of the grounds lately assigned by the Imperial Government for withholding the Royal assent from the Native Territorial Rights Bill, 1858, was the likelihood that the award of the Governor in Council, or of such tribunal as His Excellency in Council might appoint for the investigation of Native title, would not be acquiesced in by the contending parties.

The New Plymouth case is a particularly unfortunate one in which to advance the claim for forensic discussion and investigation, since Mr. Commissioner Spain's award was made after precisely such a trial as his Lordship, with characteristic emphasis, now demands on behalf of the New Zealanders. Mr. Spain's decision was, it is known, utterly disregarded by the Natives, and their turbulent conduct induced Governor Fitzroy to set it aside. The Bishop must be aware—certainly no one else in the country is ignorant—that the Natives in their present state, though ready to take advantage of favourable decisions upon such questions, would never voluntarily submit to an adverse one.

The investigation of the Native title to land offered for sale has been left to officers of the Executive Government, partly because from the habits of the Natives the truth can be better got at by desultory conversations and examinations extending over a long space of time than by the peremptory procedure of a Court of law; partly because reasons of policy ought to be taken into consideration by Government which could not be admitted as elements in the decision of a judicial officer. The flexible practice of the Land Purchase Department—which is under the direct control of the Imperial Government—admits of concessions to the Natives not justifiable upon any ground of strict principle. It cannot be unknown to the Bishop that the arrangement of which he complains is beneficial to the interests of the Natives—if indeed it be beneficial (as his Lordship generally appears to think it) to yield to them upon almost every occasion upon which there is any show or likelihood of resistance or dissatisfaction on their part.

The purchase of the Bell Block at New Plymouth was a transaction in which the methods of investigation pursued did not differ from those adopted in the instance of the Waitara Block. Yet his Lordship, while he condemns the present transaction as concluded upon insufficient inquiry, has in a pastoral letter signified his complete approval of the manner in which the Bell Block was acquired. (See Pastoral Letter of the Bishop of New Zealand to the members of the Church of England at New Plymouth, 1855.)

II. The second charge is that military force was prematurely resorted to. The facts are shortly as follow: The party which attempted the survey on the 20th February was met by from seventy to eighty of W. King's Natives, who seized the survey instruments. A short struggle ensued, in which a Native who accompanied the survey party struck down one of King's men. The District Land Purchase Commissioner (Mr. Parris) thereupon rushed in to prevent further collision and probable bloodshed, and directed the surveyors to retire. Unquestionably the interruption of the surveyors was a formal act of defiance on the part of the Natives. On the 4th of March the block was occupied by the troops—not as a military operation against King, but in support of the civil power. As to the proclamation of martial law, that was a measure of precaution rather intended to restrain, if necessary, the Europeans than directed against the Natives. Actual force was not used until a fighting party of King's people had erected a pa and danced the war-dance upon the disputed ground, and had contemptuously rejected a summons by the Officer in Command to evacuate the pa.

Immediately after the offer of land to the Governor in March, 1859, King wrote to the Waikatos for aid in resisting the sale of the block, and before the troops moved to Waitara he had prepared two strongly fortified pas, well stored with ammunition, and had sent letters to all parts of the country requesting support. It will scarcely be believed that King would have proved amenable to the civil authority when he had been thus actively preparing for armed resistance to Her Majesty's Government. And surely it is blind unreason to expect that a Maori chief with a hundred or two of armed followers prepared to do his bidding whatever it be, and who has set at defiance successive Governors, can or ought to be dealt with in all respects as a loyal and peaceable citizen.

III. Upon the third and last head Ministers remark that the interest of the Natives, no less than that of the colonists, requires the settlement of the land question in Taranaki, which has been an open sore for sixteen years. Sir George Grey, in his despatch to Earl Grey of 2nd March, 1847 (Parliamentary Papers, December, 1847, p. 2), remarks, "These individuals [of the Ngatiawa, in Taranaki] have been quarrelling amongst themselves regarding their respective claims, and, in order that there might be much to pay for, have prevented the Europeans occupying any additional land, although many hundred thousand acres of the richest soil are lying perfectly neglected and useless, whilst many European families have been left in comparative want.

Indeed, the inability of the Natives to adjust their respective claims now makes them unwilling to allow the land to be sold at all, and they constantly assert that those Natives who wish to sell land have no right to dispose of it." Such is the testimony of a dispassionate witness. The quarrels to which Sir George Grey alludes have gone on increasing in bitterness, till in 1854 they resulted in bloodshed, and the peace of the province ever since has been more or less disturbed by Native affrays. Referring to a temporary cessation of these hostilities in 1859, a recent intelligent writer on New Zealand observes, "The feud, however, is not settled; the cessation of hostilities is more an armistice than a peace, and its permanence will only be secured by the Government purchasing the disputed lands" ("Story of New Zealand," by A. S. Thompson, M.D., Vol. ii., p. 259). His Excellency's Ministers entirely concur in this opinion.

A few minor topics touched on in the protest ought not to pass wholly unnoticed. His Lordship extols the loyalty of King and his people. Of the truth and fairness of the reflection upon the settlers let any one judge who has perused the reports of Mr. Spain, and the correspondence of Sir George Grey on the Taranaki land question. As to King's alleged services against Rangihaeata, their value is very questionable. It is certain that King absolutely refused to join the Ngatiawa of Port Nicholson in the pursuit of the rebel chief, and that in consequence the latter made good his retreat to his stronghold at Poroutawhao. King's attitude throughout the war was little, if at all, more favourable to the British Government than that of an armed neutral. More perhaps could not be expected of him, but it is absurd to extol him as an faithful and efficient ally. His fidelity was doubtful; his efficiency was altogether denied by those who were serving with him. (See the report, passim, of Mr. Servantes and Major Durie in the Parliamentary Blue Book, in continuation of papers presented 26th August, 1846.) King's position at Waitara has been one of pure hostility to the interests of the settlement, of which he has been occupying a part of the destined site—a hostility unattended by the least advantage to himself or his followers, and which has, on the contrary, plunged the district into a series of disastrous feuds. Upon the vast tract of fertile land which he and his party have been the principal means of withholding from the industry of the European settlers the thistles now stand, in many places so thick that a horseman cannot pass, and the seed may be seen blowing along the ground like snow. Allowance may and ought to be made for a savage who clings to his savage life, and to the beautiful wilderness which he cannot use, but has always been free to roam over. But it is worse that injudicious to hold him up as a benefactor, entitled to the grateful feelings of the English settlers. Such unjustifiable exaggerations evidently tend to excite sentiments the very opposite to those which they purport to inculcate.

More important than these trifling indications of his Lordship's constant bias is the declaration that the colony was avowedly formed for the protection of the Maoris, and that this remains of right the primary object of the British policy in these Islands, to which every other is to be sacrificed. It is believed that there is no sort of authority for such a doctrine, successive Secretaries of State, beginning with the Marquis of Normanby, having declared that the equal benefit of both races was the motive for assuming the sovereignty of the Islands. The true state of the case is clearly expressed by Lord Stanley in his despatch to Governor Sir George Grey, dated the 13th June, 1845. "You are aware," his Lordship writes, "that the colonization of New Zealand was not the spontaneous act of the Queen's Government, but was forced on them as the only means of averting the evils with which the unauthorized settlement of Her Majesty's subjects there appeared to threaten the inhabitants, whether European or aboriginal."

But, holding as they do that the preservation and civilization of the Native race, and the promotion of the settlement of the country by Europeans, are objects of policy not merely compatible, but, in the present circumstances of the colony, inseparable the one from the other, His Excellency's Responsible Ministers consider that the controversy opened by these expressions of his Lordship the Bishop is idle and mischievous.

If his Lordship desired to arouse and stimulate the hatred of race, he could not do so more effectually than by such assertions as are scattered with a profuse hand over the short document under consideration. Once let it be understood that the interest of the settlers is to be subordinate to that of the Natives, and a war of races is inevitable. Earl Grey has rightly said that such a struggle once commenced could hardly close, except by our abandonment of the Islands in disgrace or the extirpation of the aboriginal inhabitants. (Earl Grey's "Colonial Policy," Vol. ii., p. 137.)

The insinuation that the war is one of aggrandizement—that it is undertaken for the sake of acquiring territory—is quite untrue. The proceedings which have led to it were under the immediate superintendence and control of the Governor. His Excellency will confirm the statement that those proceedings were not, at any stage, urged upon him, or so much as suggested to him, by the Responsible Ministers, nor was there, previous to the commencement of the war, any manifestation of public feeling on the subject of the dispute between the Governor and William King. It would be absurd to suppose that His Excellency could be actuated by the motive imputed. And it must appear almost equally improbable to any person who calmly reflects on the matter, that the colonists or their representatives should willingly incur the risks, and submit to the sacrifices, of a Maori war, for the sake of a few hundreds of acres in the least important province of New Zealand. Other motives must be sought to explain the general support which His Excellency has received in the colony upon the present occasion.

There is in New Zealand a small and happily decreasing party who, to benefit as they suppose the Native race, would willingly check what is invidiously styled "the aggrandizement of the English provinces." Their apprehensions for the future (which seem in a great measure to blind them to the danger and even impossibility of a continuance of the present relations of the races) are aggravated by the low conception they have formed of the general motives and objects of their fellow-countrymen in New Zealand. Moving, as these gentlemen for the most part do, in a narrow social circle, and mixing little with the settlers, having moreover their feelings and energies concentrated upon one great and in itself most noble object, it is not wonderful that they should do but scant justice to the motives of the colonists. On behalf of their fellow-settlers. His Excellency's Ministers would represent to Her Majesty's Imperial Government that the grand desire of the British colonists in respect to the Natives is not the appropriation of the Native territory, still less the destruction of the race, but it is to see the Maori people rendered amenable in their dealings with the settlers to British law. The restless instinct of progress, the love of wealth, the hatred of race, are all no doubt motives at work in the country; and against the indulgence or the excess of these strong passions the Government is bound to be upon its guard. But stronger and more universal and more inevitable than all these feelings is the desire which animates the public mind that all the inhabitants of New Zealand should be subjected in their mutual dealings to the control of one equal law. This is a natural and praiseworthy desire, and if duly regulated must be conducive to the good as much of the Natives as of the colonists.

The addresses which have been presented to the Governor since the commencement of the war justify these representations. Under accumulated provocations—the contemptuous defiance of Her Majesty's authority, the ruin of one British settlement, the most serious injury to several others, the interruption of the advancing prosperity of all,—under the natural indignation caused by the cold-blooded murders perpetrated upon unarmed men and young boys,—the settlers of New Zealand still restrain their passions, and confine themselves to the prayer that the majesty of the law may be vindicated and the authority of the Queen upheld.

Perhaps only those who have lived as settlers surrounded by a Maori population are able to realize the intensity which the desire expressed by these addresses can attain amongst Englishmen so situated. In his intercourse with the Natives the colonist is exposed to daily provocations. His cattle, for example, stray from his paddock: he follows them to a neighbouring pa, and is compelled to redeem them by an exorbitant payment. In the course of the altercation a musket is perhaps pointed at him, or a tomahawk flourished over his head. On the other hand, should he try the experiment of driving Native cattle to the public pound for trespass on his cultivations, a strong party of Maoris, with loaded muskets, breaks down the pound and rescues them. He has to maintain party fences without contribution from his Maori neighbours; herds of Native pigs break through to his crops; the dogs of the pa worry his sheep. To save his own farm he has to pay for the extirpation of thistles on the neighbouring Native land, hundred of thousands of acres of which lie waste and worse than useless around his homestead. Redress in the Courts of law is not to be obtained, because it would be dangerous to the peace of the country to enforce the judgment. On the other hand, Natives, freely avail themselves of their legal remedies against Europeans. At the present time a trader lies in the Auckland gaol under arrest for debt, at the suit of a Native chief. About a year ago this same European had a judgment for a large amount against the Native who has now imprisoned him, which he was of course unable to enforce by execution.

Men of great judgment, tact, and courage, and of a commanding type of character, may get on well with their Maori neighbours; but even these sometimes fail, and such men are the exceptions in every country. Missionaries, again, may take refuge in mere passiveness; their calling permits it without reproach. A Missionary is wronged, and he submits, and there is an end of it. But the settler cannot do the like without loss of self-respect, and to him the petty provocations and injuries to which he is subject are rendered galling by the sense that he is compelled to bow to the will of an armed, lawless, and insolent mob.

There is a reverse to the picture which has been drawn of the wrongs of the settlers. Much might be said of frauds by European traders, of wanton insults offered to Natives by the lower class of settlers, and of other inconveniences which have followed from the settlement of the country. Nor would it be wise to expect that an uncivilized people should at once conform to the usages of strangers who have come to plant themselves amongst them. But, freely admitting the whole of what may be said on these points, it is still true that the strong desire of the colonists for the thorough establishment of British authority is natural and laudable, and that its fulfilment, if attained by no violation of the laws of humanity and justice, will conduce to the benefit of both Europeans and Natives.

It is because the decisive action of His Excellency the Governor appears to the colonists adapted ultimately to secure this great and happy result that they are not merely reconciled to the heavy present sacrifices it entails upon them, but prepared to give to the Imperial Government their most active support in suppressing the existing rebellion. His Excellency's Responsible Ministers concur in this general opinion and determination, and now express their expectation that His Excellency's policy, though beset with unavoidable and accumulated difficulty, will be recognized and supported as neither unwise nor unjust, nor likely to prove disastrous to either race, but that it will be seen to have been, on the contrary, dictated by a due regard for the welfare of New Zealand and the dignity of the Crown, and, of necessity, to have been in strict accordance with those just principles which have hitherto regulated the conduct of the, British Government in these Islands.

New Plymouth.—Victorian Assistance to New Zealand appreciated. Downing Street, 27th June, 1860.
SIR,—

I have received your Despatch No. 5, of the 20th April last, in which you report the measures adopted by your Government on receiving the application of the New Zealand Government for assistance in meeting the difficulties in which that colony had been involved in consequence of the outbreak on the part of the Natives at Taranaki. Her Majesty's Government have seen with great satisfaction the cordial co-operation afforded by the Government of Victoria on this occasion, not only by their acquiescence in the reduction of the garrison, but by the liberal manner in which they placed the Colonial war steamer "Victoria" at the disposal of the Imperial Government. You will express to your Government how fully Her Majesty's Government appreciate the sympathy and generosity which have marked their conduct on this occasion.

Address of INHABITANTS of the HUTT, Province of Wellington.

Expressing Approval of Governor's Measures at Waitara.

To His Excellency Colonel THOMAS GORE BROWNE, C.B., Governor and Commander-in-chief of the Colony of New Zealand.

WE, the undersigned electors and other inhabitants of the Hutt District, desire to express our entire approbation of the policy of your Excellency, in proceeding to quell by force of arms the insurrection of W. Kingi, in the Province of Taranaki. While we deeply deplore the circumstances which have compelled your Excellency to such an extremity, we are convinced that sooner or later a collision with this turbulent chief was inevitable; and that any further tampering with the question of sovereignty would have been construed by the Natives as an admission of present weakness, and probably eventuated in more wide-spread disaffection. Even had we been less satisfied than we are of the justice of the war, we should feel that there would be now no other alternative for your Excellency, having in view, not simply the best interests, but the actual existence of the colony, than to prove by vigorous exertion the supremacy of the Queen's power: until a conviction of which is summarily brought home to the Native mind, we fear that your Excellency will be unable to establish a lasting peace, such as may serve for all future ages to cement in one bond the mutual prosperity and happiness of both races.

We offer to your Excellency our most earnest co-operation in bringing the issue to such a termination, and should much regret that any member of the House of Representatives should consent to patching up present tranquillity at the risk of future security.

It is very gratifying to me to know that the course pursued towards W. Kingi and the insurgents at Taranaki meets with your approval; and I thank you sincerely for your address of the 21st-September. I thank you also for the offer of your co-operation, and I assure you that every assistance which it is in my power to give has been, and always shall be, given to the General to enable him to conduct the war to a successful termination.

MEMORIAL to His Excellency the GOVERNOR from INHABITANTS of WELLINGTON.

27th October, 1860.—Hoping that Peace will only be made on a certain Foundation.

To His Excellency Colonel THOMAS GORE BROWNE, C.B., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of the Islands of New Zealand, &c.

WE, the undersigned inhabitants of the City of Wellington, have seen with the deepest regret and indignation the opposition which has been raised in the House of Representatives—chiefly by the Wellington members—against the policy of your Excellency in resisting by force of arms the rebellion at Taranaki. We feel convinced that your Excellency could not have avoided the war without serious detriment to the Queen's supremacy in this Island, and the true interest of both-settlers and Natives. Until the rebels have been subjugated and the murderers of our fellow-settlers have been punished, any peace with those who have taken up arms against the Government would be uncertain, insincere, and subversive of Her Majesty's dominion in this Island: With such a peace the authority of the law could not be maintained beyond the immediate precincts of the towns, nor could the mutual feelings of good-will and security which formerly prevailed between the two races be restored. We beg to offer to your Excellency our cordial approbation of the determination expressed by your Excellency to carry on the war with vigour, until ample retribution has been exacted for the murder of our fellow-settlers, and until the embers of rebellion have been utterly extinguished.

The Governor's Reply. Government House, Auckland, 29th October, 1860.
GENTLEMEN,—

I beg to offer you my sincere thanks for the address I have received from you by the last mail. I can assure you that from the moment of my arrival in the colony to the present time I have earnestly endeavoured to promote the welfare of both races of Her Majesty's subjects, by every means in my power. It is most gratifying for me to know that so large a portion of the inhabitants of the oldest settlement in New Zealand approve the course which it has been my painful duty to pursue at Taranaki, and agree in thinking that the war could not have been avoided without serious detriment to the Queen's supremacy and the best interests of both races. You will readily perceive that I could not venture to express any distinct opinion in reference to the future, but I can have no hesitation in assuring you that, however much I may desire the speedy re-establishment of peace, I do not wish to see it effected on any terms but such as would afford a reasonable expectation of permanence.

No. 41. EXTRACT of DESPATCH from Governor Sir GEORGE GREY, K.C.B., to his Grace the Duke of NEWCASTLE, K.G.

Taranaki, New Zealand, 6th April, 1863.

MY LORD DUKE,—

Your Grace will remember that, after a war with the Natives had been for some time carried on here, and this province had, with the exception of the town, been almost ruined, the terms of a treaty were dictated by the Government, and the troops were removed to Auckland, with the exception of the small number required for the defence of this town, and to hold two small blockhouses near the Waitara River.

- 2. In the meantime the Waikato tribes, whose territory commences about forty miles from Auckland, were required to comply with certain conditions, and were given to understand that if they did not accept them an expedition would be undertaken into their country to punish them, and with this object a considerable military force was collected about seven miles from Auckland on the Waikato side. The tribes inhabiting the district abutting on that river were excessively incensed at this; they would not comply with the conditions which had been named, and prepared themselves for war, and a general conspiracy was formed amongst the Native tribes for a simultaneous attack on all the European settlements the moment that we attempted to attack the Waikato country.
- 3. Whilst these events were taking place a Commissioner, Mr. Rogan, was sent down to carry out the terms of the treaty which had been dictated to the Natives at Taranaki. They laughed at these terms, and desired him to quit their country, or he might lose his life.
- 4. Things were in this state when I arrived in New Zealand. I soon found that, from the dense forests and impassable swamps which intervened between Auckland and the country inhabited by the Waikato tribes, and from the want of roads or other means of communication, it was impossible to commence operations against them with any hopes of success. On the contrary, they had become so confident in their own strength and resources, and were so encouraged and emboldened by the events of the recent war, that the question was, how we could protect the country round Auckland from the attack they might, at any moment, make on it, and which they were certain to make if we began a war at Taranaki, or in any other part of the North Island.
- 5. If I had, under these circumstances, commenced to agitate any questions with the Natives of the Province of Taranaki, we should have been resisted; a general war would have taken place, and, not one of the European settlements in New Zealand being in a state of preparation for such a war, one or more of them must have been involved in the same sad ruin as had already befallen the unfortunate Province of Taranaki.
- 6. The only proper proceedings appeared therefore to me to be to take no measures which could irritate the Native people, or justify them in commencing a general war, and yet, as the Waikato tribes were evidently the head and front of this great and general conspiracy against us, gradually and surely to take measures which would not only place the settlement of Auckland in a state of fair security against them, but would place us in a position which would enable us with just hopes of success to strike a blow at them if they deserved punishment, and at the same time, so to threaten them that, if we ever required to take measures against the Natives elsewhere, they would hardly venture to detach any considerable force to aid such people, when a force capable of readily invading their territories lay at their own doors. When this end was gained I could hope to speak to the people of Taranaki with confidence that I should be listened to, and that the measures I might think it necessary to take for the future security of the settlers here would be acquiesced in, at least without resistance, if not cheerfully. A part of this plan of proceedings was to act with the strictest justice and generosity towards the Natives, to give them no just cause of complaint, and to show clearly by our acts that the object aimed at was the peace and security of the country, not future war against the Natives if it could possibly be avoided.....

Government House, Wellington, N.Z., 13th March, 1869.

My LORD,—

The letter of which I enclose a copy herewith was written in September last by the Rev. John Whiteley, a venerable and respected missionary, who was one of the victims of the recent massacre in the Province of Taranaki, where he was cruelly murdered on the 13th ultimo by the Natives among whom he had been labouring for thirty-five years.

2. I am informed that much reliance was placed on Mr. Whiteley's opinions respecting the feelings of the Maoris, on account of his sober judgment, and of his long familiarity with them.

Enclosure. LETTER from the Rev. JOHN WHITELEY.

Present State of Affairs in New Plymouth. 30th September, 1868.

DURING the, thirty-five years I have been in New Zealand I never felt so desponding as at the present time. The war with the Natives, which began more than eight years ago, is still going on! To-day a steamer has arrived from the southern part of this province, bringing the men that were wounded in the last engagement, and the intelligence that the rebel Natives are threatening the adjoining province. Whanganui settlement is in danger, the Militia is called out, and the people are in a sad state of alarm. On the East Coast, too, things are in a very unsatisfactory state, and it is feared that the few colonial troops that were taken from thence to assist in quelling the rebellion here will have to hasten back to fight for their own hearths and homes,—those of them, at least, who have not fallen in the strife here. And in the meantime farming operations are suspended; stagnation, poverty, and despondency prevail. The object of the rebel Natives in the south is to clear that part of European settlers, doubtless intending when that is accomplished to try their hand here or elsewhere. The consequence is that hundreds of persons who would otherwise have been diligently employed in cultivating the lands of this neighbourhood have left the place, and more are going. "What is the use of expending funds and time on farms which may soon be again overrun by the rebels?" is the natural language of many, and they have gone elsewhere to seek a safer and more profitable home. Of course our numbers in this province are vastly reduced, and if the rebels come here or rise in this neighbourhood we are utterly powerless to stand against them. Our friendly Natives are puzzled, and know not what to make of it. They saw a large army of soldiers sent here from Sydney, from Melbourne, from India, from England, from "all the world" to suppress the rebellion, and that army was recalled, either because they could not do the work, or because England found out that the work to be done was not "tika" (not right) —that is, the colonists had involved Britain in an unrighteous war; and their conclusions now are that we are left to ourselves, that the rebels will now take advantage of our deserted and unprotected state, that they will seek "utu" (payment, revenge) for all the past; and, as we failed to conquer them when we had ten thousand soldiers and all their big guns in the land, we have now no chance whatever, and of course they consider what will become of them, and ask themselves the question, What is the wisest course? If they by fidelity to us assist a failing cause, how will they stand when we fall? And they are confirmed in these views and apprehensions by the fact that the few soldiers that remain here do not help the settlers at all, but are just spending their time amongst us like gentlemen. And if our own pakeha soldiers do not help us, why should they be expected to do so? Can we gainsay this reasoning of the Maori mind among our friendly Natives? I confess I do not see how, and I fear, if they were required by necessity to be put to the test, they would say, "Your own soldiers do not fight for you: why should we?" And then, regarding our cause as having been deserted by the Mother-country because it was an unrighteous one, their next step would be to go over at once to the rebels, regarding might as right, and right as safety.

The Abyssinian expedition furnishes them with a remarkable contrast in confirmation of the views stated above. In that country there were less than a hundred Europeans in captivity: here there are many thousands of men, women, and children, as they think, at the mercy of the rebels, who can any day at their pleasure do as they have done before—shoot down, tomahawk, and carry off those who, in their daily avocations, dreamt not of a foe being near. To Abyssinia a mighty army of men and horses and elephants, with all its appliances, was sent to rescue the few: from this country the army was taken away, leaving the many to their fate, which in many instances already has been a terrible one, as widows, fatherless children, and bereaved friends painfully testify. In Abyssinia the work was completed, the captives were released, the enemy was subdued, and the author of all the evil was slain in New Zealand the case was the reverse—the army was withdrawn, the rebellion was not suppressed, the thousands were left to their fate, and the instigators of the mischief were left at large. In that country the few pakehas were sojourners in, captivity, but not expending money in making a home for themselves and their children after them; while here the thousands who have left their English homes to come to New Zealand have spent their all in expensive, continuous, and laborious efforts to fulfil God's original command to subdue the earth and possess it, and have been again and again driven from homes which they have made for themselves, and which they hoped would be their children's homes, and the homes of their children's children. For the Abyssinian expedition the British nation laudably and cheerfully contributed some £6,000,000 without grumbling or requiring one sixpence in return from those for whose sake this expensive expedition was undertaken: whereas the army was withdrawn from New Zealand before it had done its work; a debt of £3,000,000 is thrown upon the colony as the expenses of that army; the country is burdened with that debt, as with a heavy millstone about its neck; and every inhabitant of the land is taxed with the additional liability, over and above all other demands upon his strength and energy, of having to provide for the interest of this debt of £3,000,000.

And now let me ask, Is the Maori view of the case the correct one? Correct or not, it is the view by which the Natives are influenced, and by which their conduct is likely to be regulated. When, I think of the deliverance of the Abyssinian captives, and of the emancipation of the West Indian slaves at a cost of twenty millions, and when I talk of these things with our friendly Natives, I glory in my nation and thank God that I belong to such a people; but when I think of New Zealand I am humbled indeed. Much, I know, has been said on the other side in opposition to the view given above as being, that of the friendly Maoris. It may be said that our New Zealand Parliament requested that the troops might be withdrawn. But why was such a request made? Several reasons may be mentioned. It was insinuated that the war was begun or was being continued for the gratifying of the ambition and avarice of the colonists, and, this insinuation being extensively entertained by the army, the effect was manifest, in comparative inactivity. The colonists were given to understand that the expenses of the war would fall upon them, and our Government rightly considered that the expensiveness of such comparative inactivity should not be continued. The hope was entertained that the rebellious Natives had been led to see their mistake, and that, when the way was opened for their return to friendship by the removal of the soldiers from the country, they would avail themselves of the opportunity. It was like the laying-down of arms on our part; and an invitation for them to follow our example. As a colony we felt that we could not afford to pay for an expensive and comparatively inactive army, and we hoped to be able to do without it. And it may be said that the thousands of brave men in New Zealand who bear the British name ought to be able to cope with the few Natives who are in rebellion against us. True; but then how are they to cultivate their farms and keep the field against the foe at the same time? How are they to pay off the debt of £3,000,000, or even the interest thereof, if their time and energies are to be exhausted in an expensive and protracted warfare? The friendly Natives never approved of the withdrawal of the troops until matters should be thoroughly settled, and it is now with them a very serious question, What will be done, and how will they be affected? Some three or four months ago the friendly Natives of this district visited the rebel tribes in the south with the hope of promoting and establishing peace. This gave those tribes an opportunity of returning the visit, and they came by hundreds. But they came, not as those who are vanquished and humbled; but as those whose right it is to dictate terms and lay down the law. Of course they came without arms, and were received with every manifestation of friendly feeling and hospitality, both by Natives and Europeans. But to the appeal made to them by the authorities in the way of assertion and example, "War is at an end, is it not?" and which was responded to in Native fashion by a loud and unanimous "Ae" from the pakehas, they made a very equivocal and unsatisfactory response, and since their return war has recommenced in a most savage and murderous way by them or their friends. The impression is therefore irresistible that they came here for the purpose of spying out our weakness, and also of getting the friendly Natives over to their side. Out of deference to those by whom they were entertained they allowed us to hold our religious services in their presence, and to preach to them the everlasting gospel, but they took care to lose no opportunity of exhibiting the fascinating ceremonies of their new religion of Haubauism before the Christian Natives, and of doing all they could to persuade them it was all the same religion as their own, and vastly superior in their way of observing its ceremonies and worship. That they succeeded to a very large extent is unquestionable, and the declining interest manifested in our schools and worship is painful proof that the friendly Natives are sympathizing in a very serious degree with those who are in rebellion against us. The successes which the rebels have achieved will of course further confirm these wavering "friendlies" in their faith in the cause of those who have taken up arms against us, so that it may before long become with them a settled conviction that we are all wrong, and that they are bound by duty and by interest to abandon us.

And what have we in the whole length and breadth of our province to rely upon, in the event of a general or even a local manifestation of disaffection? Truly, the "nakedness of the land" might tempt our friends to despise and forsake us, and our foes to "swallow us up." When I visit the out-settlements of our enterprising English families, it is painful to think how very easily might all the effects of their industry be destroyed, and themselves murdered, wives and children tomahawked and devoured, without any one being the wiser till all was over. And these are the men who have to pay the war debt of three millions! O Britain! how canst thou be so forgetful of thy far-off children? But the Lord reigneth. Let this thought check my complaints, and rebuke my despondency.

"Better than my boding fears
To me Thou oft hast proved."

Thank God we have a few "righteous persons" even in New Zealand, and the Lord will hear their prayers. Our Government, our colonists, I know, are wishful, earnestly, ardently wishful, to save and elevate our Native race. May God have mercy on these infatuated rebellious tribes, "open their eyes, and turn them from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God!" It has been said, "The Natives are fighting for their lands." But "the earth is the Lord's," and for six hundred years He has been waiting for them to "occupy." Six hundred years more may find them with millions upon millions of still unoccupied acres; and Providence indicates that now shall this portion of His earth be occupied by those who are able and willing to bring forth the fruits thereof.

Let our brave colonists, then, have the sympathies of the nation that has sent them here, and which is well able to help them here.

Governor Bowen's Visit to New Plymouth. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 6th October, 1870.
MY LORD,—

Referring to the information contained in my Despatch No. 123, of the 25th September ultimo, and in the memorandum from Mr. McLean enclosed therein, concerning the large meeting of Maoris recently held at Taranaki, I now have the honour to report that I deemed it advisable to proceed to that province in person so soon as the state of public business after the close of the annual session of Parliament permitted me to absent myself temporarily from the seat of the General Government. Accordingly I left Wellington, by sea, on the 28th ultimo, and landed on the following day at the Town of New Plymouth, where I conferred with the local officers of the Government, with the principal colonists of the district, and with several Maori chiefs.

It will be recollected that New Plymouth is the capital of the Province of Taranaki.

- 2. Mr. Parris, the experienced Civil Commissioner for the Province of Taranaki, who is intimately acquainted with the Native language and customs, gave me very full information respecting the proceedings at the late assembly of Maoris at Parihaka, and the general state of Native affairs on the west coast of this Island. He assured me that the annexed brief account of the meeting published in one of the local journals is quite accurate so far as it goes, having been written on the spot by one of the eight or ten Englishmen who accompanied him to it.

- 3. It appears that this meeting was called together in consequence of invitations issued to all parts of the North Island by Te Whiti, a Taranaki chief, who now professes (like Kereopa, Te Ua, Hakaraia, and others of his countrymen during the last six or seven years) to be a prophet of the Hauhau creed. As it is doubtless already known to your Lordship, Hauhauism, in its religious aspect, is a rude mixture of some of the dogmas of the Christian faith with many of the most savage and horrible tenets and practices of the old Paganism; while in its political aspect it may be described as a bond of union among the adherents of the so-called "Maori King" and that portion of the Maori race which has renounced at once its Christianity and its allegiance to the British Crown.
- 4. Mr. Parris was invited to be present at the meeting (called professedly to discuss the question of war or peace with the English), and he accordingly repaired, with a few Europeans and a large number of loyal Natives, to Parihaka, Te Whiti's kainga, or village, which is situate about thirty-five miles to the south of New Plymouth. He found assembled there about twelve hundred Maoris, including delegates from nearly all the principal clans, and a Waikato chief named Aporo, who appeared as the representative of Tawhiao.

The so-called Maori King.

The korero, or talking, began on the 18th of September, and lasted for four days. The speeches were full of the customary allegories and figures, nearly unintelligible to all but those few Europeans who are thoroughly conversant with the traditions and character of the Maoris. The meeting separated without arriving at any formal decision, or even expression of opinion; but Mr. Parris, together with Mr. McLean and all who know the Natives best, considers the general result to be favourable, seeing that about seven hundred of the whole number present avowed themselves to be supporters of the law and of the sovereignty of the Queen; while Titokowaru, who appeared at the head of eighty armed followers, utterly failed to excite the remaining five hundred to any act or resolution of open hostility. He has again retired to his fastness in the almost impenetrable forests about forty miles west of New Plymouth, where he will be left unmolested so long as he remains quiet. Mr. Parris replied with firmness and courage to Titokowaru's fierce attacks on the English, and seems to have carried with him the general sympathy of the meeting. Of the loyal majority fully one-half were men who were recently in arms against the Queen. Conspicuous among these was Hone Pihama, the formidable chief of the Ngatiruanui clan, who fought so long and so bravely against Generals Cameron and Chute, but who attended the Native meeting held to welcome me in September, 1869, on the occasion of my first visit to Taranaki, and has since been a zealous supporter of the British Government.

See Governor of New Zealand to the Secretary of State, No. 134, of 14th October, 1869, printed at page 129 of the Papers presented to the Imperial Parliament in April, 1870.

- 5. It should be mentioned that Mr. Parris found the Natives generally to be well acquainted with the contents of Lord Granville's despatch of the 7th October, 1869, No. 115; and with the fact that a great war had recently broken out in Europe. Several Maoris said to him, Now we know the real reason why England has withdrawn her soldiers from New Zealand: she is afraid of being attacked at home." It is agreed on all sides that the presence of H.M.S. "Blanche" at New Plymouth during the meeting produced an excellent moral impression on both the loyal and the disaffected Natives: encouraging the former and dispiriting the latter.

Printed at page 195 of the Papers presented to the Imperial Parliament in April, 1870.

- 6. While I remained at Taranaki I inspected the post fortified by the Colonial Government, and held by detachments of the Militia and Armed Constabulary, for the protection of the settlers, who—as will have been seen from my former reports—comprise a total population of 4,000 souls, and about eight hundred able-bodied and armed men, scattered over an area nearly as large as that of Yorkshire, surrounded by powerful Native clans, and practically almost without communication, except by sea, with Auckland, Wellington, and the other principal English settlements. Blockhouses and redoubts have been erected in the country districts as rallying-points for the men and places of refuge for the women and children. The barracks, occupied until last February by a garrison of Imperial troops and now by a detachment of the colonial forces, stand on a steep hill in the centre of the Town of New Plymouth, and have been surrounded by a stockade quite strong enough to resist the attack of an enemy unprovided with artillery. In the event of any fresh outbreak, the entire population of the town and its suburbs (about two thousand souls) would be safe within this fortified enceinte.
- 7. From Taranaki I proceeded by the Manukau Harbour to Auckland, the real centre of the chief Native districts, which I shall revisit from this point in a succession of journeys. So far as is known here up to this date the whole Island continues tranquil, and there has been no hostile collision during the past month. Still there is much restlessness in the Native mind, and fresh meetings, like that at Parihaka, will be held during the ensuing summer (i.e., from December to March). Two members of the Executive Council are now with me at Auckland, and I shall be joined here in a few weeks by Mr. McLean, who will accompany me, in the first instance, to the meetings which will be convened by the Arawas and Ngatiporous on the East Coast.
- 8. The monthly mail viâ San Francisco will leave Auckland to-morrow, the 7th October instant, and the intelligence respecting the condition of this country which it will carry away may be described as, on the whole, satisfactory. Still it cannot be forgotten that the permanent maintenance of peace during the next few years will probably depend upon a greater variety of chances, and on a more precarious tenure, in New Zealand, than in any other British colony. What has happened here so often may of course happen again. The disturbing elements have certainly been diminished, but they have not entirely been dispelled; and they require constant watchfulness on the part of the colonial authorities. If we look to past experience, to the nature of the relations existing with some of the Maori clans, and to the position of many of the border settlements, it must be confessed that in several quarters causes of collision may arise at any moment. In fact it may well be doubted if, in a country so situated, it is in the power of any Government, however well disposed and well prepared, to command peace. But the Colonial Government, if it cannot command peace, can and (it is believed) will deserve it, by taking care that good faith, fair dealing, and a wise forbearance are on its side. After all, the Native difficulty is a question of time. In the South Island it has long ago ceased to exist; and ten years hence (or even at an earlier date) it will have practically ceased to exist also in the North Island. Meanwhile, as I have submitted in former despatches, it is alike more politic and more humane to outlive Maori disaffection than to attempt to put it down with the strong hand.

I have, &c.,

G. F. BOWEN.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Kimberley.

Respecting the Maori Meeting at Parihaka. Downing Street, 24th December, 1870.

SIR,—

I have to acknowledge your Despatch No. 123, of September 24th, enclosing a memorandum by Mr. Fox, expressing a hope, with reference to Native affairs, that two vessels of war at the least may be stationed in the New Zealand waters for the exclusive protection of the colony; and also a memorandum by Mr. McLean on the subject of the meeting of Natives at Parihaka.

Her Majesty's Government learn with pleasure that the presence of the "Blanche" near Taranaki was the means of giving a feeling of security to the inhabitants of New Plymouth during the recent Native meeting at Parihaka, and they have no intention of withdrawing the instructions already given to the officers commanding Her Majesty's ships to show themselves on the coasts of New Zealand, and in certain emergencies to assist in protecting the lives and property of the settlers; but those instructions must necessarily be subject to the general exigencies of the service, as in the case of all other parts of the Empire, and Her Majesty's Government could not enter into a positive engagement that a certain portion of Her Majesty's naval forces should be exclusively employed on the New Zealand coasts.

I have to add that a copy of this despatch will be sent to Commodore Stirling, for his information and guidance.

I have, &c.,

KIMBERLEY.

New Plymouth.—Respecting Wiremu Kingi. Government House, Wellington, N.Z., 18th March, 1872.
My LORD, —

It is with much satisfaction that I report, by the mail leaving Wellington to-day, an event to which great importance is rightly attached in this colony, as to afresh and significant proof of the establishment of permanent tranquillity.

- 2. The influential Maori chief and formidable warrior known among the English as William King, This is his baptismal name: his Maori surname is Te Rangitake. of Waitara, with whom the war of 1860 originated, and who has, during the last twelve years, continued in active hostility or sullen disaffection, has voluntarily come, attended by his principal clansmen and followers, into the Town of New Plymouth, made peace with the Government, and renewed the friendly relations which he maintained of old with the settlers. His return took place on the 22nd of February, which is the twelfth anniversary of the proclamation of martial law at Taranaki in 1860.
- 3. It will be recollected that William King, together with the other leading chiefs of the clan of the Ngatiawas, was among the first to welcome to this country, in 1840, the agents of the New Zealand Company, and that he fought gallantly on the side of the English in the first. Maori war (1845-48). The circumstances connected with his refusal to consent to the sale of a small block of land at Waitara, in the Province of Taranaki, and out of which the second Maori war arose, in 1860, are detailed at great length in the official correspondence and Parliamentary Papers of the years 1859-63, and have been the theme of much controversy both here and in England. After the cessation of active warfare at Taranaki, William King and his followers retired to the forests and mountains of the interior, where they remained for several years, steadily declining all communication with the Government and with the colonists. He had always waged a fair and honourable warfare, and had never been concerned, like Te Kooti and Kereopa, in the murder of unarmed men, or of women and children; so he was given to understand that no notice would be taken of his past conduct. On my first visit to Taranaki in 1869, See my Despatch No. 134, of 1869, printed at pages 129-139 of the Papers on New Zealand presented to Parliament on 8th April, 1870. when several other Maori chiefs lately in arms against the Crown came to welcome me and renewed their allegiance, William King also sent a message of a submissive and respectful character. It was then intimated to him by the Government that some land had been reserved for him near New Plymouth, to which he could return and live in peace.
- 4. I am confident that your Lordship will read with interest the enclosed report from the Minister for Native Affairs (Mr. McLean), describing the reception of William King at the Town of New Plymouth. It will be seen that the officers of Government and large numbers of the colonists assembled to give a hearty welcome, on his return among them, to the aged chief whom they had learned, during the last thirty years, to respect both as a staunch ally and as a gallant enemy. Mr. McLean observes, further, that the settlers with whom William King had formerly been acquainted brought their sons and daughters to see and be seen by him. One of the local newspapers adds as follows: "It was interesting to watch the curiosity of the children, who were allowed to enter the room in the Native Office where William King was sitting. The old chief seemed to enjoy the levée, for as each batch of children came in he laughed with delight as he took their tiny hands in his, and kindly shook them." Scenes like these reflect credit of all parties concerned, and are a happy augury for the future."
- 5. No chief or clan in arms against the Government during the war, which continued with little intermission from 1860 until 1870, now remains in hostility. Te Kooti, like Kereopa, was not a man of rank or importance, and owed his temporary influence among the Hauhau fanatics to his pretended supernatural powers. He is now a mere brigand, with only a handful of followers, and will probably, sooner or later, be captured, like Kereopa, by his own countrymen, and given up by them to justice.
- 6. The communications addressed to myself and to the Minister for Native Affairs, from all parts of the Island, give very satisfactory assurances of the establishment of permanent tranquillity.

I have, &c.,

G. F. BOWEN.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Kimberley.

Enclosure.MEMORANDUM by Mr. McLEAN, C.M.G.

THE Minister for Native Affairs is certain that His Excellency will be glad to hear that during a late visit to Whanganni and Taranaki he has been enabled to adjust various points in dispute in connection with land boundaries and other matters which had for some time been a cause of irritation among Native tribes.

The boundaries of the Native reserves made in the Rangitikei-Manawatu Block have been definitely fixed, to the entire satisfaction of the Natives concerned. Arrangements have also been entered into with a view to a more accurate definition of Native rights within the confiscated territory, and for the acquisition by purchase, with the good-will of the Natives, of such portions of land as they hold within it, but do not require for their own use, and which appear desirable for European settlements.

During the Native Minister's stay in Taranaki, William King, the chief with whom originated the war of 1860, emerged for the first time since that period from his strict seclusion in the forest ranges lying between Waitara and Whanganui. The reappearance of this chief and his followers, after an absence of twelve years, has inspired great confidence among both the Europeans and the Natives of the province, who unite in regarding his presence in their midst as the most significant indication and greatest assurance of future peace which has yet been manifested in the west coast district of the Northern Island. The entry into the town was made in a most orderly manner, the Natives, to the number of about four hundred, marching in ranks through the streets to their destination at the Native Office, where, in accordance with Maori custom, they were welcomed, and invited to partake of food. Every spot in the vicinity was crowded with Europeans, many of whom had known William King years ago, and all anxious to see the old chief of whom they had heard so much.

His Excellency will notice in the speeches allusions made to an ancient Maori custom, in accordance with which the march of a chief actuated by friendly intentions along paths hitherto trodden by war-parties only, was a sign of the extinction of all hostile feelings, and of the abandonment of all thoughts of revenge for the dead who had fallen during the war. [A report is appended of the proceedings at the meeting.]

During their stay at New Plymouth, the conduct of the visitors was all that could be desired, and William King himself became a centre of attraction, the old settlers whom he remembered bringing their children for him to see, and the chief evincing great delight at the notice thus taken of him.

The party set out from New Plymouth on the 26th instant, leaving behind them the impression among the settlers that no better augury could be found of a future state of quiet than the present resumption of amicable relations by tribes for so long a time estranged from both Europeans and friendly Natives residing within the settled districts.

Downing Street, 17th May, 1872.
SIR,—

I have received your Despatch No. 31, of 18th March, reporting the submission of the Maori chief, William King. I have much pleasure on this occasion in conveying to you the congratulations of Her Majesty's Government upon the success which has attended your endeavours and those of your Ministers to improve the relations between the Maoris and the settlers, and to make the Maoris sensible that their interests will be best promoted by abandoning hostility to the Government, and taking an active share in the works of improvement which are going on in the colony.

No. 1. Lord GLENELG to the Earl of DURHAM.

Downing Street, 5th February, 1838.

DEAR LORD DURHAM,—

From the various communications, both verbal and in writing, which have passed between us regarding the plan of colonizing New Zealand, it is clear that the Association are not prepared to accede to the conditions which the Government think indispensable to the granting of a charter, and especially to that condition which requires a subscribed capital on the part of the Association. Under these circumstances I am of course unable to recommend Her Majesty to grant the proposed charter.

I understand, however, that the Association now revert to their original intention of proceeding by a Bill in Parliament, and you ask me whether the Government will oppose the introduction of such a Bill, or will permit it to be introduced, for the purpose of insuring in the House of Commons a free and fair discussion of the objects contemplated by the measure. The subject has been considered by the Government, and I am to inform you that they will not oppose the introduction of such a Bill, nor throw any obstacle in the way of the principle and details of the plan being fully brought before the House of Commons and the public. At the same time, in withholding all opposition to the introduction of the Bill, the Government desire it to be distinctly understood that they do not in any degree pledge themselves to the future support of it, but that they hold themselves at liberty to take any course which they may think fit with regard to it in any of its subsequent stages.

I have received within the last few days a despatch from Sir R. Bourke, transmitting a report on the state of New Zealand from Captain Hobson, of Her Majesty's ship "Rattlesnake," with suggestions for a form of government intended to meet the peculiar circumstances in which those countries are now involved. This report, which has an important bearing on the subject in which the Association takes so much interest, will be laid before Parliament. I enclose a copy of it for your information.

I have, &c.,

GLENELG.

New Zealand Company's Enterprise not sanctioned by the British Government. Downing Street, 1st May, 1839.
SIR,—

I am directed by the Marquis of Normanby to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo.

In reply, I am directed to state that, until the deputation, of which you were a member, waited on Lord Normanby on that day, his Lordship was entirely ignorant of the course which the Company had adopted, or of the objects which it now appears they have in view. Lord Normanby now for the first time learns that a body of Her Majesty's subjects are about to proceed to New Zealand to purchase large tracts of land there, and to establish a system of government independent of the authority of the British Crown. It is impossible that his Lordship could do any act which could be construed into a direct or an indirect sanction of such a proceeding.

Abstaining from the expression of any opinion upon a measure so imperfectly developed in the papers which accompany your letter, Lord Normanby thinks it necessary that the parties concerned should be distinctly apprised that Her Majesty's Government cannot recognize the authority of the agents whom the Company may employ; and that if, as is probable, the Queen should be advised to take measures without delay to obtain cession in sovereignty to the British Crown of any parts of New Zealand which are or shall be occupied by Her Majesty's subjects, officers selected by the Queen will be appointed to administer the executive government within any such territory. Lord Normanby wishes it to be further understood that no pledge can be given for the future recognition by Her Majesty of any proprietary titles to land within New Zealand, which the Company or any other persons may obtain by grant or by purchase from the Natives. On the contrary, with a view to the protection of the interest of the aborigines, as well as to the future prosperity of any colony which may be established in New Zealand, it is probable that application to Parliament may hereafter become necessary to provide for the investment in the Crown of any proprietary rights which maybe thus acquired by private parties, with such equitable compensations to them as under all the circumstances of the case may appear to be expedient. Under these circumstances Lord Normanby must decline to furnish the Company with the introductory letters for which they apply.

I have, &c.,

HENRY LABOUCHERE.

No. 3. EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lord JOHN RUSSELL to Governor Sir GEORGE GIPPS.

Downing Street, 4th December, 1839.

I have to inform you that, since the date of those instructions addressed to you by the Mrquis of Normanby respecting New Zealand, a large body of persons have embarked for those islands.

I transmit to you, for your information, copies of a correspondence on this subject between this department and Mr. George Frederick Young.

However unjustifiable may be the course taken by the New Zealand Land Company, the persons who have embarked, being, for the most part, ignorant of the relations between this country and the New Zealanders, and not aware of the distinction between New Zealand and any of Her Majesty's possessions in Australia, are to be regarded with consideration and kindness.

At this distance from the scene of their destination I find it impossible to fetter the discretion of Captain Hobson by any instructions from which he cannot depart without reference to this country. I therefore authorize you to set Captain Hobson at liberty with respect to certain parts of his instructions which he may feel it impracticable, or highly inexpedient, to execute. In particular, with regard to the sale of land, it may be found impossible to realize the price of 12s. an acre, while that price is not demanded either at Sydney or in Western Australia, or in Van Diemen's Land. He may therefore reduce the price to 5s., until the higher price is the usual upset price in the Australian settlements.

With respect to the administration of justice still greater difficulty may occur. The correspondence on that subject with the New Zealand Land Company has ended by a withdrawal of their instructions, and an injunction to aid and assist Captain Hobson. Under these circumstances, one of Captain Hobson's first duties will be to establish a tribunal for the trial of crimes and the redress of civil injuries.

In reference to Captain Hobson's letter to Mr. Labouchere, of the 10th of August last, I perceive he speaks in the following terms with respect to the need of force to support his authority: "There are one or two subjects that have not been noticed, which I hope may still engage the attention of the Secretary of State. No allusion has been made to a military force, nor have any instructions been issued for the arming and equipping of militia. The presence of a few soldiers would check any disposition to revolt, and would enable me to forbid in a firmer tone those inhuman practices I have been ordered to restrain. The absence of such support, on the other hand, will encourage the disaffected to resist my authority, and may be the means of entailing on us eventually difficulties that I am unwilling to contemplate." I have proposed to Lord Hill to send a force of 100 men to New Zealand.

The first difficulty stated by Lord Hill—namely, the want of any settlement in New Zealand in which the Queen's authority is established—will be obviated by my giving authority to you to take that step, if necessary, when you shall have received intelligence that Captain Hobson has received a grant or cession of territory from the New Zealand chiefs in the North Island, or that he has established the Queen's authority in the Southern Island.

The precautions stated as necessary by Lord Hill deserve careful attention. It appears to me that a framework of barracks, or blockhouse, would be quite necessary. Perhaps field-pieces might not be required, but chevaux-de-frise and intrenching tools should not be omitted; likewise a surgeon, and some person qualified to act for commissariat duties.

I am informed by Lord Minto that a sloop of war will constantly be at the service of Captain Hobson, and I trust the marines employed may be found useful in preparing the means of defence for the detachment.

With these precautions, I authorize you, if necessary, to detach 100 men to aid Captain Hobson when he shall have assumed the title of Lieutenant-Governor of New Zealand.

On the Illegal Assumption of Authority in the Port Nicholson District.

WHEREAS certain persons residing at Port Nicholson, New Zealand, part of the dominion of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, have formed themselves into an illegal association, under the title of a council, and, in contempt of Her Majesty's authority, have assumed and attempted to usurp the powers vested in me by Her Majesty's Letters Patent for the government of the said colony, to the manifest injury and detriment of all Her Majesty's liege subjects in New Zealand:

Now, therefore, I, William Hobson, Lieutenant-Governor of New Zealand, command all persons connected with such illegal association immediately to withdraw therefrom; and I call upon all persons resident at Port Nicholson, or elsewhere, within the limits of this Government, upon the allegiance they owe to Her Majesty Queen Victoria, to submit to the proper authorities in New Zealand, legally appointed, and to aid and assist them in the discharge of their respective duties.

Given under my hand at Government House, Russell, Bay of Islands, this twenty-third day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty.

Wellington.—Reporting his Arrival and Proceedings at that Port. Port Nicholson, 20th June, 1840.
SIR,—

I have the honour to inform your Excellency that I arrived at this port on the evening of Tuesday, the 2nd June. I immediately sent Mr. Cole on shore with the Proclamations, and a letter to Colonel Wakefield, informing him that it was my intention to land to read them next day; but I was prevented by a heavy gale from landing until Thursday afternoon, previous to which I was waited on by Dr. Evans, Mr. Chaffers, and Mr. Tod, who informed me that the settlers were highly delighted at my arrival. They assured me that they had been greatly misrepresented. Dr. Evans stated that the council had been formed to keep the peace and for mutual protection until the arrival of your Excellency, or any persons appointed by you. I told him that I was disposed to view their proceeding in that light, provided the council vanished, and that the flags were immediately hauled down, but that any proposal from any body of persons assuming any power or rights I should consider hostile. He assured me of the loyalty of the emigrants, and that my wishes should be complied with. I landed at 2 o'clock, accompanied by Lieutenants Smart and Best, and attended by the mounted police. We were received by Colonel Wakefield, Dr. Evans, Captain Smith, R.N., and all the principal inhabitants. The Proclamations were responded to by three hearty cheers and a royal salute from the Europeans, and with a war-dance and general discharge of musketry from the Natives, who assembled in great numbers. I was again assured of the loyalty of the settlers, and that they were actuated in their proceedings solely with a view to preserve the peace and to protect their property. I have great pleasure in informing your Excellency that Her Majesty's government is fully established, and that both the European and Native population are in a very satisfactory state.

ADDRESS of the WELLINGTON SETTLERS.

To His Excellency Captain HOBSON, of the Royal Navy, Lieutenant-Governor of the Islands of New Zealand.
Port Nicholson, 1st July, 1840.
SIR,—

We, the undersigned inhabitants of the District of Port Nicholson, avail ourselves of the opportunity presented by the arrival of the Colonial Secretary with sufficient means for the protection of life and property, to express to your Excellency those sentiments of respect for yourself, and loyalty to the Crown, in which we yield to none other of Her Majesty's subjects in these Islands.

The peculiar circumstances in which we were placed before the establishment here of British authority, and the false reports which have been made to your Excellency, and of which we have heard with equal surprise and indignation, render it necessary for us to be the more explicit in our declaration of attachment to the Crown and Constitution of England, and to assure your Excellency that we took no steps but such as we thought consistent with our allegiance as British subjects and justified by the necessity of the case.

That such were our real feelings, and that our arrangements for the preservation of order were adopted by us as merely temporary and provisional, is proved by the acclamation with which the British flag was welcomed, as well as by the cordial support which has been rendered by all classes to the Colonial Secretary and the Magistrates, of which they themselves are the most competent witnesses.

We might add that in planning the surveys of our future town we had, as far as possible, anticipated the wants of Government, and set apart the most valuable sections of land for the convenience of the public offices and the personal accommodation of your Excellency, feeling assured, as we do, that sooner or later this must necessarily become the seat of Government for these Islands.

Should that prove the case, your Excellency may rest assured that you will be welcomed here by the largest body of Her Majesty's subjects in New Zealand, unanimous in their loyalty, and desirous of promoting by every means in their power the, comfort of your private life and the dignity of your public administration.

We have, &c.,

REPLY. Governor HOBSON to Colonel WAKEFIELD and Others.

July, 1840. SIR,—

I acknowledge with much satisfaction the address which you were deputed to present to me by the inhabitants of Port Nicholson, and I have to express my extreme gratification at receiving from them so very explicit a declaration of loyalty and attachment to the Crown and Constitution of England. At the same time, allow me to convey my sincere thanks for the very flattering sentiments of respect and consideration with which they have been pleased to honour me as the representative of Her Most Gracious Majesty. It has been a source of infinite gratification to me to learn, through the reports of the Colonial Secretary and Magistrates, the cordial support which has been rendered by all classes to the Government authorities at Port Nicholson; and I feel satisfied that the interests and prosperity of the colony will be best consulted by a continued perseverance in that line of conduct.

In conclusion, I beg to convey my thanks to you individually for the very kind and flattering manner with which you have been pleased to present the address, and to express my earnest hopes that, under the protection of Divine providence, the resources of these valuable and important Islands may be speedily developed.

I have, &c.,

Disputed Possession of Land at the Taranaki Pa, on Te Aro Flat.

WHEREAS on the evening of Wednesday last, the 26th of August, a serious breach of the peace took place relative to certain lands in dispute between the New Zealand Company and the Natives of Pa "Taranaki," and in order to prevent a recurrence of the same, I, Willoughby Shortland, a Magistrate and Colonial Secretary of New Zealand, having entered into an agreement with the Natives by which they have assigned over and yielded up to me, in the name and on the behalf of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, all their rights, titles, and interest in the lands aforesaid, do hereby give notice that all persons wishing to occupy any part of the said lands, until the question as to title shall be determined, or until the pleasure of His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor shall be known, will be placed in possession by application made to me, through Colonel Wakefield, the principal agent of the New Zealand Company; and all persons who shall attempt to take possession without such permission will be proceeded against according to law.

Given under my hand, at Port Nicholson, this 29th day of August, 1840.

WILLOUGHBY SHORTLAND, J.P., Colonial Secretary.

Wellington.—Lands in Dispute between the Natives and the New Zealand Company. Russell, 9th October, 1840.

SIR,—

In answer to your Excellency's letter directing me to furnish you with a written report respecting the land in dispute between the Natives of Port Nicholson and the New Zealand Land Company, I have the honour to inform your Excellency that the chief Moturoa stated to me that he had not sold his land to the Company; that he had neither signed their deed of conveyance nor received any part of the payment given to the other chiefs. Moturoa possesses a considerable part of the land, both at Pipitea and Te Aro (or Taranaki), on which the Company's town has been laid out.

Te Aro Pa.

The Natives who reside at Pa Taranaki complained to me shortly after my arrival that the Company's surveyors were placing marks on their land: they said they had not sold it, and would not give it up; that the land belonged to them, and not to Wharepouri and Te Puni and the chiefs who had sold their land to the Company. At the same time they stated that a case of muskets and some blankets had been given them by the chiefs, and also some blankets by Colonel Wakefield, for permission to allow the surveyors' points to remain unmolested.

When the selection of town-acre sections commenced, the Natives, having heard reports that they were to be dispossessed of their lands and driven to the mountains, again came to me, and amongst others Te Puni, Wairarapa, and Pourotu. On my inquiring whether the lands claimed by Moturoa and the Natives of Pa Taranaki belonged to Wharepouri and themselves, they replied that they did not. I then asked them whether they had sold the lands claimed by those chiefs to Colonel Wakefield. Te Puni answered, "Yes. How could I help it, when I saw so many muskets and blankets before me?"

The chiefs of Pa Taranaki invariably maintained that they had not sold their land, and persisted in disputing the Company's claim to it; and the dispute was not arranged until I entered into the agreement which I had the honour to forward your Excellency from Port Nicholson.

I have. &c.,

WILLOUGHBY SHORTLAND

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor.

No. 9. The Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY to His Excellency the LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR.

Wellington.—Reporting on the Port Nicholson District. Russell, 10th October, 1840.

SIR,—

I have the honour to forward, for your Excellency's information, the following report of Port Nicholson and the adjacent country.

Port Nicholson is situated about fifty miles from Cape Palliser, the north-east entrance of Cook Straits. The principal headlands are rugged and precipitous, and off them extend long ledges of rocks, which present anything but an inviting appearance to strangers. The harbour is at the bottom of a deep bay, and its entrance is not easily distinguished until you arrive close off the heads, on account of a reef of rocks which appear across it; but, when inside, it opens out into a beautiful and extensive harbour, in which there are no dangers of any consequence: the anchorage in Lambton Harbour is extremely good, but the one off the beach at Pitone is by no means safe. Its principal defects are the violent winds, which always blow in and out of the harbour, and with such force as to prevent merchant ships from either entering or going out; but a lighthouse and good pilots would in a great measure obviate these difficulties. The bay is capacious; it is surrounded by high and broken hills, except on the north-east side, where there is an extensive valley, through which four rivers—or, rather, a river dividing itself into four branches—run. Its soil is very rich, but it is very heavily timbered, and subject to inundations, and the hills rise abruptly on each side. I was informed that about fifteen miles from Pitone there is an extensive forest of totara, which timber ranks next in value to the kauri. The only, level space in the bay is on the south-west side, where there is about a thousand acres of undulating land, six hundred acres of which are available for a site for a town. There is a large extent of water frontage, and an abundant supply of fresh water from various streams which run from the hills by which it is unfortunately surrounded; they are so rugged and broken as to almost prevent access to the adjacent country. This is the site selected by the New Zealand Company.

The land immediately around Port Nicholson, available for agricultural purposes, is by no means extensive. An industrious yeomanry might gain a good subsistence, and sufficient supply might be raised for a considerable population, but there is no field for extensive agricultural operations. The formation of the country is clay, sand, and clay-slate, over which there is but a thin deposit of vegetable mould, which, although rich, will not bear continued cultivation, as may be seen by observing the hills, on which there is no timber; they are totally devoid of soil, and only covered with low fern and coarse grass. The climate is healthy, but cold; in the winter the hills are covered with snow. During my residence of four months there were continually heavy gales, with a great deal of rain.

Port Nicholson is important only as a port of deposit,—to what extent must depend on the value of the country between Porirua, Waikanae, Taranaki, and Kaipara, and the capabilities of the Port of Manukau: should that port prove sufficiently good to command the trade of the coast in connection with the capital, the importance of Port Nicholson will be considerably diminished: The whaleships resort entirely to the ports of the Middle Island, which are easy of access, and nearer their whaling ground.

I was not able to visit the districts of Waikanae and Taranaki; but I was informed from undoubted authority that there are vast tracts of rich land available for agricultural purposes, and a great quantity of indigenous grass. There are also harbours fit for small coasters at Mana, Kapiti, Waikanae, and Kawhia; and I believe there is an anchorage at Taranaki. I was informed by the Natives that there is an extensive and beautiful valley at Palliser Bay, but it is not easy of access by land from Port Nicholson on account of the high hills.

Dr. Dieffenbach told me that the country about Blind Bay was worthy of attention, and I have since been informed that there is a good harbour there, and a level tract of country. There is also coal in that district.

I have, &c.,

WILLOUGHBY SHORTLAND.

His Excellency Lieutenant-Governor Hobson.

Downing Street, 21st November, 1840.

SIR,—

I have received your Despatch No. 66, of the 29th May last, transmitting a copy of the address with which you opened the session of the Legislative Council of New South Wales, and in which you stated that a Bill to empower the Governor of New South Wales to appoint Commissioners to examine and report on claims to grants of land in New Zealand would be proposed for the consideration of that body.

On the Position of the New Zealand Company.

I transmit to you herewith copies of a correspondence which has passed between this department and the gentlemen associated under the name of "The New Zealand Company," with regard to the rights which may have been acquired by the company, and the terms on which their corporate existence would be sanctioned by Her Majesty's Government. You will defer the execution of any powers that may be given to you by the Bill above alluded to, should it pass into law, until you shall receive further instructions from me on the subject.

Land Claims Commissioner to be appointed.

You will understand, however, that it is not my intention to abandon the plan of instituting a Commission to inquire into the titles or claims to land in New Zealand, but that, on the contrary, I fully intend to carry it into execution, and that I write the present instructions in order that means may be taken for executing it with the greater accuracy as well as acknowledged impartiality. For this purpose I shall probably find it necessary to send out a Commissioner from this country.

I have, &c.,

J. RUSSELL.

His Excellency Governor Sir George Gipps.

ADDRESS of MAGISTRATES, WELLINGTON, to His Excellency Governor HOBSON.

Address of Magistrates to Captain Hobson, R N., on the Establishment of a Separate Government in New Zealand.

To His Excellency Captain Hobson, R.N., Governor and Commauder-in-Chief of the Islands of New Zealand.

WE, the undersigned, holding the office of Magistrates in New Zealand, avail ourselves of the present opportunity of offering our congratulations to your Excellency upon the independent position in which the colony intrusted to your government is now placed; and at the same time we take the liberty of offering some suggestions with regard to the future government of this colony which appear to us of the utmost importance.

We have long deeply regretted that any circumstances should have arisen tending to disturb those amicable relations between your Excellency and the settlers of Port Nicholson which, for the interest of the settlers and the honour of the Crown, it is most desirable to maintain; and we rejoice at the intelligence recently received from England, because it appears to afford the means of establishing these relations upon a firm basis, and of enabling your Excellency to rally round your Government the entire British population of these Islands. We are most anxious that any misconception that may have arisen as to the feelings or intentions of your Excellency should be removed, and that the Government and the colonists should combine to give the utmost development to the vast natural resources of the colony. We are willing to believe that, whatever difference of opinion may exist as to the means by which this result is to be attained, there is on the part of your Excellency a sincere desire to advance the general interests of the colony, and that no sacrifice on your part will be deemed too great if it be found necessary for that purpose.

We do not presume to question the eligibility of the spot selected by your Excellency for the seat of Government in reference to the objects for which it was originally chosen. If no settlement of British subjects had been established in New Zealand, it is possible that the Town of Auckland might have advantageously formed the capital of the country, and the centre from which colonization should spread. We however venture to submit that the actual circumstances of the colony must neutralize, to a very great extent, whatever advantages may belong to that position, and must render the establishment of the seat of Government there inconvenient to the Governor, and injurious to the vast majority of those whose interests it is the duty, and, we are assured, no less the desire, of your Excellency to protect. The most weighty and numerous functions of Government will in such case be exercised in ignorance of the state of three-fourths of the British population of the Islands; and, while the proceeding both of the Legislature and Executive will often be seriously impeded by this circumstance, it cannot but happen that the interests of the settlers in this district must suffer deeply from the same cause.

The recent negotiations in England between Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies and the directors of the New Zealand Company have placed the settlers at Port Nicholson in an entirely different position from that which they formerly occupied. They are no longer an assemblage of individuals irregularly establishing themselves in a foreign country, beyond the protection or control of Great Britain; nor are they squatters upon Government land, liable to be dispossessed of their property, and having no claim to recognition by Government. They form at the present moment a recognized community at least six times more numerous than any other in New Zealand, holding their lands under a title from the Crown, having contributed largely to the public revenue, and, above all, forming the nucleus of the only extensive and systematic scheme for covering with an active and industrious population the fertile wastes of the Island. The arrangements of the New Zealand Company are so far matured that within the course of the next twelve months at least five thousand additional settlers will be landed at Port Nicholson, while it is not too much to assert that within the same period not one-tenth of that number will immigrate either from Great Britain or from the neighbouring colonies to any other port. In every particular, therefore, they are entitled to expect from Government a consideration proportioned to their numbers. Especially are they entitled to expect that the local Legislature shall be established in that part of the Island where the greatest interests are at stake, and that the members of that Legislature who are not officers of the Crown should be selected from their body. It would be invidious, and could hardly fail to result in injustice, if the community of eight thousand persons should be subject to the control of individuals selected from a population of less than three hundred, ignorant of their wants, and having different and perhaps opposite interests.

The present position of the settlers at Port Nicholson is changed, moreover, in another most important respect. A very few months since it appeared as though all communication between that harbour and the fertile districts of the West Coast must take place by water; the hills surrounding the port were regarded as impassable barriers, over which no practicable road could be carried; and thus it was assumed that Port Nicholson, whatever its other advantages, was ill adapted to form a centre from which the settlers might radiate. Recent investigations have disproved this assumption, and a road is now nearly completed to Porirua, which brings the settlers immediately upon the rich belt of land at the base of the Tararua and Tongariro mountains, including the whole Taranaki district, and watered by numerous rivers, two of which, the Whanganui and the Manawatu, are hardly inferior in importance to the Thames itself.

Not merely is it important for the sake of the settlers at Port Nicholson, but we would suggest that the honour of your Excellency, which is deeply involved in the tranquillity and progress of the colony, equally requires that the seat of Government should be established at Port Nicholson. The relations between the British settlers and the Native population are at present in an undefined and uncertain state; there is no question connected with the colonization of New Zealand in which the interests of humanity are more deeply concerned, and none perhaps which is more likely to excite the attention of the British public; but it is obvious that these relations, which may be expected every day to become more complicated, cannot be superintended by your Excellency at a distance of several hundred miles, with no certain or regular means of communication between Port Nicholson and the present seat of Government. The settlers are already brought into contact with a Native population of probably twenty thousand persons. Without the presence of some controlling power which may challenge the respect and submission of the Natives, and may at the same time inspire them with confidence that they shall be maintained in the full enjoyment of their lawful rights, it is impossible to assert that the peaceful intercourse hitherto so happily maintained will be permanent. If from the absence of such a power any dissension should unfortunately arise, the presence of your Excellency will be imperatively required; but it may then be too late to cure the evils which an early residence in this place might have prevented: deep-seated distrust and enduring hostility may take the place of the kindness and confidence at present existing; and such feelings, while they would give a serious check to the progress of settlement in every part of New Zealand, could only result in the destruction of the Native population, or their being driven from the present seats of their tribes to take refuge in the mountains of the interior. Such results every humane and just man, and no one more than your Excellency, must be anxious at any cost to avoid, but no effectual safeguard against their occurrence can be found other than the establishment of the seat of Government at this port.

We would further venture to suggest that the terms accorded by the Home Government to the New Zealand Company afford to your Excellency an opportunity of freeing yourself from the invidious duties of Land Commissioner, and of devoting your undivided attention to the discharge of the higher functions of government. We may even express our belief that, in according these terms, it was the intention of Her Majesty's Ministers, as far as possible without creating an absolute monopoly, to place the disposal of the waste lands in New Zealand in the hands of that Company, subject undoubtedly to the supervision of the Governor of the colony. This arrangement would place your Excellency in the most advantageous position for protecting the interests of the settlers, and for guiding the progress of settlement. Instead of rivalry, undignified if not absolutely injurious, between the Colonial Government and a private and powerful company, there would be a combination of efforts for the one great object of colonizing, in the briefest period, and in the most advantageous mode, the Islands of New Zealand. In this work there would be due subordination, the operations of the Company being performed under the eye of your Excellency; but this advantage can only be obtained by making Port Nicholson the seat of Government.

We are assured that your Excellency cannot be insensible to these considerations. We have not dwelt upon particular inconveniences to be experienced by the settlers in this district, such as the distance of the Courts of law, and the consequent difficulty and delay in obtaining justice, the want of a power for local improvements, and other similar topics, because the charter of incorporation promised by the Home Government will afford a partial, if not a complete, remedy for these wants. We have touched only upon those points which appear to us to affect the interests of the whole colony, and in which the Government is in no less concerned than the colonists. We are assured that among the whole body of the settlers at this port there is an earnest desire to witness the arrival of your Excellency among them as a permanent resident, and that all classes would unite in a cordial support of your government.

We entreat you to believe that in thus addressing you we are actuated by a sincere desire to see your Excellency's Government established upon a prosperous and permanent footing.

The Governor's Reply.

GENTLEMEN,—

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your address, and to present my best thanks for the congratulations you offer on the independent position of this colony, over which Her Majesty has done me the honour to appoint me Governor.

You are pleased to express deep regret that any circumstance should have taken place tending to disturb those amicable relations between me and the settlers of Port Nicholson, which, for the honour of the Crown and the interest of the colony, it is desirable to maintain. In this sentiment I most earnestly and cordially concur, and I shall hail with extreme satisfaction any disposition on the part of the settlers to restore that harmony which you very justly observe is so highly essential for the development of the resources of the colony, and which you do mo but justice in believing I am most desirous to cultivate.

Gentlemen, I should hold it to be inexpedient and improper for me to enter into any discussion with you upon suggestions you have thought fit to offer on the future government of this colony. But I hesitate not to assure you that your interests shall not be neglected; that every measure shall be taken in strict accordance with Her Majesty's gracious pleasure, as conveyed to me by Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies; and that such suggestions as you have already offered in your address, or may hereafter offer, for the benefit of the settlers in the southern districts shall receive due consideration. I have reason to hope that when the arrangements of Government are fully complete many of the inconveniences of which you complain will be found susceptible of easy adjustment; and I will not allow myself to believe that I shall be denied the satisfaction of soon meeting the settlers at Port Nicholson on terms of mutual confidence.

I have, &c.,

Wellington.—In Reply to Petition of Settlers, praying for the Governor's Removal. Government House, Auckland, 5th August, 1841.

MY LORD,—

I have the honour to refer your Lordship to a petition addressed to Her Majesty from some of the inhabitants of Port Nicholson, praying for my removal from this Government, which I apprehend was forwarded in the early part of June in this year, a copy of which is contained in the file of papers I herewith transmit.

It is highly repugnant to my feelings to offer any defence against charges so unjust and so unfounded; but, for your Lordship's information, I beg to state that I deny that Port Nicholson is either geographically or locally adapted for a seat of Government I deny also that I have ever sent a vessel to entice away from Port Nicholson any artificers or labourers who could be induced to leave that settlement, and I beg respectfully to submit to your Lordship that, in the absence of any clue to or knowledge of the intentions of Her Majesty's Government towards the settlers at Port Nicholson, and without the authority usually vested in a Governor, I could not visit that settlement with any advantage to the inhabitants. These three allegations form the grounds of the petition. The first is met by a contradiction founded on authority the most authentic and disinterested that could be procured. The second I deny in distinct and positive terms; premising, however, that I did cause to be hired for the service of Government, in erecting this house, the mechanics and labourers mentioned in the margin, for whom a free passage was provided in a ship that was casually passing between the ports; but, so far from this step being taken in a clandestine manner, I advertised for workmen generally throughout the colony, without reference to Port Nicholson more than any other settlement where there might be men wanting employment. To the third I trust your Lordship will consider that I have given a sufficient reply.

Four pair of sawyers, 2 stonemasons, 4 carpenters, 5 labourers.

Wellington.—In Reply to Complaints of New Zealand Company against Governor Hobson. Downing Street, 19th August, 1841.

SIR,—

I am directed by Lord John Russell to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo, in which you complain of the unfavourable view which Governor Hobson appears to take on all occasions of the proceedings of the New Zealand Company, and of its agent and officers in the colony. His Lordship desires me to acquaint you, in reply, that the friendly relations which it is so important to maintain between the Governor of New Zealand and the Company's agents would, in his opinion, be rather impeded than advanced by making the subject of correspondence and admonition those misunderstandings which unfortunately have arisen while the parties were in ignorance of the negotiations which passed between the Company and Her Majesty's Government at the close of last year.

Equitable Arrangements with Natives will be sanctioned. Barrett's Hotel, Wellington, 5th September, 1841.
SIR,—

In order to enable you to fulfil the engagements which the Company have entered into with the public, I beg to acquaint you, for your private guidance and information, that the local Government will sanction any equitable arrangement you may make, to induce those Natives who reside within the limits referred to in the accompanying schedule to yield up possession of their habitations; but I beg you clearly to understand that no force or compulsory measure for their removal will be permitted. I have made this communication private, lest profligate or disaffected persons, arriving at the knowledge of such an arrangement, might prompt the Natives to make exorbitant demands.

Port Nicholson.—Forwarding Chief Protector's Report on the Occupation of Lands by the New Zealand Company. Government House, Auckland, New Ulster, 13th November, 1841.

My Lord,—

I have the honour to lay before, your Lordship the report of George Clarke, Esq., Chief Protector of Aborigines, on the state of feeling evinced by the Native chiefs in and about Port Nicholson respecting the occupation of lands in that neighbourhood by the New Zealand Company.

From the conflicting and various statements and contradictions which are advanced on this subject, I find it impossible to arrive at any definite conclusion. Nor ought any decision to be come to until the case is fairly weighed and considered by the Commissioner who is appointed to investigate these claims. To avert, however, the mischievous consequences that would result from any collision between the settlers and the Natives, I thought it right to hear the complaints of the Natives against the encroachments of the Company, and to pledge the Government to protect the aborigines in the possession of their pas and cultivated grounds, unless it is proved that they have sold them.

According to Mr. Clarke's experience, there is no instance of Natives selling their dwelling-places or cultivated lands except when they quit the spot on which they are situated; and I certainly have found that to be the custom in every case that has come under my own observation.

At Port Nicholson there are two pas, situated in the most eligible parts of the town, which the agent of the Company has included in the block he purchased from a chief named Wharepouri, although they are owned and occupied by other chiefs. The agent of the Company asserts, however, that these other chiefs shared in the payment for the land, and consequently alienated their rights. This the Natives most pertinaciously deny; and Mr. Clarke maintains that such a proceeding would be completely at variance with Native custom, as the two tribes have continued to reside on their pas ever since. The agent for the Company, I suppose calculating on getting possession, has, notwithstanding the Native claims, included these pas in the disposable land, and has allowed them to be selected by purchasers. This very dubious step may involve the Company in great embarrassment and litigation, as against any compulsion the Natives shall be amply protected by the Government, and they seem perfectly resolute in resisting all offers of compensation. In other places I fear it will be found that the precipitancy of the Company's agent will involve the Company and the settlers in still greater difficulties: resistance is offered to them in every quarter. At Porirua, which immediately adjoins Wellington, the Natives deny the right of the Company, and are prepared to resist them, even by force. On the east bank of the Whanganui the same feeling exists; and at Taranaki the powerful tribe of the Waikatos threaten to dislodge the settlers, as they did not buy the land from them, who claim it in right of conquest.

During my stay at Port Nicholson I had an opportunity of meeting many of the resisting chiefs. Those residing in the Town of Wellington, who feel that they are completely at the mercy of the white people, rely solely on the Government for support, and say, "If the Governor desert us, we will retire to our original place of residence at Tarauaki." The Natives of Kapiti, who claim the land at Porirua, speak out more boldly, asserting that they will surrender their land but with their lives; and they have already made a show of following up this determination, by interrupting the construction of a road through the disputed lands, and obstructing the communication between Wellington and Whanganui, by tapuing a river over which it was necessary to pass.

On these latter subjects I informed the principal chief, Hiko, that the right of constructing roads through the colony belonged to the Queen; and that, whilst I faithfully supported the Natives in their just rights, I would as firmly maintain those of Her Majesty, and that I trusted that I should hear no more of such resistance to measures which were intended alike for the benefit of the Native and European population. He received this hint with perfect good feeling, and promised that in future no interruption should be offered. His discussion with Colonel Wakefield respecting his land is fully reported by Mr. Clarke; and I must say it left an impression on my mind that he has not sold it.

The Natives of Whanganui have followed a very similar course with those of Porirua, as will be seen from the enclosed extract of the Police Magistrate's report. I have reason, however, to hope that a payment of money will induce these people to forego any further opposition; and the principal chief of the Waikato Tribe, Te Wherowhero, has already consented to accept compensation, to the value of £250, for the claims of his tribe on the lands of Taranaki.

I have communicated to Colonel Wakefield that the native pas and cultivations must be respected; and that, for the rest, it might be necessary to make further payments to remove all difficulties. I trust this course will have the effect of preserving harmony between the settlers and the Natives.

I have, &c.,

W. HOBSON.

Warning Settlers not to negotiate for Land within the New Zealand Company's Blocks.

WHEREAS it hath been represented to me that certain persons have endeavoured, or are endeavouring, to acquire a property in certain portion or tracts of land, by purchase or leases from the aboriginal inhabitants of this colony, within the limits of the blocks of land already selected, or about to be selected, under the sanction of Government, by the agents of the New Zealand Company in the settlements of Port Nicholson, at the Wairarapa, on the coast from Port Nicholson to Taranaki, at Nelson, Port Cooper, and elsewhere; and that such persons state that they are doing so under the sanction of His Excellency the Governor: Now, I hereby give notice that the Governor has consented to waive the right of pre-emption on the part of the Crown in favour of the New Zealand Company alone in the settlements and districts before mentioned; and that any bargains made by private individuals with the aborigines for the purpose of acquiring land, whether by purchase, lease, or otherwise, within such districts, above mentioned, will not be sanctioned or recognized by the Government.

I therefore hereby warn all persons from entering into any such negotiation with the aborigines, which can only end in the loss and disappointment of the parties concerned, besides having a decided tendency to obstruct and, in a great measure, retard the settlement of the very important questions in the course of adjudication between the Government, the New Zealand Company, and the aborigines; upon the final adjustment of which the prosperity of these settlements so much depends.

Relative Position of Europeans and Aborigines. Wellington, 2nd July, 1844.

(Confidential.)

SIR,—

The various communications which I have had the honour to forward by post up to this date will have put your Excellency in possession of my proceedings in the execution of my commission as fully as despatches written before the completion of the duty, and during my transit from one part of the colony to another, have afforded me the opportunity; but that portion of your Excellency's letter of the 3rd ultimo in which you are pleased to express a desire to receive further communication from me on the subject of the relative position generally of the European and aboriginal races demands my immediate attention, and I embrace the earliest opportunity of complying with your Excellency's wishes.

Further experience gained during the last six months while I have been, if not actually residing amongst, yet in constant communication with the Natives respecting disputed claims to land, has led to the confirmation to the fullest extent of the opinion I have before expressed as to the absolute necessity of the introduction into this colony of a naval and military force sufficiently strong to convince the Natives of our power to enforce obedience to the laws, and of the utter hopelessness of any attempt on their part at resistance to its execution.

I have before so often had occasion to describe the cause which, in my opinion, first led the Natives to doubt the justice of our intentions towards, and subsequently to suppose us too weak and too cowardly to attempt any coercive measures against them, that it is now needless to do more than advert to the effects produced, and the present actual state of the Natives as regards their opinions of and intentions towards the European settlers. At the same time, I wish your Excellency clearly to understand that I intend my observations to apply to the districts in the South which I have visited, and which may be totally different from the districts in the northern part of the colony where the same causes have not existed to produce similar results.

In the execution of my official duties as Commissioner in the settlements of the New Zealand Company, in investigating the claims to land of that body, it has happened that, with scarcely an exception, I have had occasion to decide in favour generally of the Natives. This circumstance would fairly lead to the inference that this race at least would now place confidence in my decisions, and show a disposition to abide by and obey them; but it is with regret that I am compelled to admit that the fact is precisely the reverse of this. In cases where they have only sought for compensation, and never denied a partial sale, the moment the amount to be paid them was decided upon they began to object to accept it, and to propose terms that could not be entertained. In fact, it appears to me that they have determined totally to disregard British law and authority, and that they have come to the conclusion that we are not strong enough to enforce the one or maintain the other. This state of things appears to me as detrimental to the interests of one race as the other, stopping the wholesome progress of colonization, and totally preventing the European settlers from benefiting the aborigines by teaching them the usefulness of habits of industry, and the advantages attendant upon civilization.

It appears to me that, before we can now carry out the philanthropic principles that were stated to be the objects of the colonization of New Zealand, it is absolutely essential that we should, by a demonstration of physical force, show our actual power; and, having once done this, I think their conviction of the real benefits conferred upon them by the residence amongst them of Europeans would speedily follow; and I am clearly of opinion that the actual introduction of a sufficient force is as necessary to the Natives as to the Europeans. In support of this argument, I beg to state that I have been assured, from undoubted authority, that the majority of the rising Native generation, who have enjoyed the advantages of education and Christianity, are of this opinion, being convinced that such a measure alone will insure the prosperity of the colony. They say: "Do not send a few soldiers: that will do no good. Send so many that there can be no mistake about the power they would have in making the old men do what they ought." And, as far as the European population is concerned, I consider that, unless the introduction of the force I have recommended takes place, an extensive colonization of these Islands cannot be hoped for or reasonably expected.

The present disposition to encroachment manifested by the Natives, and the unprotected position of the settlers in this part of the colony, are now becoming daily more visible to the European residents, and must soon become known to that portion of the English public whose attention, from various causes, is directed to the colonization of these Islands.

We have every reason to anticipate, under favourable circumstances, the influx of a considerable and influential body of colonists, and the advantages to be derived by the Native race from an intercourse with such a class of persons can scarcely be estimated.

I have now seen a great deal of the country, and I am preparing a detailed account of my late journey for your Excellency, which will afford you some interesting information, and may prove useful. One fact, however, that has every day forced itself upon my observation, I think applicable to my present argument. I have travelled over a country where I found millions of acres of first-rate available land, upon which the human foot has scarcely ever trod, showing the capability of this country for maintaining a very large population; and it does appear truly lamentable that the present few inhabitants should be differing on the subject of land, when there is so much more of that commodity available for every purpose than can be required for centuries to come.

I am clearly of opinion that at the Hutt, Whanganui, Taranaki, and other places, the Natives, attracted by European settlements, and feeling the advantages of bartering with the settlers, have come and cultivated land in the immediate neighbourhood of those places, which they would not otherwise have thought of taking possession of. Again, at Taranaki I found the Natives little disposed to abide by my award, and offering various obstructions to the settlers, not because they wanted the land themselves, but merely to prevent the Europeans from making use of it.

The places, then, that occur to me as requiring the immediate presence of a military force are....; and I should recommend an augmentation of the force at this place. I think the appearance of the soldiers, and the occasional visit of a man-of-war, would alone produce the required effect, without rendering any positive attack necessary; and I am convinced that the residence of the military would soon restore confidence between the two races, and tend to their mutual benefit. God forbid that I should recommend the introduction of a military force for the purpose of recklessly attacking the Natives. My decided opinion is that the moral effect produced by a demonstration will be alone sufficient, and will prevent the shedding of blood which must otherwise, sooner or later, take place, and which would, in all probability, end in the ultimate total destruction of the aboriginal race.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM SPAIN.

Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE.

Wellington.—As to Exceptions made in Grants issued to new Zealand Company. Government House, Auckland, 14th September, 1846.

SIR,—

In reply to your Despatch No. 14, of the 21st March last, directing me to afford such necessary relief to the New Zealand Company as it might be in my power to adopt, in reference to certain complaints made in a letter addressed to you by the Secretary of the Company on the 28th February last, regarding various exceptions which had been made in deeds of grant offered to them for their lands in the Port Nicholson and Nelson districts, I beg to state that, long previously to the receipt of your despatch, the same complaints had been addressed to me by the agent of the Company in the colony, and that on my consulting the Law Officers of the Crown on the subject they stated it as their opinion that the exceptions in these grants objected to by the Company were such as to afford them reasonable ground of complaint. The enclosed copy of the instructions I have issued to Lieutenant-Colonel McCleverty will show the manner in which I have proposed to relieve the Company from the difficulties arising from the loose exceptions which have been made in their grants of all Native pas and cultivations, &c.; and, in reference to their complaint of the reservation of certain spots in the Town of Wellington to private purchasers, to whom deeds of grant have actually been made, I have the honour to report that, acting under the advice of the Law Officers of the Crown, I addressed a warrant to the Attorney-General, directing that proper means should be taken for applying to the local Courts to annul the grants which have been so made, it being the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown that when the Crown had been recommended to make these grants it had not been advised of all the circumstances of the case, and had injured the rights of other parties.

I have, &c.,

G. GREY.

The Right Hon. W. E.
Gladstone, &c.

Port Nicholson. 14th September, 1846.

THE question of the cultivated lands reserved to the Natives of Port Nicholson and its vicinity is one of some difficulty.

The Government were pledged by an arrangement concluded with the Natives by Governor Fitzroy to secure them all the pas, burial-places, and grounds actually in cultivation by the Natives; the limits of the pas to be the grounds fenced in around the Native houses or huts, without the fence, and the cultivations being those tracts of land which are now used by the Natives for vegetable productions, or which had been so used by any aboriginal natives of New Zealand since the establishment of the colony. This description was very vague, and, as the lands intended to be included in it were not at that time defined, it has now become almost impossible to tell whether many portions of land, now in cultivation by the Natives, or which were formerly so, have been occupied by the Natives since the date of this arrangement with Governor Fitzroy, in which case they will of course have no title to them, or whether, though now retaining marks of having been under cultivation, they had ceased to be cultivated before the formation of the colony, in which case also they would be excluded from the class of lands contemplated by Governor Fitzroy. In short, it has become almost impossible to tell what lands were included in this agreement. The Government have made an attempt to remedy this evil by directing that a survey should be made by Government officers of all portions of land which they regarded as being secured to the Natives by Governor Fitzroy's arrangement. This survey is now probably very nearly completed; the amount of land included in it is estimated at about three hundred and eighty acres, and in this quantity are, I believe, included all lands claimed by the Natives. These lands consist principally of cultivated grounds scattered in small patches of a few acres throughout sections owned by European proprietors, whose farms are in many instances rendered comparatively valueless by the isolated patches of cultivation which are dotted throughout them. As might be anticipated, from the looseness of the original agreements, and from the circumstances above stated, the settlers in many instances contend that the lands regarded by the Government surveyors as included in Governor Fitzroy's arrangement ought to be excluded from it.

The manner in which the Native reserves have been administered in Port Nicholson has somewhat contributed to increase these evils. I will point out presently, in general terms, the evils which I believe to have resulted from the mode in which lands were in the first instance reserved for the Natives; but, in addition to these general evils, the following ones, peculiar to Port Nicholson, will be found to exist: The Company's lands in that district were to a great extent sold to absentee proprietors, and to the present day are only to a very limited extent occupied by Europeans. At the first settlement of Port Nicholson by Europeans the Natives continued as before to cultivate exactly where, and in each position to exactly what extent, they pleased. Those persons who were charged with the administration of the Native reserves were probably, from this cause, led to believe that, as the Natives rarely occupied their reserves, they did not require them for the purpose of cultivation or of residence. In this view they resolved to appropriate them for the purpose of raising a future revenue for the Natives, and they let some of the best of the reserves on very long leases to Europeans, who forthwith began to clear and make substantial improvements on them, and in some instances sublet them. Hence, when, from the spread of European population over the country, the settlers began to require lands which they had purchased, and which were occupied by Natives, the Government found it impossible to put the Natives in possession of these reserves (without which they had no means of subsistence) unless they got rid of the tenants to whom they had been leased, by paying them enormous sums as compensation, and the Natives, having no other lands to go upon, sturdily retained possession of the spots they had occupied. This state of things produced the most serious evils, led to constant and violent disputes between the Europeans and Natives, prevented the progress of the settlement, and afforded a constant ground of dispute between two races of people who could most materially assist each other, and who have positively no other ground whatever of jealousy or difference between them.

The mode by which I have hitherto endeavoured to get rid of this difficulty has been as follows: To ascertain exactly what lands the Natives are entitled to. If they are in possession of lands the bonâ fide property of settlers, as there have been no reserves at my disposal on which the Natives could be placed, I have purchased, at the expense of the Government, lands for them in spots selected by themselves and of such extent and quality as to render them good and obedient citizens, by giving them a valuable and permanent interest in the prosperity of the country, and, having made over these lands to them, I required them to surrender to Europeans the properties to which they were justly entitled. I proposed in the same manner, in dealing with the question of the other Native cultivations required by Europeans, to inquire in all instances whether the Natives had sufficient lands for their wants, exclusive of those required by the Europeans. If they had, I would encourage them to sell to the Europeans at a moderate price those portions of their cultivations which interfered with the operations of the European settler, and I believe the Natives would in almost every instance gladly accede to an arrangement of the kind. If the Natives have not sufficient lands for their wants, exclusive of that portion of their cultivations which may be required by the settler, I would recommend that the settler or the Company should be required to pay to the Government such sum as Colonel McCleverty may think proper, and that he should thereupon recommend the Government to purchase for the Natives some portions of land selected by themselves, which should be given to them in lieu of those cultivations required by the Europeans; and it would be essential that every exchange of this kind should be one which is rather advantageous to the Natives than otherwise, not only for the purpose of securing their immediate and cheerful acquiescence in the exchange, but with a view to securing, together, with their comfort, their attachment to the form of government under which they live.

Such an arrangement can only be carried out by an immediate expenditure for the purchase of the requisite lands on the part of the Government. If such an expenditure were never to be refunded I should feel justified in incurring it. A settlement of this vexatious question, by restoring tranquillity and the confidence of the Natives, will save a large military and naval expenditure, and will extensively promote internal production and commerce; but the fact is that, besides producing these advantages, the expense incurred may very soon be refunded to the Government from the sale of some of the Native reserves. It may be said, in fact, that the Native reserves are at present in a great measure unavailable to the Native population, either from their being leased to Europeans, from their ineligible position, or from the soil not being adapted to the mode of husbandry at present pursued by the Natives. In lieu, therefore, of these at present unavailable reserves, the Government is about to put them in possession of land adapted to their wants; in other words, to exchange certain lands for reserves, which will consequently not be needed for the future wants of the Native population, and will therefore ultimately form a source from whence the Government may reimburse itself for the expenditure at present incurred.

I have only to add that much will depend, in the settlement of this difficult question, upon judicious management. It would be better in the first instance only to deal with those cases in which lands under cultivation by Natives, or claimed by them under Governor Fitzroy's agreement, are required by European settlers. By thus dealing with individual cases upon their own merits, and only taking cases from time to time as the Europeans required the land, there will be much less probability of creating any combination amongst the Natives or extortionate demands from them; but what should at once be settled is, What lands are included in Governor Fitzroy's arrangement? These should at once be defined and surveyed; and, the question having been thus once arranged, no fresh claims should ever hereafter be entertained.

District of Wairau.

With regard to the purchase of the Wairau District from the Natives, it appears unnecessary to make any lengthened observations. Colonel McCleverty will soon make himself master of more information on this subject than is possessed by any other person. It may be sufficient to say generally that a very great benefit will be conferred upon the colony by the prompt and immediate settlement of this question. It will be desirable, before entering into any negotiation upon the subject, to ascertain the exact number of Natives at present inhabiting the district, the extent of land they have under cultivation, and whether any portion of the Ngatitōa Tribe are likely to remove from Porirua to that district, and then take the necessary precautions for securing to the Native inhabitants blocks of land in continued localities of sufficient extent to provide for the wants of the probable Native population.

I think it proper to observe generally that the system of Native reserves as laid down by the New Zealand Company, although an admirable means of providing for the future wants of the aborigines, is in some respects insufficient for their present wants, and ill adapted for their existing notions.

It will be found necessary in all instances to secure to Natives, in addition to any reserves made for them by the New Zealand Company, their cultivations, as well as convenient blocks of land for the purpose of future cultivation, in such localities as they may select themselves. Many chiefs feel a great repugnance to go upon lands belonging to other persons, if their reserves may be selected in such situations. In other instances Natives belonging to a weaker tribe are afraid to venture upon lands belonging to others, if their reserves may be selected there; and they naturally generally feel under all circumstances the greatest repugnance to quit their villages and cultivated lands, many of which have been cleared at a large expense of time and labour. Indeed, I am satisfied that it will be in many instances impossible to induce them to do this except at a considerable sacrifice of life. I therefore earnestly recommend Colonel McCleverty in no single instance to sanction the purchase of any large district of country without seeing that the cultivated grounds, and portions of land in the vicinity of them for future cultivation, are reserved for the Natives. The judicious exercise of his discretion on this subject will do more towards preserving the future tranquillity of the country than any other precautionary measure with which I am acquainted.

Nelson.

In reference to the objection raised by the New Zealand Company to the grant of land which has been offered to them for the Nelson district, namely, that it excepts any portions of land within any of the lands described in the grant to which private claimants or any private claimant may have already proved, or may hereafter prove, that they or any of them had a valid claim prior to the purchase of the New Zealand Company, I think that Colonel McCleverty should ascertain what claims have already been preferred to such portions of these lands: these claims should be allowed or disallowed, and the exceptions complained of should then be limited to such claims as may upon inquiry be found to be valid and just;—that the inquiry should strictly be confined to such claims as have already been preferred. I do not think that claims which might now be made, after a large body of European settlers have been for so many years in possession of the land, should be allowed to operate for their detriment. If such claimants should show that they are entitled to the consideration of the Government, I think that compensation should be given to them in the form of grants to land in other localities, or in such other form as might be found most convenient.

Another general observation which I would make is that, in all instances where it is arranged that certain portions of land are to be assigned to particular bodies of Natives, Colonel McCleverty should see that they are furnished with accurate plans and descriptions of the boundaries of these tracts of land, and that when these are handed over to them they should sign a receipt stating that their claims to land have all been satisfied. Even in cases of disputed boundaries between different tribes of Natives, it would be a wise measure of precaution to recommend the Natives to allow the Government to settle disputed boundaries, and to issue to the claimants confirmatory grants to their lands, so that no dispute regarding their title might ever hereafter arise. I have found the Natives generally desirous of receiving such descriptive grants from the Government; and, as all these grants could be registered in the Survey Office, the Native population might thus gradually be brought in a great measure to register their claims to land, and feel that the holding a positive grant from the Crown was the best guarantee and title which they could obtain. The Government would be enabled to ascertain the portions of country to which the Natives had valid claims, and those portions which might be regarded as waste lands belonging to the Crown.

I have only further to add that Colonel McCleverty will find that about seventy claims to land in the Middle Island have been made and gazetted, but have never yet been investigated. It is a matter of great importance that these claims should be heard and reported on with as little delay as possible; and, if no objection should exist to Colonel McCleverty hearing and reporting on all of these claims, he will render a great service to the Government in so doing. If, however, he should see any objection to his adopting this course, and will report the same to me, I will lose no time in despatching the Surveyor-General to the South, for the purpose of hearing such claims as Colonel McCleverty may not think proper to dispose of.

Wellington.—Settlement of the New Zealand Company's Claims. Government House, Auckland, 26th March, 1847.

MY LORD,—

In reference, to my Despatch No. 14, of the 27th January last, in which I, enclosed copies of a correspondence which had passed between His Excellency Lieut.-General Sir M. C. O'Connell and this Government upon the subject of Lieut.-Colonel McCleverty, who had been sent out to this country to settle the land claims of the New Zealand Company, having been appointed the officer in command of the troops in New Zealand, and in reference to the observations I made in that despatch upon the injuries to which the settlers were subjected by the continued delay in the adjustment of these important questions, as well as upon the disappointment which must be experienced by the Native chiefs, who, upon my explanation of the intentions of Her Majesty's Government to send out an officer to fulfil the duties which were assigned to Lieut.-Colonel McCleverty had waited patiently previously to his arrival and since his arrival, trusting that my promises would be fulfilled,—I have now the honour to report that, finding that the arrangements of the Lieutenant-General prevented me from entertaining any hopes of Lieut.-Colonel McCleverty's being able to afford me efficient assistance, and that the Natives were, at the same time, unwilling, from feelings of jealousy, to transact with the New Zealand Company's agent any business relating to the districts of land which had previously been in dispute, I found it necessary to take into my own hands the settlement of the most important of these questions.

The land claims which appeared, in the circumstances of the colony, to require, immediate adjustment were those advanced by the New Zealand Company—firstly, to the district of country including Porirua, and lying between that place and Wainui; secondly, to the District of Wairau, in the Middle Island, and the country lying immediately to the southward of that district. In both of these districts the Company had actually disposed of large quantities of land to European settlers, whom it was of course desirable, if possible, to place in possession of the sections which they had purchased; and moreover, in a military point of view, the possession of a great part of the Porirua District, and its occupation by British subjects were necessary to secure the Town of Wellington and its vicinity from future hostile attacks and aggressions from evil-disposed Natives; as it was only by the occupation of the Porirua District that the various tracks leading across the woody mountains which lie between Porirua and Wellington could be effectually closed against an enemy.

The claims of the New Zealand Company to the Porirua and Wainui districts had not only been decided upon by Mr. Commissioner Spain as against the New Zealand Company, but, after disallowing the claims of the Company to these districts, that officer had further reported that the district lying between Wainui and Porirua, inclusive of both places, must be regarded as being in the real and bonâ fide possession of the Ngatitooa Tribe; and that a district of country in the Middle Island, comprising the Wairau and a part of Queen Charlotte Sound, must likewise be regarded as being the real and bonâ fide possession of the same tribe." This latter decision really gave a claim to the Ngatitooa Tribe to a tract of country in the Middle Island extending to about a hundred miles to the south of Wairau, as their claim to the whole of this territory is identical with their claim to, the valley of the Wairau.

Under such circumstances, I determined to purchase, on behalf of the Government, from the Ngatitooa Tribe a large district of land surrounding Porirua, including as much of the land which had previously been disposed of by the New Zealand Company as I could induce the Natives to alienate, thus meeting in as far as practicable the specific claims of European settlers; and in addition to the land acquired by the New Zealand Company I determined to include within the limits of the purchased land a very extensive block of country to meet the probable prospective requirements of the Government and settlers. The Ngatitooa Tribe, after securing an extensive reserve for themselves in one continuous block (as shown in the enclosed plan), agreed to dispose of the tract of country I required (which is also shown in the enclosed plan), which included the whole of the sections the New Zealand Company claimed, with the exception of about sixteen. As Lieut.-Colonel McCleverty had been directed by Her Majesty's Government to decide upon the reasonableness of the price paid to Natives for land, and as he was then at Wellington, I thought it right to take his opinion as to the sum which should be paid for this tract of land. He named the sum of £2,000, which under all the circumstances of the case appearing to me to be a reasonable and proper sum, I agreed to pay it to the Natives, arranging that one-half of the sum should be paid down on the 1st of April then following, and that the sum of £500 should be paid on the 1st of April, 1848, and a like sum upon the 1st of April, 1849.

In reference to the Wairau District, I thought it advisable not only to purchase this district, which was estimated by the Surveyor-General to contain 80,000 acres of the finest agricultural land and about 240,000 acres of the finest pasture land, but also to endeavour to purchase the whole tract of country claimed by the Ngatitooa Tribe, and extending about a hundred miles to the southward of that valley, the greatest portion of which country is, I understand, admirably adapted to European settlers, and is likely to be almost immediately occupied by sheep and cattle, as I thought that an ultimate and decisive arrangement of this kind would be excessively advantageous to this colony. The Ngatitooa Tribe, after considerable discussion, agreed to dispose of the acquired territory, still reserving their claims to that portion of the country which is shown in the accompanying map. Upon consultation with Colonel McCleverty I agreed to pay the Natives (who demanded the sum of £5,000) £3,000, in five annual instalments of £600 each; the first instalment of £600 to be paid on the following day, whilst the remaining instalments of £600 each were to be paid on the 1st of April in each of the four next succeeding years.

Having completed these arrangements, I directed Major Richmond to write to the Company's agent to inform him that the New Zealand Company might, in conformity with the regulations made under the sanction of your Lordship's despatch, select such portions of land in the two districts thus purchased as they might require to fulfil their engagements with the settlers, it being understood that they should repay to the Government for the lands they might select such proportion of the total purchase-money as Her Majesty's Government might, on being informed of the arrangements I had made, direct to be refunded as a proper and reasonable payment.

I trust that the arrangement I have made for the purchase of these two tracts of country will be satisfactory to your Lordship. Every land claim but one in the southward of the colony which is likely to occasion any further discussion or disturbance has now been disposed of.

The principle which I have adopted of annual money payments instead of giving at once large quantities of merchandise will I think, have a powerful influence on the future advancement of the Natives in civilization. They are already making rapid and unexpected strides in the arts of civilized life; and the funds thus supplied them will materially assist their advancement, whilst the experience of each year will render it probable that every successive annual payment will be more judiciously expended; and there can be no doubt that the fact of the Ngatitooa Tribe receiving for several years an annual payment from the Government will give us an almost unlimited influence over a powerful and hitherto very treacherous and dangerous tribe.

As the great majority of the land questions which had formed subjects of dispute and discussion have now been disposed of, and as the Natives have now become accustomed to Europeans, and understand that the laws and regulations of the Government must be respected and obeyed, I have no doubt, now that the uniform system of purchasing from them such districts in their bonâ fide possession as may be required by the Government is adopted, that no further disputes or disturbances on the subject of land will take place throughout the southern portions of New Zealand.

Wellington.—Respecting Claims of New Zealand Company. Government House, Auckland, 9th April, 1847.
MY LORD,—

Advertising to my Despatch No. 35, of the 7th instant, upon the subject of some objections raised by the principal agent of the New Zealand Company to certain arrangements which I had made, in order to procure two districts which were required by the settlers who had purchased land from that company, I have now the honour to enclose the copy of a letter which was addressed to me by Lieut.-Colonel McCleverty upon the 17th February last, to which I did not at the time attach so much importance as I do now and of which I had delayed taking any notice until I received a report from Lieut.-Colonel McCleverty upon his proceedings in reference to the land claims at Wellington, which only reached me yesterday.

Colonel Wakefield's recent objections to the course I adopted in settling the Porirua and Wairau land claims, taken in connection with Colonel McCleverty's letter, herewith transmitted, make me now desirous of knowing whether Her Majesty's Government are prepared to suggest any mode of avoiding the following general difficulties which I fear exist to the New Zealand Company making a satisfactory arrangement with regard to their claims to land in this country.

The New Zealand Company originally claimed large tracts of land as having been purchased by their agent here, and they proceeded to sell considerable portions of the tracts so claimed, under the supposition that their title was a good one. I believe that in repeated instances one or more resales of sections thus originally purchased from the Company have taken place, by which various obligations have been incurred by the purchasers from the Company.

Upon the subsequent examination of the alleged claims of the New Zealand Company to land, by a Commissioner expressly appointed for that purpose by Her Majesty's Government, this Commissioner thought it necessary to disallow the claims of the New Zealand Company to several districts in which they had sold large quantities of land to other persons.

I have already made every effort that I could, consistently with justice to the rights of the Natives, to procure for the Company the lands requisite to enable them to fulfil their engagements, but it is my duty to state that I am now satisfied that it is doubtful whether the Government will ever be able to procure for the New Zealand Company some portions of land which that body has disposed of to other persons—at all events, without making much larger payments to the Natives than I am authorized to do at present.

In the specific case alluded to by Lieut.-Colonel McCleverty, the Te Aro Pa is situated in one of the most valuable portions of the Town of Wellington; and, according to another report I have received from the same officer, it is now inhabited by 171 men, women, and children, who will naturally feel the greatest reluctance to quit a place which they have inhabited for years, which is well suited to their wants, and with the value of which they are well acquainted.

The portions of land thus circumstanced (excluding from consideration the District of Taranaki) are neither numerous nor of great extent, but consist chiefly of small portions of land in the actual occupation of the Natives (as in the instance above stated), or absolutely requisite for their subsistence from proximity to their pas, or some analogous circumstances; and these portions of land have been decided by Mr. Commissioner Spain to be the property of the Natives, and the Government has approved and confirmed his decision.

Under these circumstances it would be very desirable if some general arrangement could be concluded with the Company by which Crown titles could be issued to the great majority of their purchasers, who either now are or can at once be put in possession of their sections, instead of delaying the issue of all such titles until the comparatively small portions of land originally claimed by the Company, and now in possession of the Natives, can be procured for the New Zealand Company, which latter result can, I fear, only be accomplished by a considerable sacrifice of time, and perhaps at a considerable expense.

I consider some arrangement of this nature so very desirable, indeed so essential to the final settlement of the difficulties still existing in this country, that I think it would be cheaply procured by giving favourable terms either to the New Zealand Company or to the purchasers under that body. The latter persons are evidently deserving of sympathy, and can in no way be held responsible for the difficulties which have occurred; and the New Zealand Company have at least this claim: that the settlements which they originally founded are now very prosperous and exceedingly important to Great Britain; whilst at the same time the whole of my experience with the Natives from whom the Company's purchases were originally made has satisfied me that, under the then state of the colony, it would not have been practicable to have made extensive purchases without some such difficulties occurring as have actually taken place.

G. Grey.

Wellington.—Respecting Arrangement of Her Majesty's Government with the New Zealand Company. Downing Street, 19th June, 1847.

SIR,—

I enclose copies of a correspondence which has lately taken place relative to the affairs of the New Zealand Company, which will put you in possession of an arrangement which Her Majesty's Government have thought it advisable to enter into with that association. I also transmit a copy of a Bill which will be proposed to Parliament for the more effectually carrying this arrangement into execution.

This measure, as you will perceive, has been resolved upon by Her Majesty's Government with a view to the resumption of the systematic colonization of New Zealand. It is proposed that the New Zealand Company should for this purpose receive a grant of public money, and should be intrusted with the disposal, for three years, of the Crown demesne in the Southern Government of New Zealand; while, in order to obtain the fullest assurance that these means and trusts shall be faithfully applied to the objects aimed at by Her Majesty's Government, a Commissioner will be appointed to attend, on their behalf, the meetings of the directors of the Company, and will be invested with ample powers to control all the proceedings of that body. The Commissioner will act under the instructions of the Secretary of State, to be given from time to time as occasion may require. By this arrangement Her Majesty's Government entertain the hope that they, may obtain in aid of systematic colonization the energy, the ability, and experience of a body of gentlemen associated together to promote an enlightened plan of colonization, and whose private interests are identified with the success of these public objects, and possessing, as they do, the confidence of those classes from which the best description of settlers are likely to be drawn. Men of character, enterprise, and small capital, they have the means, which no Government can possess to the same degree, of promoting and directing towards colonization that spirit of enterprise for which our population has always been remarkable. The success which attended the early operations of the Company, so far at least as regarded the collection of bodies of emigrants, admirably fitted, by their energy, perseverance, and self-reliance, for the arduous undertakings in which they embarked, affords the best ground for hoping that the same Company may again be enabled to send successive parties of equally efficient settlers to New Zealand, and that these arriving there under happier auspices may rapidly form thriving and prosperous communities. Such is the general design of Her Majesty's Government in the arrangement which they have entered into.

I shall now proceed to call your attention, to a few points the due understanding of which in the colony may, in its present state, be conducive to public good. In the first place I have to remark that, in order to dispel that jealousy of the Company of which I am sorry to perceive various symptoms in the more recent advices from the colony, it is of great importance that you should use your utmost efforts to make it generally and thoroughly understood that Her Majesty's Government, in placing for three years all the Crown demesne of the Southern Province at the disposal of the New Zealand Company, have had for their main object the public interest in promoting colonization, not the private advantage of the Company. The Company will indeed, and most justly, be remunerated, if the plan should prove successful, for its large outlay of capital; but by the provision that no dividends shall be payable except from a moderate percentage to be deducted from the gross proceeds of the sales of land which it may effect, this remuneration will be made exactly in proportion to the extent to which the Company, by its activity and good judgment, shall promote colonization. Moreover, the Company in the exercise of this trust will act under the supervision of the Government Commissioner, whose duty will obviously lead him to consider every projected operation of the Company for the disposal of Crown lands with reference, not alone to the interests of the Company, but to the interests of the public both here and in New Zealand. The proceeds of the sales and leasings of Crown lands which the Company will effect will be devoted, after the necessary deductions, to colonizing purposes and the gradual settlement of the Island. By these means it is hoped that both capital and labour may be again beneficially directed towards these Islands; that the capital already so largely invested, and the property already acquired by the actual settlers, will be enhanced in value and gain additional security. The interests of the actual settlers will thus, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, be more effectually promoted than by any other means which could have been adopted, since the effect of resuming colonization in augmenting the value of their lands will be certain and immediate.

I am aware, however, that an apprehension exists in the minds of many of the settlers that the benefit which may thus accrue to them will be more than neutralized by the system adopted by the Company of selling land in this country; and which will oppose a difficulty in the way of its acquisition by those who have already emigrated, and more especially to its being obtained by them upon terms consistent with its being profitably occupied for pastoral purposes. This apprehension I do not consider to be well founded. The system of permanently alienating land only by sale will indeed be strictly adhered to, and I trust that, notwithstanding the prejudice in favour of cheap land, the Company's settlers will not forget the views on which they originally emigrated, or fail to perceive that their own welfare and prosperity are vitally interested in maintaining the sound principle of colonization on which their settlements were formed. Nor is the maintenance of this principle inconsistent with the adoption of a mode of selling land which shall give every proper facility to the original settlers to extend their holdings, nor to their, being permitted also, under proper regulations, to obtain the temporary occupation of land for pastoral purposes, upon easy terms. On the latter subject I have already addressed you in another despatch, in which I have transmitted to you the papers lately laid before Parliament, which show what has been done on the same subject in New South Wales. With respect to the just desire of the present settlers to be enabled gradually to, extend their holdings, this object will be provided for by conducting in the colony, instead of in this country, the sale of lands which are near existing settlements, and by taking care that all new settlements to be formed by bodies of emigrants proceeding from this country for that purpose shall be planted in situations where they cannot injuriously interfere with those previously established.

You will continue to retain in your own hands the exclusive management of all negotiations with the Natives for the sale of their lands; but, when any transactions of this sort are concluded in the Southern Province, the New Zealand Company will provide the means of payment, from funds placed at their disposal, and have the disposal of the lands so acquired.

I have only to add that these arrangements are not to interfere with the operation of any laws which, in accordance with the intention you have expressed, you may have thought it advisable that the local Legislature should pass for the purpose of enabling the Natives, under certain restrictions, to sell their own lands. I know that you so well understand the difficulties of this subject that I am well assured I may safely rely upon your assenting to no laws of this description which are not really required by the circumstances with which you have to deal, and which do not contain the best securities that can be provided against abuse. I should also expect that in the Middle Island, which will be the principal field of the Company's renewed operations, the acquisition by the Crown of the territory required for the Company will prove a matter of no difficulty, from the extreme paucity of Native inhabitants.

I have, &c.,

The LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR to the GOVERNOR-IN-CHIEF.

Report of Ruinous Earthquake at Wellington.[Extract from New Zealand Gazette. ] Government House, Wellington, 19th October, 1848.

SIR,—

It is my most painful duty to inform your Excellency that a terrible calamity has overtaken this province: an earthquake has occurred, and the Town of Wellington is in ruins.

On the morning of Monday, the 16th October, about twenty minutes to 2 a.m. the first shock occurred, and was sufficiently strong to throw down or injure most of the chimneys in the town, and to crack the walls of very many of the brick buildings. Considerable loss of property was sustained by breakages in the houses, and a good deal of alarm excited in the minds of the inhabitants. During the whole of Monday shocks and tremblings of the earth were from time to time experienced, but of a slighter character than the first.

On Tuesday, the 17th October, about 4 o'clock a.m., another rather smart shock was felt, and again at 8 a.m. Lighter ones continued at intervals during the day, until at twenty minutes to 4 o'clock in the afternoon, when a sudden and much more violent shock took place: by this, chimneys previously remaining up were for the most part cast down. The Native Hospital, the Gaol, many of the large brick stores, and the higher brick walls were either very much rent or wholly thrown down; immense destruction of property took place, and, I regret to add, a melancholy loss of life. Barrack-Sergeant Lovell and two of his children were thrown down and buried by falling ruins. Upon being extricated, one of the children was found dead, and the other so seriously injured that it died a few hours afterwards. The Sergeant himself was much hurt, and now lies in a precarious state.

Since dead.

During the remainder of Tuesday and the succeeding night slight shocks only were felt; but about 5 a.m. on Wednesday morning a stronger one occurred, and another about 8 a.m. Minor shocks continued at intervals during the remainder of the day and evening until the morning of Thursday, the 19th, at ten minutes past 5 a.m., when a most violent and awful shock took place; every building was rocked to and fro in a fearful manner, and, with the exception of the wooden dwellings, most of the houses and stores were seriously shattered or fell in. The whole population were in the utmost consternation and alarm; and the destruction of property was immense; but, most providentially, up to the present time no further loss of life has ensued. Numbers of persons are, however, ruined; many left houseless and homeless, except such temporary shelter as can be afforded by the new church, Te Aro, by Government House (where the hospital patients and some others are taken in), and by the wooden buildings of their friends. Many persons are afraid of remaining in any of the houses at night, and retire to the bush among the hills in the hope of being more secure, notwithstanding the wild and inclement weather by which the earthquake has been accompanied.

A blow has been struck at the-prosperity, almost at the very existence, of the settlement, from which it will not readily recover. Terror and dismay reign everywhere; for the last four days no business of any kind has been transacted. The energies of all seem paralysed, and during that period no one has been able to feel for a moment that even life itself is secure. As I now write, too (11 p.m., 19th October), incessant and alarming tremblings of the earth are experienced. What may be the eventful result, or when this dreadful state of suspense and anxiety may be terminated, God alone can tell, but every one seems to feel a presentiment that it will end in some still more fearful catastrophe than any which has taken place.

The sad ravages which have already occurred, and the terror which so frightful a visitation naturally produces in most men's minds, will, I apprehend, drive from the colony all who can find the means of getting away. The few ships now in port, waiting for moderate weather to sail, are crowded to excess with colonists abandoning the country, and numbers are unable to obtain passages.

Under this awful visitation, I deemed it my duty at once to summon my Executive. Council, and, with their approval, to proclaim a day of public and solemn fast, prayer, and humiliation, in order that supplication might be offered up to Almighty God to avert the occurrence of any similar visitation; and Friday, the 20th day of October, was appointed for this purpose. I will not fail to communicate to your Excellency such further information and reports as it may be in my power from time to time to render.

I have, &c.,

E. EYRE.

Government House, Wellington, 21st October, 1848.

SIR,—

In continuation of my despatch of the 19th instant, I have the honour to inform, your Excellency that, between half-past 11 p.m. on the 19th and 1 a.m. on the 20th, frequent and rather strong shocks succeeded each other in rapid succession, during which time the earth appeared to be in a continual state of agitation under foot. The shocks and the pulsation of the ground then ceased until about 5 a.m., when slight shocks again occurred, and were repeated at intervals during the whole of Friday, but no further damage was done by them; and, although shocks have been experienced occasionally up to the present time (11 a.m., Saturday, the 21st October), I would hope that the worst is over, and that the convulsions of Nature may gradually subside. We are not, however, aware of any eruptions having taken place, or any vent being opened in any direction; though strong lurid lights, seen, in the sky in the evenings, in the north and south, seem to be reflections from the light of some volcano.

Yesterday (Friday, the 20th October) was, in accordance with the intimation given your Excellency in my last despatch, observed as a solemn fast-day, and I am happy to say that it was most reverently observed, persons of all classes and all denominations responding in right feeling and conduct befitting such an occasion, and showing, by the immense assemblages at the various religious observances of the day, that they acknowledged the hand of the Almighty, and looked to Him only for safety and protection.

In consequence of the long continuance of the earthquake, and the uncertainty as to what may be its eventual results, I have deemed it right, under the advice of my Executive Council, to order the detention for a few days of any vessels in harbour which might attempt to leave it, the alarm and apprehension being so great that, if the few ships now here were to sail away, the people would consider themselves as altogether deserted, and without any means of security left them should futures shocks occur and produce greater devastation than already exists. This order, I find, has already exercised a most beneficial influence in keeping up the spirits and confidence of the population. I have also taken the precaution of shipping on board Her Majesty's ship "Fly" the greater part of the specie in the colonial chest until such time as the elements appear more settled. The Commissariat Department have, I believe, also done the same, under the instructions of the Senior Military Officer.

Persons arriving by a vessel leaving Otakou on Wednesday, the 18th, state that no shock had been experienced there up to the time of her sailing. I have no accounts from Whanganui or Nelson, but fear the earthquakes must have been felt severely at both. From Queen. Charlotte Sound an open boat came over, in very stormy weather, for the purpose of bringing away a party of European women who were living there, and were alarmed at the convulsion going on. At Porirua the military barracks are destroyed, and the troops are living in whares. The Natives have no recollection of any earthquakes at all corresponding, in either degree or continuance, to the one which is now visiting us.

I. have. &c.,

E.EYRE.

No. 25. Captain T. B. COLLINSON, R.E., to the Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Official Report on the Earthquakes of October, 1848. Wellington, 21st November, 1848.

SIR,—

We have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th October, informing us that it was the desire of His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor that a Board should be appointed to examine and report on the damages, done in-Wellington by, the late earthquake, and further informing us that Mr. Park had been chosen by the inhabitants as a member of the Board on their part, and that the Council desired—that Mr. St. Hill and Captain. Collinson should act on the part of the Government.

We beg to report that, in compliance with that letter, we have examined the damaged buildings, and we herewith enclose a list of them. On that list is stated the manner in which the proprietors propose to repair their buildings, as they have informed us, and also what further measures we have in some instances considered necessary. In those cases where the damaged houses front the principal streets, and in their present state are a nuisance and a danger to the public, we beg to recommend that one month be allowed to the proprietors to repair them. The particular repairs required to such houses are marked in the list as being necessary to secure the public thoroughfares. In addition to the damages mentioned in the list we find that almost every chimney in the town, has been broken down close to the roof. As this is a very dangerous nuisance in a town composed chiefly of wooden houses, we consider it very desirable that the inhabitants should be obliged to build up the damaged chimneys to a safe height above the roof within two months.

The above forms the principal object of the Board; in the course of executing which we beg to state we have been very much assisted by the list of damaged houses drawn up by Sergeant Mills, of the Armed Police. But we further beg to offer a few remarks on the description of building best adapted to stand shocks of earthquake, which may be of use to persons about to build storehouses, which are desired to be more secure from fire than wooden houses. We have observed that those brick buildings have suffered least which have had bond-timbers in the brickwork, or have been lined with wood or weather-boarded; and that a great many gable-ends of houses, in which the wall-plate has not been carried through the gable, have been thrown down, without reference to any particular direction of the compass, and that the gable-ends of hipped roofs on the contrary have not suffered so much. And also that in almost all the brickwork the mortar has been of a very bad description, being composed of lime and clay instead of lime and sand, as it should have been, by which there has been so little bond in the brickwork that many walls have been shaken down in single bricks. The building we recommend for the above object, and for greater security against fire than a weather-boarded house, is a strong wooden frame upon a brick foundation, filled in with brick-nogging laid in mortar, and covered outside with strong laths and plaster, and inside with boards or plaster. But as it is probable that there will be always a great many houses in the town built entirely of wood, we recommend it to the consideration of the inhabitants that all future wooden houses should be separated from each other as much as possible, both as a security against fire, and because the action of a shock is sometimes of an undulating kind, that will take more effect on a continuous line of buildings than on several detached small ones.

With respect to your letter of the 30th October, requesting us to prepare a general report upon the earthquake, to show the direction of the earth's motion during the shocks and other incidents, we beg to add a general account of the occurrence, collected from the different statements that have arrived up to this time from the neighbouring places. The action of the earthquake appears to have extended from about the latitude of Banks Peninsula to the latitude of New Plymouth, the strongest force of it having been in Cook Strait, and in a north-west and south-east direction from thence. It commenced on the 16th October with a violent shock, at 1.30 a.m.; on the 17th there was a second, at 4 p.m.; on the 19th a third, at 5 a.m.; and on the 24th there was a fourth, at 2 p.m. These were all the strong shocks, but in the intervals there were a great number of smaller shocks, varying from ten to twenty in the twenty-four hours, and these continued, gradually lessening in number and force, from the 16th to the 30th October, and from that time to this there have been several more violent than the small shocks. The strong shocks appear to have been felt at all the settlements within the latitudes above mentioned, and, as far as we can determine, simultaneously (but we have no certain data to decide this point), and also with the same character, but less in force in proportion to the distance from Cook Strait, and the line of north-east and south-west direction.

The strong shocks were all of this character: A sound like subterranean thunder, accompanied with a vibration of the ground for a few seconds, and then a quick, heavy oscillation of the earth, which in a few seconds more died away with a quivering motion; the small shocks had not much of the heaving motion, but were more like the firing of a cannon immediately underneath the place; they were sometimes so frequent that it sounded like a distant cannonade, while the earth appeared to tremble incessantly for two or three hours together. The direction of the noise and the motion of the earth appeared to some people to come from the southward, to others from the northward; the buildings that have been damaged are injured principally on the south-east sides and on the north-west sides. A billiard-table in Barrett's Hotel was moved an inch to the south-east. The shocks were felt at Nelson a little more violently than at Whanganui, hardly at all at Hawke's Bay, and as strongly at Banks Peninsula as at Whanganui. Therefore we conclude the line of direction to be north-east and south-west. There have been a few cracks made in the ground at Wellington and at the mouths of some small rivers on the north-west coast, and at the mouth of the Wairau; they are long narrow cracks, not larger than those caused by a long drought.

On the 16th October, eight hours after the first shock it being high water but neap tides, the tide rose in Wellington one foot above ordinary spring tides, but this might have been occasioned by a strong south-east wind which lasted the 15th and 16th. On the 17th it was calm fine weather; on the 19th strong south-east gale; on the 24th fine and calm. On the 19th and 20th the aurora australis was very brilliant in the south-east, but there was nothing to indicate it had any connection with the earthquake. There was no change in the barometer or thermometer that would appear to have given warning of a shock. It appears to have been felt less on the higher grounds and upon rocky foundations. The last winter had been an unusually rainy season, with little wind, and this is a circumstance which is said to be connected with earthquakes in South America. It appears not to have been felt at all at Otakou or Auckland. Up to this date no eruption has been heard of at any place within the limits of the earthquake as above stated.

We have endeavoured to ascertain the amount of damage done to the town, and we consider that, at the utmost, it is not more than £15,000 in property of all descriptions, and that includes £3,500 of the Colonial Government and £1,000 of Her Majesty's Ordnance.

We have, &c.,

By His Excellency Sir G. Grey, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over Her Majesty's Colony of New Zealand and its Dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c.

Whereas by an Act of the General Assembly of New Zealand, intituled "The New Zealand Settlements Act, 1863," it is enacted that it shall be lawful for the Governor, by Proclamation to be published in the Maori as well as the English language, to call upon any Native tribes, or individuals thereof, who shall have been engaged in any of the offences specified in section five of the said Act, to come in and submit to trial according to law, on or before a certain day to be therein named; and all who shall refuse or neglect to come in and submit themselves accordingly shall not be entitled to compensation under the said Act:

such persons as aforesaid, shall have been, either as principal or accessory, concerned in any outrage against person or property; or (5) who, on being required by the Governor, by Proclamation to that effect in the Government Gazette, to deliver up the arms in their possession, shall refuse or neglect to comply with such demand after a certain day to be specified in such Proclamation—to come, in and submit to trial according to law on or before the first day of June, one thousand eight hundred, and sixty-five. And I do hereby proclaim and declare that all such persons as shall have been so engaged as aforesaid, who shall refuse or neglect so to come an and submit themselves accordingly, will be debarred from all claim to compensation under the said Act in respect of any title, interest, or claim to any lands within the limits defined in my Proclamation of the twenty-ninth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-four, and the thirtieth day of January, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five, and Which are intended to be taken under the provisions of the said Act.

Given under my hand, at the Government House, at Wellington, and issued under the seal of the Colony of New Zealand, this first day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir GEORGE GREY, K.C.B., to the Right Hon. Edward CARDWELL, M.P.

Government House, Wellington, 14th October, 1865.
SIR,—

I have the honour to transmit for your information the copy of a Proclamation I have issued, with the advice of my Responsible Advisers, announcing to the Natives of New Zealand the desire of the Government to regard the war in New Zealand as ended, and calling upon all chiefs and tribes to aid me in putting a stop to all acts of violence for the future.

Enclosure. PROCLAMATION OF PEACE:

By His Excellency Sir George Grey, Knight Commander of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over Her Majesty's Colony of New Zealand; and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c.

The Governor announces to the Natives of New Zealand that the war which commenced at Oakura is at an end. The Governor took up arms to protect the European settlements from destruction, and to punish those who refused to settle by peaceful means the difficulties which had arisen, but resorted to violence and plunged the country into war. Upon those tribes sufficient punishment has been inflicted. Their war parties have been beaten; their strongholds captured; and so much of their lands Confiscated as was thought necessary to deter them from again appealing to arms. The Governor has therefore shown that he will not permit the peace of the colony to be disturbed without inflicting severe chastisement on those who resisted his authority.

The Governor hopes that the Natives will now have seen that resistance to the law is hopeless: he proclaims, on behalf of the Queen, that all who up to the present time have been in arms against Her Majesty's authority will never be prosecuted for past offences, excepting only those who have been concerned in the murders of the following persons, because those persons were barbarously and treacherously murdered: The children Parker and Pote, killed at Omata, on the 27th March, 1860; the boy Joseph Sarten, killed at Henui, on the 4th December, 1860; the Native Ngakoti, who was killed, and his wife and her daughter killed at Kaipikari; in December, 1864; Margaret Fahey, killed at Ramarama, on the 16th October, 1863; the boys Richard Trust and Nicholas Trust, killed at Kennedy's Farm, on the 24th October, 1863; the Rev. Mr. Völkner, killed at Opotiki, on the 2nd March, 1865; Mr. James Fulloon, and his companions, killed at Whakatane, on the 27th July, 1865; the chief Rio Haeaterangi, killed near Whauganui, in January, 1865. The murderers of those persons will be brought to trial as soon as they are arrested. The Governor also excepts from this pardon the chief Te Pehi, because, having taken the oath of allegiance to Her Majesty, he violated his oath, and treacherously attacked the Queen's troops at Pipiriki: when taken, he will be brought to trial for this crime. All others are forgiven.

Out of the lands which have been confiscated in the Waikato, and at Taranaki and Ngatiruanui, the Governor will at once restore considerable quantities to those of the Natives who wish to settle down upon their lands, to hold them under Crown grants, and to live under the protection of the law. For this purpose Commissioners will be sent forthwith into the Waikato, and the country about Taranaki, and between that place and Whanganui, who will put the Natives who may desire it upon lands at once, and will mark out the boundaries of the blocks which they are to occupy. Those who do not come in at once to claim the benefit of this arrangement must expect to be excluded. The Governor will take no more lands on account of the present war. As regards the prisoners now in custody, the Governor will hold them until it shall be seen whether those who have been in arms return to peace. If they do so the prisoners will be set at liberty.

The Governor is sending an expedition to the Bay of Plenty to arrest the murderers of Mr. Völkner and Mr. Fulloon. If they are given up to justice the Governor will be satisfied; if not, the Governor will seize a part of the lands of the tribes who conceal these murderers, and will use them for the purpose of maintaining peace in that part of the country, and of providing for the widows and relatives of the murdered people. The Governor now calls upon all the chiefs and tribes to assist him in putting a stop to all such acts of violence for the future; for all, whether Europeans or Natives, have a common interest in putting an end to such crimes, and in preserving the peace of the colony.

The Governor is about to call a meeting of all the great chiefs to consult with his Government as to the best means whereby the Maori people may be represented in the General Assembly, so that they may henceforth help to make the laws which they are called on to obey. At that meeting all matters can be discussed with a view of establishing a general and lasting peace throughout New Zealand.

Her Majesty the Queen desires that equal laws and equal rights and liberties may be enjoyed by all her subjects in this Island, and to that end the Governor in the name of the Queen publishes this Proclamation.

Given under my hand at the Government House, at Wellington, and issued under the Public Seal of the Colony of New Zealand, this second day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

G. GREY. FRED. A. WELD.

By His Excellency's Command.

God save the Queen!

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir GEORGE GREY, K.C.B., to the Right Hon. EDWARD CARDWELL, M.P.

Government House, Wellington, 13th January, 1866.

SIR,—

In my Despatch No. 127, of the 14th of October last, I reported the murder on the west coast of this Island, by the Hauhau fanatics, of messengers sent to them by Brigadier-General Waddy, C.B., whom they decoyed into friendly interviews.

- 2. The murderers of those messengers being left unpunished, they proceeded to murder other inoffensive people, and unfortunately, from the absence of the Whanganui Native Contingent at Opotiki, it was impossible to at once collect a Native force that could be relied on to co-operate with the troops in bringing these murderers to justice.
- 3. It being, however, at last found practicable to remove the Whanganui Native Contingent from Opotiki to Whanganui, a Native force was as speedily as possible collected to co-operate with Major-General Chute, and was despatched under his command; and you will be glad to learn from the enclosed despatch which I have just received from the General that the fanatics and rebel Natives were defeated on the 4th and 7th instant by Her Majesty's forces under Major-General Chute, with but trifling loss on our side, and that, from the active measures now taken, the whole west coast of this Island will shortly be placed in a state of entire security.

I have, &c.,

Enclosure. Major-General CHUTE to Governor Sir GEORGE GREY, K.C.B.

Head-quarters Camp, Putahi, 8th January, 1866.

SIR,—

I have the honour to report, for your Excellency's information, that on the 30th ultimo, the date on which the colonial troops your Excellency had acquainted me would be placed at my disposal were ready, I left Whanganui with a small field force, and encamped at Alexander's farm.

On the 31st the force marched to Wereroa, where we were detained for two days waiting for the Native Contingent, who, on the 1st January, were employed in capturing horses the property of rebels, thirty-two of which they secured; and on the 2nd, in preparing some particular food they declared to be absolutely necessary for the march.

On the 3rd instant, the field force, total strength as per margin,

Royal Artillery: Officer, 1; sergeants, 2; rank and file, 30. Under command of Lieutenant Carre.

2nd Battalion 14th. Regiment: Officers, 8; sergeants, 11; drummers, 4; rank and file, 250. Under command of Lieut. Colonel Trevor.

Forest Rangers: Officers, 2; sergeants, 3; rank and file, 41. Under command of Major Von Tempsky.

Native Contingent (including Natives): Officers, 12; sergeants, 8; rank and file, 96. Kupapus, or Volunteer Natives: Rank and file, 150. Under command of Major McDonnell.

Total: Officers, 23; sergeants, 24; drummers, 4; rank and file. 567.

† 2nd Battalion 14th Regiment: Officers, 3; sergeants, 4; drummer, 1; rank and file, 100.

Forest Rangers: Officers, 2; rank and file, 33.

Native Contingent: Officers, 3; rank and file, 200.

Total: Officers, 8; sergeants, 4; drummer, 1; rank and file, 333, moved across the Waitotara. I directed the Native Contingent to cross at Perikama, beneath and on the right flank of the post at Wereroa, and with the remainder of the force I made a diversion through the Waitotara Block, crossing by the ford near the mouth of the river. The Contingent having joined me on the main inland track, we marched towards Moturou, and encamped about a mile and a half from that village, situated at the edge of a dense forest, within which and about two miles from Moturou was the strongly fortified and formidable position of Okotuku, which I was informed was considered impregnable by the rebels, and there it was stated they had collected in considerable numbers. During the afternoon of the 3rd instant the Native Contingent, under Major McDonnell, proceeded to reconnoitre this position, and taking the rebels by surprise entered it without opposition: a few shots only were fired at them by the enemy's scouts. Having set fire to the whares outside the pa, the Contingent returned to camp.

On the following morning, having reason to believe that the enemy in considerable force had reoccupied the position they had apparently evacuated the evening before, I marched with the force† to attack the Okotuku Pa. The line of march for the last two miles was through dense forest, and the track itself obstructed throughout by ravines, rocks, and supplejack, rendering the advance most difficult, especially for the skirmishers whom I had thrown out from the Native troops as I entered the forest. At a small clearing overhanging a deep ravine, just before commencing the steepest part of the ascent, the skirmishers were fired upon by the enemy. I pushed on as rapidly as the excessive badness of the ground would admit of, and soon gained the plateau. This is a narrow tongue of land of about twenty acres, the greater part being under cultivation. As the troops crowned it they were exposed to a very heavy fire from the pa, distant about 350 yards, I immediately extended the Forest Rangers on my extreme left, the 2nd Battalion 14th Regiment in the centre. The Native troops were on either flank and in reserve. I directed all to keep as much as possible under cover of the many fallen trees about us. Advancing in this manner for a short distance, the fire became still more severe, and two men were wounded. I ordered the party to advance, and endeavour to occupy the pa, when the 2nd Battalion 14th Regiment, led by Captain Vivian, in the most gallant manner charged the stockading, succeeded in entering the pa and in driving the enemy down the almost scarped sides and rear of this defence, formidable by nature, but rendered doubly so by Native skill. In this affair I regret to say that Lieutenant Keogh and four men of the 2nd Battalion 14th Regiment were wounded. The bodies six Natives killed were found; it is supposed their loss in killed and wounded amounted to twenty, but owing to the density of the bush into which they retreated it was not possible to ascertain their real loss. When the pa was captured a portion of the Native Contingent entered the bush, and endeavoured to pursue the retreating enemy. They succeeded in taking the rebel chief and killing one man. The most formidable part of the defence consisted of a palisade several feet high, and fully three feet thick, made by piling logs of hard wood horizontally between two rows of thick upright stakes, extending a distance of about eighty yards from one scarped gully to another. So precipitous were the sides and rear, and so dense the forest beneath them, that it was impossible to approach them and cut off the retreat of the enemy. The whole clearing, of which this pa formed the stronghold, was surrounded by bush, and is situated on one of the high points of the range of mountains running nearly in a north-westerly direction from Wereroa. It would be difficult to exaggerate the obstacles opposed to the advance of the troops to such a position, or the spirited manner in which they were overcome by all concerned. The defences of the pa, whares, &c., having been burnt and completely destroyed, the troops returned to camp.

I am much indebted to Major McDonnell and the Native Contingent for their services on this occasion. Dr. Featherston, Superintendent of this province, who accompanies the field force, was present at the assault on Okotuku, and I have every reason to be obliged to him for his assistance on all matters connected with the Natives.

Previous to my departure from Wereroa, I sent to the officers commanding at Patea, Manawapou, and Waingongoro, informing them that it was my intention to proceed northward by the inland track, pointing out the probability of the rebels retreating in that direction, and instructing them to patrol the country in the vicinity of the bush near their posts, with the view of intercepting and cutting them off. Colonel Warre, C.B., commander at Taranaki, has also been instructed, if possible, to clear his district of rebels, more particularly in the vicinity of his southern outposts, and to prevent their retreat to Mataitawa, should they take the road at the back of Mount Egmont.

On the 5th January, the Native Contingent desiring rest, the troops were occupied in destroying cultivations.

On the 6th January the force marched to the Whenuakura River, and encamped on some high land to the southward and front of the rebel stronghold of Putahi. I purposed attacking the pa at once, and had directed two hundred men from the Patea to advance on it at the same time from the side next the river, but the only information I was able to obtain regarding the tracks to it was so meagre that I was obliged to wait until the following day. On the evening of the 6th, while reconnoitring the position, a small party of the Native Contingent were fired upon by the enemy's scouts, resulting in a skirmish in which we had one man wounded.

Putahi is situated on a clearing about half a mile in diameter, on the top of a hill, rising abruptly on all sides from the river plain to the height of about 500 feet, and covered to the crest with dense bush. The usual approach is from the side on which we are encamped, and was one the rebels evidently anticipated we should attempt, having, as I was informed, erected stockades and other impediments in the bush to assist them in its defence—information which I found to be perfectly correct.

Knowing that by this route the pa could only be taken with the loss of many men, I decided in attacking it in rear, and, having succeeded at a late hour on the night of the 6th in obtaining the services of a guide with a tolerable knowledge of the country, I marched at 3 a.m. on the morning of the 7th, with a force, Royal Artillery: Officer, 1; sergeants, 2; rank and file, 28. Under Lieutenant Carre.

2nd Battalion 14th Regiment: Officers, 6; sergeants, 9; drummers, 3; rank and file, 204. Under Lieutenant-Colonel Trevor.

2nd Battalion 18th Regiment: Officers, 5; sergeants, 4; drummers, 2; rank and file, 89. Under Major Rocke.

50th Regiment: Officers, 4; sergeants, 4; drummers, 2; rank and file, 90. Under Captain C. Johnson.

Forest Rangers: Officers, 2; sergeants, 2; rank and file, 38. Under Major Von Tempsky.

Native Contingent, &c.: Officers (including Natives), 10; rank and file, 200. Under Major McDonnell.

crossed a tributary of the Whenuakura by a bridge constructed the evening before, and passing over a plain, of about half a mile, ascended a steep spur, which brought us on an isolated plateau, lying to the left front of the pa, about two miles distant from it in a direct line. Descending this, the march may be described as one continued struggle through a dense primæval forest and bush, over ravines and gullies which could in most cases only be ascended and descended by the aid of supplejacks, and then only with great difficulty. The extreme distance to be traversed could not have exceeded four miles, but the obstacles and obstructions opposed to us made it a severe task of four hours.

When we arrived at the clearing, the Native Contingent, who had led through the bush, formed to the left and on the edge of it; the Forest Rangers were, opened out in skirmishing order, and lying down to cover the formation of the remainder of the force, who, as they emerged one by one from the bush, were extended with supports; the 2nd Battalion 14th Regiment being in the centre, the 2nd Battalion 18th Regiment on the right, and the 50th on the left; the Native Contingent forming a reserve. The formation occupied more than an hour, under a desultory fire from the pa, from which we were then distant about 400 yards, and when complete I gave the order to advance. The rebels now opened a heavy fire; but the line did not charge until they were within 80 yards, when, with a cheer and a rash, they carried the position, the rebels retreating to the bush beyond, to which I immediately sent the Native Contingent, who followed them for some little distance. The whole of the troops behaved admirably, and, though working through high fern, conducted the attack as steadily as on an ordinary parade.

The flagstaff, whares, &c., were all pulled down and burnt. The work of destruction being completed, and the formidable pa of Putahi, hitherto considered impregnable, on account of its inaccessibility, being levelled to the ground, I ordered the troops to march to camp. Their loss has probably been very severe, though sixteen bodies only were found in and around the pa. From information I have received, the garrison appears to have consisted of about two hundred rebels of the worst character.

I enclose a return of our casualties, by which your Excellency will observe we had one man killed and seven wounded. Amongst the latter, I am sorry to say, is Major McDonnell, who, as usual, was most active and zealous, not only in directing the march through the bush, but in pursuing the rebels in retreat. Where all have behaved so gallantly, it is difficult to select any names for favourable mention; but of the colonial forces I beg especially to bring to your Excellency's notice Major Von Tempsky, commanding Forest Rangers; Major McDonnell; commanding Native Contingent; as also Ensign McDonnell, of the same force.

I had directed Colonel Warre, C.B., to send one hundred men from the Patea to the right bank of the Whenuakura River, and to the right flank of the pa, in order to intercept rebels retreating by the inland route towards Kakarama. I beg to forward a copy of this officer's report of the proceedings on the occasion.

I have, &c.,

T. CHUTE, Major-General.

His Excellency Sir George Grey, K.C.B., &c.

No. 29. COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir GEORGE GREY, K.C.B., to the Right Hon. the Earl of CARNARVON.

Government House, Wellington, 8th January, 1867.

MR LORD,—

- 1. I have this morning returned to this place, a few hours before the Panama steamer sails with the English mail.
- 2. I consequently have no time to make a lengthened report to you, but I am sure that you will be happy to hear that this country continues tranquil, and is rapidly improving in every respect.
- 3. On my recent journey I have passed through the North Island, traversing its central and least accessible districts, portions of which had not been visited by any European for several years.
- 4. I was everywhere received with joy and rejoicings by the Native population, even in those districts where their losses of men during the war had been large. But these men had all fallen in places remote from their own territory, where they had gone to join their fellow-countrymen who were in arms against us, and their surviving relations admitted in the most unreserved manner that we were not to blame for the large loss of life which had taken place.
- 5. I consider the Native population to be now in a better state than I have ever previously known it.
- 6. The Natives express the greatest anxiety that Europeans should settle amongst them. They cheerfully conform to the views and wishes of the Government upon all matters; indeed, they appear to desire to be directed and to be shown what they should do to render practicable a rapid amalgamation between the Europeans and themselves.
- 7. I met everywhere, in districts which had been regarded as unsafe, the utmost respect, and I was treated with kindness so attentive and considerate that it was quite touching.
- 8. I feel sure that the European population, finding from my journey that they can again safely traverse the interior of the country, will begin to spread into all parts of it, developing, the great resources of valuable districts which are now but little known, and the advance of this Northern Island in wealth and population will consequently be very rapid.
- 9. In this advance in wealth and prosperity the Native population, who are extensive landholders, will largely share, and I feel quite satisfied that New Zealand, now ceasing to be a drain upon the resources of Great Britain, will be regarded as one of the most tranquil and valuable portions of the Empire.

I have, &c.,

G. GREY.

The Right Hon. the Earl of Carnarvon.

Government House, Wellington, 7th July, 1867.
MY LORD DUKE,—

- 1. I have the honour to report that the General Assembly of New Zealand will meet to-morrow for the despatch of business.
- 2. In the draft of the Speech prepared for me by my Responsible Advisers, they have requested me to state to the Assembly, in reference to my recent journey through New Zealand, that "I could not but be gratified by the rapid progress which it was evident the colony generally had made; while in the settlements which had sprung into existence during the last few years in the interior, and on the west coast of the Middle Island, I was struck both by their extent and importance, and gratified by the presence, notwithstanding the circumstances under which they were formed, of that regard for law and order which is the characteristic of our race. I can say with confidence that security for life and property and respect for the law exist in as marked a degree in those thickly and recently populated districts as in any part of Her Majesty's dominions. I congratulate you on the re-establishment of peace generally throughout the North Island, in no part of which do I anticipate in future any systematic or sustained hostilities. 'During the recess I have made a journey, partly on foot, through the North Island, and have traversed Native districts which it had for some time past been deemed unsafe to enter. I everywhere found the embers of disaffection dying out, and I was received by the Maori population, even in districts recently in rebellion, in such a manner as to inspire confidence in the future peace of the country.'"
- 3. In the remarks thus prepared by my Responsible Advisers I fully concur, and I feel sure that your Grace will be gratified to learn that such is our joint opinion upon the present state and future prospects of New Zealand.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

Notice of Governor Bowen's Appointment. Downing Street, 22nd August, 1867.
SIR,—

You were informed by my Despatch No. 37, of the 18th June, that you would shortly be relieved from your duties as Governor of New Zealand and that you would be apprised of the time at which your successor might be expected to arrive in the colony. I have now to acquaint you that I have submitted to the Queen the name of Sir G. Bowen, the present Governor of Queensland, as your successor in the Government of New Zealand, and that Her Majesty has been pleased to approve the appointment. I regret that I am unable at present to inform you definitively of the time at which Sir G. Bowen may be expected to arrive in the colony, but I have desired him to give you as long a notice as is practicable of the probable time of his arrival.

- 1. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Grace's Despatch No. 51, of the 22nd August last, in which your Grace briefly informs me that Her Majesty has been pleased upon your recommendation to remove me from the Government of New Zealand.
- 2. I request your Grace to be pleased to state to the Queen that I present my duty to Her Majesty, and, in receiving this notification of my Sovereign's pleasure, I beg to be permitted humbly to represent to Her Majesty that in the year 1845, a rebellion prevailing in New Zealand, I was by Her Majesty's commands specially sent to this country, and that when I relinquished the government of it in the year 1854 it was my happiness to leave it in a state of tranquillity and prosperity; that in the year 1861, a rebellion having again broken out in New Zealand, I was once more specially sent, here, and that it is again my happiness upon being removed by your Grace's advice from this Government, to leave New Zealand in a state of tranquillity and returning prosperity; and that I humbly represent to Her Majesty that I desire to claim no merit for these circumstances, but rather to attribute them to the blessing of Divine providence, and to the abilities and exertions of Her Majesty's subjects who have advised me, and aided me in my duties; and, further, that I humbly trust that the almost unanimous voice of Her Majesty's subjects in New Zealand, amongst whom I have laboured in Her Majesty's service for a great part of twenty-two years, will satisfy Her Majesty that I have done my utmost to promote the well are and happiness of the inhabitants of this part of Her Majesty's possessions.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

BUCKINGHAM.

Government House, Auckland, 28th December, 1867.
MY LORD DUKE,—

I have the honour to transmit, for your Grace's information, a copy of an address I have received from the Executive Council of New Zealand, as also a copy of my reply to that address.

I have, &c.,

G. GREY.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

Enclosure.ADDRESS from the EXECUTIVE COUNCIL.

Wellington.—Address of Executive Council to Sir George Grey on his Retirement from the Government.
His Excellency Sir GEORGE GREY, K.C.B., &c.

When, immediately, on the receipt of the first intimation that your Excellency would shortly be informed of the name of your successor in the Government of New Zealand, both Houses of the Legislature, by simultaneous addresses, marked their high regard for your Excellency personally and their appreciation of your distinguished public services, and while numerous bodies of colonists hastened to re-echo those sentiments of respect which everywhere greeted you in your late visit throughout the provinces, we abstained from approaching your Excellency with any expression of sympathy, because we could not but believe that at the close of your career in New Zealand Her Majesty would have been advised to mark her appreciation of your services; but the tone of the late despatches addressed to your Excellency impels us no longer to withhold the expression of the sentiments entertained towards you by those who have witnessed near at hand the devotion to the Empire and to public duty which has distinguished your long career. Seldom has a Governor been placed in circumstances more trying, and amid duties more conflicting and embarrassing. In so difficult a position we cannot but think that your Excellency might reasonably have expected that you would not have been left unprotected to bear the unjust aspersions to which you have been exposed. Again and again during the last twenty-six years, where there has been danger and difficulty in the administration of colonial affairs, your Excellency's aid has been involved by the most eminent statesmen of the day. Sacrifices you have disregarded, and trials have served as opportunities of evincing devotion to public duty, and we cannot but regard it as an indication of the indifference, if not positive disfavour, with which the colonies of the Empire are regarded, when loyalty, zeal, and high intelligence displayed in the administration of their affairs are passed by without even the courtesy of a cold acknowledgement. Nevertheless, it will be no mean gratification to your Excellency to feel assured that upon your retirement from the Government of New Zealand it is universally recognized that, in defence of constitutional government, the honour of the colony intrusted to your guardianship, and the best interests of the Empire, you have added to your sacrifices that of the assured prospect of some still more honourable position in Her Majesty's service, or a distinguished retirement from the cares of office. We trust that the day may not be far distant when the high services you have so freely and ably rendered will meet with a fitting recognition. We pray your Excellency to accept these few words as expressing the sentiments of Ministers who have had the honour of being associated with you in the administration of the affairs of New Zealand.

Wellington,

20th November, 1867.

E. W. STAFFORD. J. C. RICHMOND. T. M. HAULTAIN. J. RICHARDSON. W. FITZHERBERT. J. H. HARRIS. J. HALL.

His Excellency's Reply.

GENTLEMEN,—

It is fitting that I should briefly acknowledge the far more than mere friendly words which you have addressed to me on my removal from my office of Governor of New Zealand. These words, coming from those who not only have seen and known the trials and difficulties I have had to encounter, but who also amidst those difficulties have been my advisers and fellow-labourers, are very valuable to me, and I shall often think of them in my retirement. I will only further say to those who by their advice, by their sympathy, and by their own trials and devotion to public duty, have so often guided my path in difficulties, and lightened the labours imposed upon me, that I thank them for the services they have rendered their Queen and country; that I also thank them for their affectionate farewell; and that, whatever may be the future trials and changes of my life, I shall always think myself fortunate that they were for so long given to me as companions and associates in the trying duties I had to perform in New Zealand.

Auckland,

28th December, 1867.

G. GREY.

No. 34. COPY of a DESPATCH from his Grace the Duke of BUCKINGHAM to the OFFICER ADMINISTERING the GOVERNMENT of NEW ZEALAND.

Downing Street, 22nd January, 1868.

SIR,—

I have received Sir George Grey's Despatch No. 115, of 30th October, written in acknowledgment of mine of 22nd August, No. 51, announcing the appointment of Sir George Bowen as his successor in the Government of New Zealand. Sir George Grey will have perceived from my Despatches Nos. 71 and 72, of 10th and 23rd November, and from that of the 28th December, No. 87, that his removal from New Zealand was merely consequent on the expiration of his term of office. The statement contained in Sir George Grey's Despatch No. 115, of the 30th October, was evidently made under the misapprehension that he had been prematurely recalled, the fact being that his period of administration had expired; but I shall nevertheless lay that despatch before Her Majesty.

I have, &c.,

The Officer Administering the Government of New Zealand.

No. 35. EXTRACT from a DESPATCH from Governor Sir G. F. BOWEN, G.C.M.G., to his Grace the Duke of BUCKINGHAM.

Government House, Wellington, 5th March, 1868.

MY LORD DUKE,—

- 1. Among the manifold and urgent public questions which have necessarily pressed themselves on my attention during the month which has now elapsed since my assumption, on the 5th ultimo, of the Government of New Zealand, I have given much thought and care to that very complicated and difficult but highly interesting subject, the present condition and future prospects of the Maori race.
- 2. By my desire the Minister for the Native Department (Mr. J. C. Richmond) has addressed to the principal officers and agents of the Government throughout the colony a circular (of which I enclose a copy) directing each of them to furnish, for the information of the Governor, a detailed report on Native affairs in his district. It will be seen that this report is to contain as full a history as possible of the last few years, and of the events that have come under the personal cognizance of each Government agent. Reliable information is called for as to the; actual number of the Maoris; the causes and influences affecting their increase or decrease; their feelings towards Europeans generally; their physical and moral condition; the rise, object, progress, and tendency of the Hauhau movement; the opinion of the Maoris in respect of the recent war, of the removal of the Imperial troops, of the suppression of the recent outbreaks of rebellion on the east coast of the North Island and elsewhere, and of the prospect of the permanent restoration of peace. Finally, the several agents of the Government are required to notice the working of the recent Acts of the New Zealand Legislature in reference to the lands, the education, and the parliamentary representation of the Maoris; and generally to supply such further information as may appear likely to be useful in framing an accurate opinion of the present state of Native affairs.
- 3. I am assured that the public officers in the Maori districts are for the most part men of ability and local experience, and it is hoped that the reports which will be elicited by the above-mentioned circular will go far towards enabling both the Imperial and the Colonial Governments to arrive at a correct estimate of the present condition, feeling, and prospects of the Native race. It will be my duty to transmit to your Grace copies of these reports, when they shall have been received, together with such remarks and illustrations as they seem to need.....

I have, &c.,

G. F. BOWEN.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

EXTRACT from a DESPATCH from Governor Sir G. F. BOWEN, G.C.M.G., to his Grace the Duke of # BUCKINGHAM.

Transmitting List of Maori Tribes and Chiefs. Government House, Wellington, 17th March, 1868.
MY LORD DUKE,—

In continuation of my previous despatches respecting the present condition of the Maoris, I have the honour to transmit herewith a map, showing the distribution of the several Native tribes in New Zealand. With trifling exceptions, they are all resident in the Northern Island. I annex a nominal list of these clans, and of the principal chiefs, together with a statement of the estimated number of each tribe at the present time, and of its attitude, whether loyal or hostile to the Government, with other explanatory remarks....

It will be perceived that the total Maori population is estimated now, in 1868, at 38,517; of which number all except from 1,500 to 2,000 reside in the Northern Island. Ten years ago, in 1858, a Government census returned the total Maori population at 56,049; twenty years ago, in 1848; the Maoris were estimated at about 100,000.

The causes which have contributed to produce this rapid and deplorable decay have been discussed at length by several writers of ability and local experience. I would refer more particularly to the works of Mr. Fox, formerly Prime Minister of this colony; and of A. S. Thompson, who was resident in New Zealand for many years as surgeon to the 58th Regiment. Mr. Fox shows that the gradual disappearance of the Maoris is not to be attributed in any large degree to their intercourse with Europeans, for "that, for the most part, has led to the adoption of better food, better dwellings; better general habits of life." ... "The one great cause has been, and is, their utter disregard of all those social and sanitary conditions which are essential to the continuing vitality of the human race. This cause was in existence long before there was a European in the Islands, and there is little doubt that the race was on the decrease when Cook first landed there." Dr. Thompson observes: "The extinction of aboriginal races has been often caused by evil treatment. The bauds of the early settlers in America, the West Indies, Tasmania, Australia, and Africa, are not clean from this imputation; but, as far as the story of New Zealand has yet been unrolled, the pioneers of civilization and the majority of English, Irish, and Scotch settlers in the Islands have, with some few exceptions, acted towards the Natives in a spirit of Christianity unknown to the Saxon colonists in Ireland, the Norman invaders of England, or the Spanish conquerors of America."

It is to be hoped that the general restoration of peace, and the prohibition of intertribal wars; the gradual individualization of property in land now held in common; the progress of trade and friendly intercourse between the European settlers and the Maoris; the increasing use of animal food and wheaten flour; the schools, hospitals, roads, and other institutions by means of which the Colonial Government is endeavouring to promote the civilization of the Natives, will all contribute to arrest the further decay of the surviving remnant of a most interesting race.

I have, &c.,

G. F. BOWEN.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

Governor Grey's Departure from New Zealand. Government House, Wellington, 8th September, 1868.
MY LORD DUKE,—

With reference to my Despatch No. 84, of the 28th August ultimo, I am now requested by my Responsible Advisers to transmit to your Grace a further letter, which has been forwarded to the Colonial Secretary for that purpose by Sir George Grey.

2. I beg-leave to take this opportunity of reporting that Sir George Grey will leave Wellington for England by the Panama mail steamer on the afternoon of this day. He has already received numerous addresses and other demonstrations of respect and esteem, on the expiration of his term of office. Before his embarkation to-day he will be entertained at a public luncheon, at which Sir David Monro, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, will preside. I have been invited to be present on this occasion; and I feel much satisfaction in evincing my sense of the personal courtesy and consideration which I have received since my arrival in New Zealand from my able and accomplished predecessor, whose name will be inseparably connected with the history of this colony.

I have, &c.,

G. F. BOWEN.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos. P.S.—The demonstration in honour of Sir George Grey on his departure from New Zealand was very successful.

No. 38. COPY of a DESPATCH from the Right Hon. Earl GRANVILLE to Governor Sir G. F. BOWEN, G.C.M.G.

Downing Street, 29th January, 1869.

SIR,—

I have received with the deepest concern the intelligence which has reached this country from New Zealand during the last few weeks.

I learnt through unofficial channels that, while a colonial force had failed in an enterprise directed against a Native pa on the west coast of the Northern Island, some hundreds of rebel Maoris had attacked some outlying homesteads in the neighbourhood of Poverty Bay, and had cruelly destroyed a number of their own countrymen, and upwards of fifty Europeans—men, women, and children. The details of this afflicting intelligence, with your own observations on them, are furnished in several despatches which I have just received, but to which it is impossible for me to give any adequate consideration before the departure of the mail.

I infer from your telegram of the 18th December—eleven days later than the date of your latest despatch—that the authors of the atrocities which you describe have been severely punished; and I perceive that the colonial authorities are exerting themselves in earnest for the protection of those who depend on them. I hope that before this despatch reaches you the efforts of the Government and the prudence and public spirit of the settlers will have placed the European population of the threatened districts in a position of comparative safety.

I do not very clearly collect from your despatches the precise limits within which the apprehension of Native disturbances is considered to exist, or the number of persons now in arms. It appears to me, at this distance, that the terrible nature of the catastrophe which has occurred leads you to overrate the magnitude of the danger to the colony, more especially as your Ministry do not forward any request to retain Imperial troops at the expense of the Colonial Treasury, but have preferred, as I learn from H. Manners-Sutton, and, I think, very properly preferred, to send to Victoria and the other Australian Colonies for recruits.

I have, &c.,

GRANVILLE.

Governor Sir G. F. Bowen, G.C.M.G.

No. 39. COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir G. F. BOWEN to his Grace the Duke of BUCKINGHAM:.

Government House, "Wellington, N.Z., 20th February, 1869.
MY LORD Duke,—

For some time past there have been rumours of probable disturbances in the district of the Wairarapa, which begins at a distance of about thirty-five miles east from Wellington. I thought it advisable to choose the present time to pay to this district a short official visit, from which I returned yesterday. I was accompanied throughout my tour by Commodore Lambert and Captain Montgomerie, of H.M.S. "Blanche," and by Dr. Featherston, the Superintendent of the Province of Wellington.

- The fertile and picturesque valley of the Wairarapa stretches inland from Palliser Bay, and is about sixty-five miles in length, with a breadth ranging from fifteen to nearly forty miles. The European settlers amount to nearly three thousand souls. Of this number about eight hundred are adult males, and of these I found about seven hundred, in fact almost every man capable of bearing arms, enrolled in the local corps of Militia and Volunteers. I saw, moreover, fully five hundred horsemen assembled in one day at Greytown, the principal centre of population in the Wairarapa; and I was escorted through the district by a strong detachment of Volunteer Cavalry. The usual addresses of respect and welcome were presented to me by both the Europeans and Maoris, and a public concert and ball were given in my honour at Greytown. These festivities, as also the horse-races held on one of the days of my visit, were attended not only by the English settlers, but also by the leading Maoris of the neighbourhood.
- There is a considerable Maori population, including many Hauhaus, in some parts of the valley and of the slopes of the surrounding mountains. At the usual Korero, or Native meeting, I was addressed in loyal and pacific speeches by the principal chiefs, who, however, did not conceal their apprehension of the possible invasion of the Wairarapa by the hostile Natives, and of the disastrous consequences which would ensue should Tawhiao take the field, and call the entire Maori race to arms against the English. There can be no doubt but that the Natives generally are watching the progress of events, and in particular the removal of the Queen's troops, with gloomy irresolution, and that very much depends on the success of the negotiations recently entered upon with the view of securing at least the neutrality of the so-called Maori King.
- Meanwhile the settlers in the Wairarapa, as in most other parts of this Island, seem to be now prepared to defend in case of need their lives and homes. Nearly every able-bodied man in the valley is armed and drilled; while a redoubt; and blockhouse have been erected in a central position as a place of refuge for the women and children in the event of an outbreak.
- I may be permitted to take this opportunity of mentioning that, on my journey back from the Wairarapa, I took the opportunity of visiting at his kainga (or village), about twenty miles from Wellington, the famous Ngatiawa chief Taringa Kuri (i.e., Dog's Ear), the last survivor of those who had seen Captain Cook on one of his later voyages to New Zealand. The first English settlers in this country state that Taringa Kuri was a very old man on their first arrival here, thirty years ago, and his age is now generally believed to exceed considerably one hundred years. He is extremely feeble, but, in common with his people, he expressed much gratification at my visit.

I have, &c.,

G. F BOWEN.

His Grace the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos.

No. 40. MEMORANDUM by Mr. J. C. RICHMOND, Native Minister.

Wellington, 12th March, 1869.

THE following notes on the condition of Native affairs are submitted in continuation of similar memoranda already furnished at His Excellency's desire.

During the past two months three great strongholds of the Hauhau chiefs have fallen into the hands of the colonial forces. On the East Coast, Ngatapa, the bill fortress of Te Kooti, was reduced by Colonel Whitmore on the 5th of January; and on the 3rd of February the stronghold of Titokowaru, on the West Coast, near Nukumarū, called Tauranga-ika, was abandoned by its garrison before the advance of the same officer. Proceeding onwards, Colonel Whitmore destroyed the pa at Moturoa, which had also been deserted.

Notwithstanding these reverses, the animosity of the violent Hauhaus has been little checked. Within a month of the fall of Ngatapa, and the destruction of a very large portion of its garrison, Te Kooti reappeared with the remnant of his band at Waimana, or Waioeka, near Opotiki, where he has been joined by a few more allies, and now threatens the settlements on the Bay of Plenty.

On the West, Titokowaru, though unable to hold his pas, and pursued by Colonel Whitmore in the forest, has continued his resistance, laying ambuscades and cutting off stragglers. Another tribe has moreover commenced active hostilities at Taranaki. A party of the Ngatimaniapoto, a tribe bordering on that settlement, whose lands have not been invaded or confiscated, have come down to the frontier and murdered eight persons. Among them were Mr. Whiteley, a venerable Wesleyan missionary, one woman, and three children. The majority of the Ngatimaniapoto, whose territory stretches from the coast to the Waipa River, have always belonged to the violent section of, the King party, and have resolutely opposed the pacific policy of the King, whose authority and influence have barely sufficed to restrain them hitherto. There is reason to believe that the recent outrage was perpetrated with the deliberate purpose of forcing a general struggle between the King Natives and the colonists, and of preventing overtures of peace which it was believed Tawhiao intended shortly to have made. The news of the Taranaki massacre was immediately followed by menaces to the Waikato settlements, and active preparations have been made to meet the impending attack.

A gathering of tribes is probably at this moment taking place at Taupo, the avowed object of which is to determine the question of peace or general war. The tribes now friendly to the colony have had notice to declare their sides on this occasion. It is reported, but not on absolutely good authority, that the Taranaki massacre has induced the King to discourage this gathering, which may therefore break up without resolving on anything.

Amidst these continued outrages and alarms, which are paralysing the industry of large districts, the consideration which has led the Imperial Government to delay the removal of the 18th Regiment and the national flag from these shores is appreciated by the colony, and will increase the loyalty and cordiality of the reception which awaits His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh.

Other circumstances of special Imperial interest, which for the moment connect themselves with Native troubles, make the temporary retention of the 18th Regiment desirable. Within the last month it has been discovered that there exists among the diggers in the Auckland gold fields a branch of the Fenian organization. Persons in that connection have made treasonable overtures to the Hauhaus proprietors of some lands reported to be auriferous, with a view of obtaining a monopoly of goldmining thereon. These persons have informed the hostile Natives that they are neither English nor Scotch, but inhabitants of another, island; that they belong to the party who in Sydney shot the Duke of Edinburgh; that like the Maori they hate the British rule, and are prepared to make common cause with, King and Hauhaus to overthrow that rule in New Zealand. It is said, on reliable authority, that a person wearing a uniform with I.R. on the buttons, and a green sash, had sent a present of money and a flag to Tawhiao.

Since the above notes were written a copy of a letter purporting to have been signed and circulated by the Maori King has been sent to the Government. It is of the usual enigmatical character of such manifestoes. Some of those who have read it interpret it to be pacific, but others take the opposite view, and some Native reports connect it with an alleged order for a general rising.

The Government, whilst preparing for a general struggle, are making renewed attempts to remove the suspicions of the moderate party, and will meet any pacific overtures that may be made in a liberal spirit. It would not be prudent to place on record at present the precise steps taken or under consideration for this purpose.

For His Excellency the Governor.

J. C. RICHMOND.

SIR,—

On your representation of the value of the services rendered by the chief Te Kepa or Major Kemp, I sent to you in September last a silver-mounted sword, in order that it might be presented by you to that chief in token of Her Majesty's recognition of his services. Additional swords were forwarded to you by the last mail for presentation to five other Maori chiefs, who had rendered important services to the Government. I request that you will take a suitable occasion of presenting them to the chiefs for whom they are intended, and whose names they bear. You, will not fail to explain that they are presented to them by Her Majesty in recognition of their loyalty to the Crown, and of the gallantry which they have shown, in support of Her Majesty's Colonial Government.

I have, &c.,

Downing Street, 23rd April, 1869.

SIR,—

I have received your Despatches Nos. 14 and 20, of the 31st January and 12th February: the former enclosing a report from Colonel McDonnell of a successful expedition made by him, at the head of a party of Native cavalry, to the pa of the rebel chief Titokowaru; the latter forwarding a despatch from Colonel Whitmore, reporting the evacuation of the pa by Titokowaru, and other positions which he had occupied. I am greatly shocked to hear from Colonel McDonnell's report of the barbarous manner in which the remains of some of the colonial troops were treated, and I can hardly express the feelings of horror with which I learn that there is reason to fear that one of them was burnt alive. I am glad to find that Colonel Whitmore's proceedings on the West Coast appear likely to justify the estimate of his capacity which I was led to form by the accounts of his success in the neighbourhood of Turanga.

I have, &c.,

GRANVILLE.

Governor Sir G. F. Bowen, G.C.M.G.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir G. F.

OWEN, G.C.M.G., to the Eight Hon. Earl GRANVILLE, K.G.

Government House, Wellington, N.Z., 7th July, 1869.

My LORD,—

It is my duty to report that strong comments have been made by the leading public men of all parties in this country, in the Colonial Parliament and otherwise, and by the principal organs of the colonial Press, on the two last paragraphs of your Lordship's Despatch No. 30, of the 26th February ultimo, viz.: "I see it stated in the newspapers that you have offered a reward of £1,000 for the person of the Maori chief Titokowaru—I infer dead or alive—and £5 for the person of every Maori rebel brought in alive. I do not pronounce any opinion at present as to the propriety of these steps. But I must observe that they are so much at variance with the usual laws of war, and appear at first sight so much calculated to exasperate and extend hostilities, that they ought to have been reported to me by you officially, with the requisite explanation, which I should now be glad to receive."

- It is contended here that this passage implies that the Maoris now in arms against the Queen, and, in particular, the cannibal Titokowaru and his band, are foreign enemies, or, at all events, "belligerents," with whom "the usual laws of war" must be strictly observed, and it is felt that the question thus raised is of the highest practical importance. It has, therefore, been referred by the Colonial Ministers for the opinion of the Attorney-General, which I now enclose, soliciting for it careful consideration.
- It will be seen that, so far back as in 1842 and 1844, the then Secretary of State for the Colonies (the present Lord Derby) wrote as follows. [See enclosure.]
- Mr. Stafford, in his memorandum on this question, remarks: "Earl Granville suspends his judgment as to the propriety of these steps [i.e., the action of the Colonial Ministers in offering rewards for Titokowaru and Te Kooti], on the ground that they are much at variance with the usual laws of war.' When his Lordship shall have had leisure to consider the details of the acts of Titokowaru and Te Kooti, he will perhaps come to the conclusion that their atrocities are happily as exceptional as the course adopted with a view to their punishment. But the offers in question are not without precedent, in the history of the Mutiny in India, and even of the Fenian outrages within the heart of the United Kingdom. Every atrocity of the Sepoy Rebellion has been paralleled and outdone in the raids, burnings, violations, tortures, murders, and cannibalism of the last nine months in New Zealand, and with less provocation or excuse."
- It will be further recollected that, so far back as on the 5th September ultimo, I transmitted a memorandum from Colonel Haultain, then the Minister for Colonial Defence, showing that every effort was made in the due course of law to bring to justice Titokowaru and his gang of murderers. Warrants were issued against them after the Coroner's inquest held on the bodies of some of the settlers, whom they have treacherously killed and savagely mutilated. Any prisoners that may be taken will be tried before the Supreme Court of the colony, as were the Maoris who in 1865 murdered Messrs. Volkner and Fulloon at Opotiki, on the east coast of this Island." In my previous Despatch No. 78, of the 8th of August, 1868, I had forwarded a copy of Titokowaru's proclamation to his tribe (dated 25th June, 1868), in which he boasted of his cannibalism—of "eating an European trooper like a piece of beef. He was cooked in a pot; the women and children partook of the food. I have begun to eat human flesh, and my throat is constantly open for the flesh of man." Again, with my Despatch No. 14, of the 31st of January ultimo, I forwarded Colonel McDonnell's account of his visit to Titokowaru's abandoned pa at Te Ngutu-o-te-nanu? ("the Hawk's Beak"), to ascertain the fate of the officers and men of the colonial forces who were killed and wounded in the action of the 7th September, 1868, and whose bodies unfortunately fell into the hands of the rebels. Colonel McDonnell wrote: "I regret to say that the report which reached me about the burning of the bodies of those left in the field is too correct; and a more horrible and revolting spectacle could not have been witnessed. We found the remains of two large fires or altars outside the pa, and of a small one inside, at the foot of a rata tree. The charred remains of human bones and skulls at each of these fires, with other signs horrible to think of, told a sickening and awful tale. I fear the story related of poor Corporal Russell, relative to his having been burnt alive, is true; and this most likely took place at the foot of the rata tree mentioned above. There is no doubt that the dead were partly eaten and partly offered as a sacrifice by the infamous Titokowaru and his band." In your Despatch No. 45, of 23rd April ultimo, your Lordship acknowledged the receipt of my despatch "enclosing a report from Colonel McDonnell of a successful expedition under him to the pa of the rebel Titokowaru," and added, "I am greatly shocked to hear, from Colonel McDonnell's report, of the barbarous manner in which the remains of some of the colonial troops were treated; and I can hardly express the feeling of horror with which I learn that there is reason to fear that one of them was burnt alive."

- Your Lordship has required from me explanations of the conduct of the Colonial Government with regard to Titokowaru. The above-mentioned facts alone, taken in connection with the opinion of the Attorney-General, seem to justify, according to the law of nations, the decision of the Ministers to treat Titokowaru and also Te Kooti (whose cruelties have been hardly less atrocious) in an exceptional manner, so as to make a clear and broad distinction between them and those insurgents who, like the Waikato tribes, have waged a comparatively honourable warfare. Moreover, it has been asked here, "Why should the Ministry of New Zealand be blamed for adopting, against Maori murderers and cannibals, measures far less stringent than those for which Lord Seaton, Sir Henry Ward, Lord Torrington, Lord Canning, and other Governors have been applauded for adopting in the suppression of the rebellions in Canada, Cephalonia, Ceylon, India, and Ireland?" It is well known that, in all the rebellions alluded to, rewards were offered for the persons of the rebel leaders, in some cases "dead or alive," totidem verbis; that "martial law" was proclaimed, the Habeas Corpus Act was suspended, numerous prisoners were executed for being merely taken in arms against the Crown, and other measures of repression were carried out much more severely than in New Zealand.
- As your Lordship is already aware, Colonel Haultain and Mr. Richmond offered rewards for Titokowaru and Te Kooti respectively, while those Ministers were in the field with the colonial forces, at a great distance from the seat of Government, and necessarily without the previous knowledge or sanction of the Governor. Their colleagues entirely concurred in the action taken, so soon as they heard of it; and when it was discussed in the Parliament the leading men of all parties gave it almost unanimous support. I am informed that there appears to be a very general determination to resist the active interference of any Imperial authority in the internal government of New Zealand, now that the Imperial Government has transferred the entire control and management of Native affairs to the Colonial Ministers for the time being, and has absolutely declined to give any assistance or to incur any responsibility in the suppression of the existing Maori rebellion.
- I earnestly trust that I shall not be misunderstood in any quarter, and that my conduct during my long career in the service of the Crown will show that I am not likely to shrink from any responsibility properly belonging to my office. I have never concealed that, so far as my personal feelings are concerned, I should greatly prefer to be in the position occupied by my predecessors in New Zealand down to 1862, for (among other considerations) it is naturally very painful to be subjected to censure, both in England and in this colony, for the actions of other men, when all power of direct control has been taken out of the hands of the Governor, and he has also been deprived of all physical force by the entire removal of the Imperial troops. But I know, of course, that this position is for many reasons unavoidable under existing circumstances; and (as I have often stated elsewhere) I concur with the opinion of Mr. Herman Merivale that "The suggestion of establishing in the same colony Responsible Government for the settlers, and a separate administration of Native affairs under the Imperial authorities, is unpractical. There cannot be two Governments in the same community; certainly not unless some mode can be devised of having two, public purses." It might be added that the progress of events in this colony has abundantly proved that nothing but disaster can follow from divided councils and from divided power and responsibility. The real management of Native affairs must rest either with a Governor responsible to the Secretary of State, or with a Ministry responsible to the Colonial Parliament. It is not to be denied, however, that the Governor of a colony possessing parliamentary institutions, as an impartial though not indifferent observer, and friendly moderator of extreme views, may effect much good, but only (as Earl Grey has remarked) "by a judicious use of the influence rather than of the authority of his office." It need scarcely be added that he must always be careful not to identify himself in any manner with illegal or cruel measures; but I have yet to learn that there is any set of public men in the New Zealand Parliament desirous to adopt measures of that nature.
- In this and in previous despatches I have submitted the explanation required concerning the conduct of the Colonial Government, with, I trust, a not unbecoming frankness, and certainly without the intentional use of a single word inconsistent with the respect due to your Lordship, both personally and as the Minister through whom I receive the instructions of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.,

The Right Hon. Earl Granville, K.G.

Enclosure.OPINION of the ATTORNEY-GENERAL as to the LEGAL STATUS of the MAORIS now in ARMS.

THE opinion of the Attorney-General was requested, by direction of the Hon. the Colonial Secretary, on 23rd June, 1869, in the following terms: "The concluding paragraph of Earl Granville's despatch No. 30, of 26th February, 1869, implies that the Maoris now in arms against the Government are a foreign enemy, or, at all events, 'belligerents,' with whom 'the usual laws of war' must be observed. The Attorney-General is requested to state his opinion how far this is true, and to define the legal position of the Maoris according to the existing law."

I am required, as I understand, to state whether, in my opinion, the Maoris now in arms are to be treated as belligerents, with whom the, usual laws of war must be observed, or whether they are to be treated as criminals guilty of treason in levying war against the Sovereign; and, secondly, to define the legal position of the Maori inhabitants of New Zealand, particularly with a view to the question, Whether they are bound to obey the laws of the land, and are liable to punishment for the infraction of such laws equally with the white population of New Zealand.

The second question seems to be properly considered before the first. There can be no doubt that Her Majesty the Queen is Sovereign over the whole of New Zealand. Questions were at one time raised on this subject, even by those whose opinions were undoubtedly entitled to great consideration. I do not think it necessary or expedient to argue this question. It seems to me that I shall best serve the object with which the question is put to me, if I state what the doubts were which at one time were raised, and the manner in which those questions have, for all practical purposes, been disposed of.

In the years 1842 and 1843 this question was much debated. Mr. Swainson, the then Attorney-General for New Zealand, argued that only those Maori tribes which had actually acknowledged the Queen's sovereignty over them could be deemed British subjects or be held amenable to our law. At page 474 of House of Commons Papers on New Zealand, Vol. IV., is printed a copy of an opinion by Mr. Swainson on a matter in which he considers that this question arose. He says, "I have elsewhere given my opinion that those tribes only which have acknowledged the Queen's sovereignty can be deemed British subjects, and are amenable to our laws. Whether the Native Tangaroa is so amenable for any act he may have committed depends upon the circumstance whether the aggressor and the suffering party belong to tribes acknowledging the Queen's authority, and whether the scene of action was within the British dominion."—(27th December, 1842.)

The opinion the Attorney-General refers to as having been given by, him elsewhere, is referred to in the Minutes of the Executive Council of New Zealand, held at about the same period (29th December, 1842), and the opinion is said to be annexed and marked J.K. That opinion is not, I believe, to be found; but the Attorney-General, at that meeting of the Executive, was called upon by the Officer Administering the Government to express his opinion on the subject, and did so. The Minutes, so far as they bear directly on the question, are as follow: "His Excellency requested that the Executive Council would give their opinions on the following questions: 1. 'Are the Islands of New Zealand British territory ?' The Colonial Treasurer: 'I consider the whole of the Islands of New Zealand British territory.' The Attorney-General: 'No.'— 2. Whether the whole of the aboriginal race of New Zealanders are British subjects and amenable to British law ?' The Colonial Secretary: 'I consider they are all British subjects, and amenable to British law.' The Attorney-General: 'I consider that the title of Great Britain to the sovereignty of New Zealand rests partly upon discovery, partly upon cession, partly upon assertion, and partly, upon occupation; that from these sources conjointly, as against all other nations, and as to British subjects, I think Great Britain has a title to the sovereignty over the whole of New Zealand, and that she possesses the right of pre-emption of territory from the Natives, and has the power to regulate trade and commerce with other nations; but, as to those tribes who have never, ceded the sovereignty and who refuse to acknowledge the Queen's authority, I think that Great Britain has not the right, nor would it be consistent with good faith, to impose upon them her penal code.'"

In acknowledging the despatch communicating these opinions, the Secretary of State, Lord Stanley, writes as follows: "It appears to me, however, indispensable to advert, with the least possible delay, to the opinions maintained by the Attorney-General of New Zealand regarding the extent of Her Majesty's dominion in the Island of New Ulster. Mr. Swainson, if I rightly collect his meaning, draws the following distinction: He appears to hold that the Queen's sovereignty over the New Zealand Islands cannot be controverted on behalf of any foreign country, or by Her Majesty's subjects of British birth; but that it is impossible to assert that sovereignty against any chief who has not acknowledged it, or in relation to any district belonging to him or to his tribe. I cannot say that this distinction is perfectly intelligible to me. But it is my duty to deny, in the most unequivocal terms, the accuracy of any opinion, -whosoever may be the author of it, which may deny Her Majesty's sovereign title to any part of the territories comprised within the terms of the Commissions issued under the Great Seal of the United Kingdom for the government of New Zealand. Throughout the whole of his discussion on this subject, Mr. Swainson makes, no allusion to the terms of those instruments. The omission is very remarkable. If accidental and inadvertent, it is not creditable to Mr. Swainson's accuracy. If he omitted all allusion to those Commissions, as being irrelevant or unimportant to the question in debate, then the omission is hardly reconcilable with his possession of a just view of the history and constitution of the British colonial settlements. I regard the Royal Commissions for the Government of New Zealand as ascertaining beyond all controversy the limits of Her Majesty's sovereignty in that part of the world: that is, I hold that it is not competent for any subject of the Queen's to controvert the rights which in those Commissions Her Majesty has solemnly asserted. I do not think it necessary or convenient to discuss with Mr. Swainson the justice or the policy of the course which the Queen has been advised to pursue. For the present purpose, it is sufficient to say that Her Majesty has pursued it. All the territories comprised within the Commissions of the Government of New Zealand, and all persons inhabiting those territories, are and must be considered as being to all intents and purposes within the dominions of the British Crown. Mr. Swainson must be apprised that neither he nor any person who shall oppose this fundamental principle of your Government can be permitted to act any longer as a public officer under the Queen's Commission."—(21st June 1843. House of Commons Papers on New Zealand, Vol. I v., page 475.)

On the same subject (13th July, 1843) Mr. Swainson refers to his former opinion in the following terms (see House of Commons Papers on New Zealand, page 167): "With reference to a former transaction, my opinion was requested as to how far the New Zealanders were amenable to British law. It was given to the effect that, as to all other nations, the sovereignty of Great Britain over the whole of these Islands is absolute and entire, but that, as to the Natives, keeping in view the solemn and repeated disclaimers of Her Majesty's Government of every pretension to seize on the Islands of New Zealand, or to govern them as part of the dominion of Great Britain, unless the free and intelligent consent of the Natives should be first obtained, that those chiefs and tribes who were not parties to the treaty, and who had always refused to recognize Her Majesty's sovereign authority over them, could not be deemed British subjects and amenable to our Laws."

On the 10th February, 1844, Secretary of State Lord Stauley refers to this reiteration of Mr. Swainson's opinion in the following terms (see H.C. Papers, N.Z., page 173): "To the Colonial Attorney-General's renewed expression of his opinion that the Queen's sovereignty of the New Zealand Islands cannot be admitted, because, in his judgment, those conditions have not been fulfilled which Her Majesty declared must precede the assertion of any such right, I answer by calling your attention to my despatch of the 21st June, 1843, No. 37, and by observing that in this case the judgment of the Colonial Attorney-General is overruled, and must henceforward be silenced, by the opposite judgment of the Queen and Parliament. Her Majesty is satisfied, and Parliament is satisfied, of the fulfilment of the preliminary conditions in question. In that conviction the Queen has, by the most solemn acts, asserted her own sovereignty over the whole of New Zealand, and has, with equal distinctness, announced and asserted it to all foreign States. Parliament, by their enactment of the session of 1842, have affirmed the same principle. I repeat, therefore, that the most implicit acquiescence in it is the indispensable condition of the tenure of any public office in the colony."

It will be seen that the ground taken by the Secretary of State is, that the Queen, by her Charters and Commissions, and the Queen in Parliament, by Act, has assumed sovereignty over the whole of New Zealand, and none can be admitted to question her sovereignty. If that argument was sufficient in those early times, it certainly must be at the present day. Not only has the Queen since then granted other charters and commissions for the government of the whole of New Zealand, but she has in Parliament passed many laws for the government of New Zealand, and the regulation of various matters relating to it. Reference may especially be made to the, Constitution Act, sections 53, 71, and 81.

If it is established, as most undoubtedly it is, that the whole of New Zealand is subject to the sovereignty of the Queen, what is the condition of the Maori inhabitants thereof? Are they subjects or aliens? What, if any, allegiance do they owe? There can be no doubt that the rights of sovereignty extend to all persons within the territory over which the sovereignty extends; they extend to all strangers resident therein—not only to those who are naturalized and to those who are domiciled therein, but also to those whose residence is transitory. It is true that, for some purposes not material to the present question, there is a distinction in the jurisdiction which the Sovereign has over naturalized and natural-born inhabitants on the one hand, and foreigners who are for the time dwelling therein on the other. The latter owe a local and temporary allegiance only, the former a natural allegiance. It is, I think, clear that those of the Maori race now inhabiting New Zealand who were born before the assumption of sovereignty over the land by the Queen became naturalized subjects of the Queen, whether the sovereignty was ceded or not; it is clear that all former dominion, if any such existed, must be taken to have been extinguished by the Queen's assumption of sovereignty, and that such persons are now, for all purposes, naturalized subjects of New Zealand, and equally bound by the same laws, and owe the same allegiance as natural-born subjects, whether born of the British, or Maori, or any foreign race. Indeed, so far as relates to the question of obligation to obey the municipal laws of the land, and to the amenability to the punishments provided by them for infraction of their provisions, there is no distinction between natural-born and naturalized subjects and alien inhabitants.

In concluding this branch of the question, I beg to refer to the Act of the General Assembly, passed in the session of 1865, entitled "The Native Rights Act, 1865." That Act recites that doubts had been raised whether certain persons of the Maori race were natural-born subjects of Her Majesty, and whether the Courts of the colony had jurisdiction in all cases touching the persons and property of the Maori people, and by that Act it is declared and enacted in the 2nd section that "Every person of the Maori race within the Colony of New Zealand, whether born before or since New Zealand became a dependency of Great Britain, shall be taken and deemed to be a natural-born subject of Her Majesty, to all intents and purposes whatsoever." I am not well aware of the circumstances that gave occasion for the passing of this Act. So far as I have been able to learn, the principal reason for the measure was that it was deemed expedient that there should be a legislative declaration on the subject, rather for the purpose of declaring that the Maori race would, for the future, be treated as entitled to the rights, and as subject to the obligations, of natural-born subjects, than for quieting any doubt in the minds of those whose opinions on the subject were entitled to consideration. Moreover, an opinion had been given by the Law Officers of the Crown in England (inferentially at least) by questioning whether the Maoris, in respect of land over which the Native title had not been extinguished, could bring any action of trespass or ejectment in the Queen's Courts in New Zealand, or whether the Queen's Courts would ever exercise jurisdiction over real property in Native districts. From this inferential expression of opinion it is possible that an impression may have arisen, though certainly without reason, that the Queen's Courts would not redress personal wrongs when suffered by Maoris. The language of the Act seems rather to convey the notion that the Legislature intended to confer rights than to create liabilities. However, the Act does undoubtedly put beyond all question the status of the Maori inhabitants of New Zealand, whether born before or after the Queen's assumption of sovereignty.

If it be granted, as no doubt it must, that the Queen is Sovereign over all the territories within New Zealand, and that the Maori people are natural-born or naturalized subjects of the Queen, the next question for consideration is, Whether, in dealing with the Maoris now in arms, the usual laws of war are to be observed.

It has been already shown that not only natural-born and naturalized citizens, but also aliens dwelling in New Zealand, are alike subject to the municipal law of the land, and alike liable to punishment for the breach of these laws. It follows from this that, in suppressing a rising against the constituted Government, the same measures may be taken against those who are citizens and those who are aliens only for the time dwelling in the land. Indeed, to both classes of persons the term "rebels" may justly be applied; they both owe allegiance to the Crown in return for its protection. If the Maoris were the subjects of a foreign State at war with the Queen, then, no doubt, such persons could not be considered as rebels: but the Maoris are not the subjects of a foreign State; they are subjects of Great Britain, and are now in arms against the Sovereign.

It is not easy, nor perhaps possible, to lay down any general rule which ought to guide the Sovereign in dealing with those of his people who take up arms against him. It may be sufficient to say that when rebellion has assumed such proportions that those who are in arms against the Sovereign would be able, if forced to do so by the conduct of the Sovereign towards them, to take such reprisals upon those who adhere to the Sovereign as to insist upon the observances of the usages of war, then probably those in rebellion should be treated as enemies with whom the usages of war should be observed. The adoption of such a course is forced upon the Sovereign with a view to confining the effects of war to narrower limits. Acting from such motives, prisoners taken by the Sovereign would not be put to death as rebels, whether with or without trial, lest those prisoners who should be taken by those in rebellion should in reprisal be put to death. The reason for the observance of the usages of war fails (whether the war be a civil war or between State and State) if those in arms on the opposite side violate the laws of war. No doubt, in such a case, the consequences of such violation of the rules of war ought to be confined to those who are responsible for and have taken part in them, and ought not to be extended to those who, taking no part in them, are nevertheless implicated in the rebellion.

The Maoris now in arms have put forward no grievance for which they seek redress. Their object, so far as it can be collected from their acts, is murder, cannibalism, and rapine. They form themselves into bands, and roam the country seeking a prey. In punishing the perpetrators of such crimes, is the Sovereign to be restrained by the rules which the laws of nature and of nations have declared applicable in the wars between civilized nations? Clearly not. Even if those now in arms had not been guilty of such enormous atrocities, it does not appear to me that the insurrection or rebellion is of such a character, or has yet reached such proportions, as to enable it to be said that those who, having taken part in it, are captured, ought to be treated as prisoners of war. I see no reason why they should not be treated as persons guilty of levying war against the Crown. No doubt in so treating them the Crown would exercise its power with mercy: the numbers of those in arms, and who have been and are likely to be captured, and the fact that the men are of a savage race, afford sufficient reasons for confining the highest penalties of the law to those who are the leaders of the revolt, or have actually participated in the atrocities that have been committed. Unfortunately, however, the revolt has been carried on in defiance of all the laws of nature, and there can be no doubt, that all who have taken part in it have forfeited all claim for mercy: certainly, all title to the observance towards them of the usages of war, if they ever had such title. Nevertheless, the measures taken to suppress such revolts as those that have occurred, and no doubt will continue to occur amongst the Maoris, should be such as are calculated to suppress, and not to extend or exaggerate them; and with this view, no doubt, the Government will, as it has always done, treat those who have taken part in such revolts with no greater severity than the circumstances of the case may seem to require.

Reference is made, in the questions put to me, to the despatch of the Secretary of State, Lord Granville, of the 26th February, 1869. In this he says, "I see it stated in the newspapers that you have offered a reward of £1,000 for the person of the Maori chief Titokowaru (I infer alive or dead), and £5 for the persons of Maori rebels brought in. I do not pronounce any opinion at present as to the propriety of these steps, but I must observe that they are so much at variance with the usual laws of war, and appear, at first sight, so much calculated to exasperate and extend hostilities, that they ought to have been reported to me by you officially, with the requisite explanation, which I should now be glad to receive." The Secretary of State uses language from which it may be implied that those who have been and are still perpetrating such atrocities as have been perpetrated Here ought, in his opinion, to be treated as enemies carrying on "hostilities" according to the usages of war, and that such hostilities may be exasperated and extended by the offering of rewards for the apprehension of such enemies. This measure does not seem open to any objection in the case of a Government engaged in the suppression of a revolt, accompanied, as such revolt has been, with all the unrelenting cruelty of savage nature. The object of the Government is self-preservation. The peaceful citizens must be protected at all costs. Even in the case of a foreign enemy who violates the laws of nature and the usages of war, the utmost severities are permitted as a punishment for his crimes. According to Vattel (Book III., ch. viii.), "There is one case in which we may refuse to spare the life of an enemy who surrenders, or to allow any capitulation to a town reduced to the last extremity. It is when that enemy has been guilty of some enormous breach of the law of nations, and particularly when he has violated the laws of war. This refusal of quarter is no natural consequence of the war, but a punishment for his crime—a punishment which the injured party has a right to inflict. But, in order that it may be justly inflicted, it must fall on the guilty. When we are at war with a savage nation, who observe no rules, and never give quarter, we may punish them in the persons of any of their people whom we take (these belonging to the number of the guilty), and endeavour, by this rigorous proceeding, to force them to respect the laws of humanity."

JAMES

No. 44 PROTEST presented to Earl GRANVILLE by Sir GEORGE GREY, Sir CHARLES CLIFFORD, and Others, New Zealand Colonists in London.

WE, the undersigned persons who have been officially connected with the Legislature and Government of the Colony of New Zealand, venture to take this public notice of a despatch from Earl Granville to the Governor of New Zealand, dated the 21st March ultimo, in reference to an application made on behalf of that colony for assistance in its present dangers. We feel justified in taking this step because we personally had a share in the transactions to which the despatch relates, and because the colony has no authorized political organ in this country.

That department of Government (the Colonial Office) to which the colony would naturally look for protection becomes itself the instrument of wrong. In making this public protest we disclaim all intention of reflecting on Earl Granville. We have regretted that for some time past each successive Secretary of State, on assuming the seals of the Colonial Department, has been led by wrong information to attach his name to some despatch, the allegations of which being erroneous, and the tone irritating, if not insulting, the Colonial Government has been forced into a position of hostility to the Colonial Minister, whilst it has always been the earnest desire of the colonists, in the most friendly and loyal spirit, to aid that high officer in the discharge of his onerous and difficult duties.

We regard the allegations expressed and implied in Lord Granville's despatch as calculated deeply to injure the European population of New Zealand in the estimation of their fellow-countrymen in Great Britain, to inflame the passions of Natives already in arms against the Government, to produce disaffection among those who are friendly, to drive those who are neutral or wavering into, the hostile ranks, and, at the same time, to create a bitter feeling of hostility on the part of the colonists towards the Government of the Mother-country, which, it is to be feared, may become a national tradition. The publication in England at the present time was unjust, because the colonists, not having had time to reply to it, are thus condemned unheard, and suffer prejudice which it may be difficult if not impossible to remove, from groundless charges of the gravest kind circulated without refutation.

We declare, from our personal knowledge, that the allegations so conveyed or implied against the Colonial Government are without foundation. Equally groundless is the imputation implied in the, despatch that the colonists are not exerting themselves to the utmost in their own defence.

We regard the action thus taken by the Imperial Government, accompanied by an absolute refusal of aid to the colony under any circumstances, as in the highest degree ungenerous. It is the first time in British history that Great Britain has insultingly refused assistance to her countrymen in danger which she herself has been instrumental in erecting.

We declare that the repudiation of the plain obligation entered into by treaty on Her Majesty's behalf with the Natives of New Zealand, upon the faith of which they permitted us to colonize the country, is inconsistent with British honour; that it is our belief that such repudiation will be subversive in the Native mind of all confidence in the good faith of the European race.

We protest that the statement made in the despatch to the effect that all responsibility arising out of those obligations was transferred to the colonists at their own demand, is at variance with the circumstances. We feel surprised that such a statement should be made in disregard of the formal memorial of the General Assembly of New Zealand in 1862, expressly declining to accept such responsibility.

We regard the despatch itself as fraught with danger to the colony. The moment it becomes known in the colony it will be interpreted by Natives, and circulated amongst their fellowcountrymen. This will occur simultaneously with the removal of the last regiment. Our friendly Native allies will thus be told that the Queen has withdrawn the protection to which they have been accustomed to look in the last resort in the part they have taken in support of the Queen's Government against their own countrymen; whilst the whole body of the Natives will be taught to regard the colonists of New Zealand as their oppressors, who have brought their present danger on themselves by neglect of their obligations and wrongful usurpation of Native land; and they will learn to regard, under the sanction of Imperial authority, the massacre of missionaries, women, and children as mere acts of reprisal.

Lastly, we declare with sorrow our conviction that the policy which is being pursued towards New Zealand will have the effect of alienating the affections of Her Majesty's loyal subjects in that country, and is calculated to drive the colony out of the Empire.

G. F. BOWEN, G.C.M.G., to the Right Hon. Earl GRANVILLE, K.G.

Report of Visit to Whanganui, Taranaki, &c. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 14th October, 1869.

MY LORD,—

In continuation of my previous reports of my official visits to various parts of this colony, I have the honour to state that I left Wellington on the 20th September ultimo, and arrived at Auckland on the 4th instant, after a very interesting and, as I am assured, not unprofitable journey and voyage along the west coast of the North Island of New Zealand, during which I visited Whanganui, Wereroa, Patea, Taranaki, Whaingaroa, and other places important in connection with the recent or existing disturbances.

- Accompanied by Mr. Fox, the Prime Minister of the colony, and by one officer of my Staff (Captain Pitt, R.A.), I proceeded, in the first instance, from Wellington to Whanganui. I found that town in a far more satisfactory condition than at the period of my former visit to it in last November, when Titokowaru had advanced to within ten miles from its suburbs, and an attack was expected almost every night, followed, perhaps, by massacres of women and children like that which had then recently been perpetrated by Te Kooti at Poverty Bay. News, however, reached me that Te Kooti was near the Lake of Taupo, where he had been joined by the influential chief Te Heuheu; and that he was threatening a fresh raid from his present central position, whence he could come down the River Whanganui in war-canoes, as the rebels came before the battle, of Moutoa in 1864. The gallant chief Te Kepa (Major Kemp) at once consented again to take the field, and to march against Te Kooti with a strong division, of his clan. It will be seen from my Despatch No. 140, by this mail, that he afterwards joined Colonel McDonnell; who had set out from Napier at the head of a combined force of Europeans and loyal Natives from the East Coast; and that Te Kooti had already been defeated, with heavy loss in two severe actions.
- Annexed is a copy of the address presented to me by Te Kepa and the other chiefs of the Whanganui. It will repay an attentive perusal, as showing their views with regard to. The present posture of affairs. It will be seen that I again visited them at Putiki, their settlement at the opposite side of the river from the Town of Whanganui, and harangued them in praise of their loyalty to the Crown, of which they have given so many proofs. I also inspected, accompanied by Mr. Fox, the houses at Putiki where the wives and children (about one hundred and fifty in number) of the rebels in confinement at Wellington are fed and clothed at the expense of the Colonial Government. They seemed to be in good health, and made no complaints of any kind.
- From Whanganui we rode overland to Patea, escorted by a dozen troopers of the local Volunteer Cavalry. In disturbed districts it is considered the safest course to form only a small party of horsemen, and to ride fast, so that the Maoris may have no time to lay their deadly ambuscades. However, on our entire journey we saw only three Natives, upon whom we came suddenly at the corner of a wood. One of them was identified as a member of Titokowaru's band, and an escaped prisoner; so he was sent back to confinement.
- The country between the Rivers Whanganui and Patea, forming part of the Province of Wellington, and also the entire Province of Taranaki, has been described as the "cockpit" of New Zealand, like Belgium of Europe. For more than nine years past there has been almost constant fighting in these districts, between, on the one hand, the Imperial and Colonial forces, successively under General Pratt, General Cameron, General Chute, and Colonel Whitmore, and, on the other hand, portions of the Maori clans of the Ngatiruanui, Ngarauru, Taranaki, and Ngatiawa, under Wiremu Kingi te Rangitake (the well-known "William King," of Waitara), Hone Pihama, and other leaders, and latterly under Titokowaru. There is hardly a league throughout the whole extent of this country without its tale of some desperate skirmish, bloody ambuscade, or fierce assault and defence of a Native pa or of an English redoubt. We visited all the more remarkable scenes in the recent annals of the colony. In particular, I may mention that we rode over the flat open land at Nukumarū, where, on the afternoon of the 25th January, 1865, General Cameron's camp was attacked by six hundred Maoris, under Hone Pihama, who is stated to have forced his way, before he was repulsed, to within one hundred and fifty yards of the General's tent. On the rising ground, two miles further, we visited the pa at Tauranga-ika, fortified by Titokowaru with vast labour and great engineering skill, but which he evacuated in last February, fearing to have his supplies cut off, when he had been nearly invested by Colonel Whitmore. The first night after leaving Whanganui we bivouacked at the famous Wereroa Pa, which occupies a very important strategical position, and concerning which there was so much correspondence (since published in the Parliamentary Papers) between Sir George Grey and General Cameron. This post, as also posts at Wairoa, at Patea, and at Manawapou, are now held by strong detachments of the colonial Militia and Volunteers.

- On my arrival at the Township of Carlyle, at the mouth of the River Patea (where a small body of settlers have maintained themselves with much courage and perseverance throughout the war), I was presented with an address, of which, and my reply to it, I annex a copy.
- Here I found a portion of the loyal Ngatiporou clan from the East Coast which is to be placed (in pursuance of a policy which was successfully carried out at the Cape by General Cathcart) at Waihi, about twenty five miles north-west of Patea, as an advanced guard for the English settlements against Titokowaru's bands, which still infest the country beyond. There was some misunderstanding of the intentions of the Colonial Government and consequent discontent among the Ngatiporou, but, at the request of Mr. Fox, I addressed them in an explanatory and encouraging speech, which had the effect of restoring their good humour. The next morning they marched out to occupy the fertile lands assigned to them, a rich exchange for their rugged mountains on the East Coast. The march presented a most picturesque and suggestive picture. The kilted warriors, their mantles waving in the breeze and their arms flashing in the sun, strode proudly and rapidly forward, in long "Indian file" over the beautiful prairie, at this season—the spring-time of the Southern Hemisphere—bright and fragrant with flowers and flowering shrubs. From time to time a part of the line would be lost to sight as it passed through a ravine or a grove of trees, soon to reappear beyond. The mounted chiefs galloped to and fro, marshalling their clansmen by voice and gesture, and guiding the progress of the wagons carrying the sick and wounded. The women stepped gaily along by the side of their husbands and brothers, many with their children clinging round their necks. As I rode up to each group I was saluted by all alike with ringing shouts and chants of welcome. This fertile open country, stretching east and west, is bounded on the south by the Pacific, as blue and sparkling as the Mediterranean; on the north by the dark forests which reach inland from Whanganui to Taranaki, and above which swells the graceful, cone-like peak of Mount Egmont, the holy mountain of the Maoris, and celebrated in their traditional songs and legends. This part of the coast-land of New Zealand vividly reminded me, in many respects, of the coast-land of Sicily between Syracuse and Messina. Mount Egmont, a now extinct volcano, is a more shapely and graceful Mount Ætna. I trust that your Lordship will pardon a brief digression of this nature, as I am led to believe that you desire to realize in your mind a complete and correct picture of the scenes and events now passing in this country.
- Most thoughtful men in New Zealand seem to be now agreed that it would have been more prudent not to attempt for some years to come to place European settlers in the frontier district of Patea, which is peculiarly exposed to the attacks of the hostile Natives. But this policy was, carried out several years ago; and it now appears to be also generally agreed that to retreat at the present crisis would be regarded by the Maoris as a sign of weakness, which would probably have no other effect but to transfer the fighting from the outposts to the heart of the colony—from Patea and Waihi to Whanganui, and possibly even to Wellington. The homesteads of the settlers, over an extent of nearly a hundred miles, have been burnt by Titokowaru, their cattle devoured or driven off, and their crops and fruit trees destroyed; but they are now gradually returning to their lands, the Colonial Parliament during its last session having voted a sum of money to them, by way of loan, to enable them to make, as it were, a fresh start. The plan adopted resembles that recommended by General Cathcart for the defence of the frontier districts of the Cape Colony. The rebuilding of the scattered homesteads is discouraged, while at convenient distances and in commanding positions (such as Wereroa, Wairoa, Patea, and Waihi) redoubts and blockhouses have been erected for the protection of villages in which the settlers and their families will reside, going forth from these central places of refuge to tend their cattle and cultivate their farms. The advanced posts of the Ngatiporou inspire general confidence.
- From Patea I proceeded to New Plymouth, the capital of the Province of Taranaki, where I was heartily welcomed alike by the Europeans and the Natives, as will be partly seen from the accounts of my reception published in the local newspapers. The address presented by the settlers, and the speeches of the Maori chiefs, deserve attentive perusal, as showing the views of both races on the present condition and prospects of the West Coast. It will be perceived that four hundred Maoris, at least half of whom were returned rebels, recently in arms against the Crown, assembled to meet the Governor and the Minister for Native Affairs (Mr. McLean), who had preceded me by sea to Taranaki. To our great satisfaction, the redoubtable Ngatiruanui chief Hone Pihama, who fought so long and so bravely against Generals Cameron and Chute, attended the korero and made a loyal speech. He has always waged an honourable warfare, and has never sanctioned (like Titokowaru and Te Kooti) murders in cold blood, or the slaughter of women and children; so he comes under the spirit of the peace Proclamations. Hone Pihama has actually taken the contract for the conveyance of the mails across the country of Titokowaru, who dares not meddle with him. The truth is that many of the Maori chiefs on the West Coast, who a short time back thought and spoke of nothing but "driving the pakehas into the sea," appear now to have come to the conclusion that it will be more pleasant and profitable to follow the example of their countrymen at Hawke's Bay and elsewhere on the East Coast, by leasing their lands to the pakehas, and living in European comfort and luxury on the rents. Hone Pihama's conversations with me and with Mr. McLean were full of the blessings of Christianity, and of law and order, of loyalty to the Queen, friendship for the settlers, and offers of land on sale or lease for the making of roads, the erection of flax-mills, saw-mills, and iron foundries, the discovery of gold fields, and the general development of the natural resources of the country.

- The growing value of the New Zealand flax (Phormium tenax), as an article of commerce, is very fortunate at the present time, for its cultivation and manufacture require the active co-operation of both races—of the Maoris to supply the raw material, and of the Europeans to prepare it for use and shipment. Much attention is also being paid to the remarkable "ironstone," or titaniferous iron ore, which is found in great abundance on the sea-beach of Taranaki, and from which the best qualities of steel can be manufactured. I visited with much interest the first foundry erected at New Plymouth, and hope to take an early opportunity of reporting at length on this and other cognate subjects.
- The Province of Taranaki has often been called "the Garden of New Zealand;" and the beauty of its scenery combines with the fertility of its soil to entitle it to this distinction. It will not be forgotten that its defence has been very costly to both the Imperial and the Colonial Governments. However, the exertions made by the settlers for their own protection render them deserving of support. They number in all barely four thousand, men, women, and children; of whom eight hundred, including nearly every able-bodied male; are armed and drilled, and have been for the most part under fire during the war of the last nine years. Detachments of the Militia and Volunteers hold the frontier posts, while the entire force is ready to take the field in case of need at very short notice. There is also in the province a division, one hundred and fifty strong, of the Armed Constabulary; while the stockade in the Town of New Plymouth is garrisoned by two companies, about one hundred and twenty officers and men, of the 18th Royal Irish Regiment. Here, as elsewhere in the disturbed districts, the opinion seems universal that the moral support of detachments of Imperial troops in the principal towns is indispensable to secure any certain prospect of peace and tranquillity.
- During the week which I spent in the Province of Taranaki I visited on horseback the scenes of the principal fights between Generals Pratt, and Cameron and the Natives under Te Rangitake (William King), who is now living in the forests near the base of Mount Egmont, about twenty-five miles from New Plymouth. He sent a message to the effect that he also, like so many other chiefs recently in arms against the Crown, would have attended the meeting held to welcome me, if he had not been "whakama," that is, "ashamed of himself." This modesty probably means that he is still watching the course of events before he finally decides on peace. He has never committed homicide except in fair fight; so it has been intimated by the Government that no notice will be taken of his past conduct, and that some valuable land has been reserved for him on the banks of the River Waitara (where he began the war in 1860), upon which he can come and live quietly whenever he pleases. The voluminous Parliamentary Papers and other official documents published on the subject contain full information about the controversy respecting the Waitara block of land, and the consequences to which it led. A township is now fast growing up at the mouth of the River Waitara.
- I inspected the outposts held by the local Militia for the protection of the settlements round Taranaki, especially that on the hill of Pukeraugiora (eleven miles from New Plymouth), where stood the pa of Te Arei, besieged by General Pratt. This important frontier post is now garrisoned by a party of military settlers, among whom I found a Greek gentleman of good birth and education from Patras, in the Peloponnesus, named Padopoulos, who, with a few others of his countrymen, fought bravely in the colonial forces. He told me that a love of warlike adventure had brought them to New Zealand; and observed that, as the Byzantine Emperors once employed Englishmen in their Varangian Guard to protect the frontier of the Greek Empire, so it seemed the English Government now employed Greeks to protect the frontier of the British Empire. He is an industrious farmer, and has already planted a small vineyard near the redoubt. It was certainly interesting to find a Greek in such a place, especially as Pukeraugiora is the Suli of Maori history. About 1830, ten years before the commencement of English colonization, the Ngatiawa clan had entrenched themselves on this hill when attacked by the Waikatos under Potatou te Wherowhero, afterwards elected (in 1857) to be the first King of the Maoris. At the final assault, many hundreds of the Ngatiawas, rather than fall into the hands of the hereditary foemen, threw themselves headlong, with their wives and children, from the top of the lofty cliff overhanging the River Waitara. It will be remembered that a similar incident took place on the capture of Suli by Ali Pacha. The gorge of the Waitara below Pukerangiora reminded me in its general features of the gorge of the Acheron below the Rock of Suli.

- From Taranaki I proceeded by the sea to the Harbour of Whaingaroa, where I visited the small township of Raglan, which, when peace shall have been finally established, will probably become a place of importance, and one of the chief ports on the West Coast. I enclose a copy of the address presented to me by the settlers, and of my reply to it. They do not exceed at present two hundred in number, and dwell principally round a redoubt, into which they would retire in the event of an attack. The few Maoris in the immediate neighbourhood of the settlement are friendly, but Raglan is distant in a straight line only twenty miles from the aukati or "pale" of the Maori King.
- From Whaingaroa I proceeded to Auckland by the Manukau Harbour. In conclusion, I would remark that my observations on the West Coast, as in all other parts of New Zealand, confirm the views on the general condition, prospects, and requirements of this colony which have been submitted at length in my previous despatches, and especially in my reports of 7th. December, 1868, and 7th January, 1869.

Recognition of Maori Authority in New- Zealand, &c. Belgrave Mansions, Grosvenor Gardens, London, 27th October, 1869.

MY LORD,—

I beg to slate that a despatch of your Lordship's, dated the 7th instant, and which has been published by your directions, is, in my opinion, likely to seriously injure myself and those New Zealand statesmen who acted as my Ministers. I am confirmed in this opinion by the remarks made to me in connection with your Lordship's despatch since its publication.

Your lordship is pleased to state, in the despatch to which I allude, that the recognition of Maori authority by Her Majesty's Government in New Zealand is an indispensable, although a distasteful, remedy for the difficulties of New Zealand—although it is one which will not be resorted to while the colony continues to expect assistance from this country, and that a decision to supply the colony even with the prestige of British troops, objectionable as your Lordship has shown it to be on the ground of practical principle, would, in your view, be almost immediately injurious to the settlers themselves, as tending to delay the adoption of those prudent counsels on which you think the restoration of the Northern Island depends. Your Lordship will pardon me for showing, in self-defence, that the statements so made are contrary to fact.

One error which pervades your Lordship's correspondence upon this and cognate points is that you are pleased to speak of "the leading tribe" of Maoris as "scattered." In truth, the Waikato Tribe, the tribe to which I presume your Lordship alludes, would not be admitted to be the leading tribe by several other tribes, such as the Ngapuhi Tribes, the Ngatikahungunu Tribes, the Ngatitoto, the Ngatiraukawa, the Arawa, and other tribes. The Waikat Tribes, however, set up the Native King, and selected, twice, a leading chief of their own tribe to fill that office: hence arose a great difficulty. The other tribes to which I have alluded, the chiefs of which had always been independent sovereign princes, had relinquished, by treaty, their sovereign rights to the Queen of England, and, conjointly with the Waikato Tribes, had by that treaty recognized Her Majesty as their common Sovereign. The tribes I have named, or the great majority of them, were and are proud of being the subjects of a great Sovereign, and no persuasion would induce them to recognize the authority of the Waikato King. To make them do that, we should have to resort to force, and to join the fanatics against those tribes, many members of which have cheerfully laid down their lives to maintain the authority of the Queen. The mere rumour of any intended general recognition of the Maori King will raise up new and more formidable enemies against us than we have hitherto had to cope with, and other tribes will declare their independence upon totally new grounds.

I beg to state that whilst large bodies of troops were in the country, and before the Waikato war commenced, I paid a visit to the Waikato tribes, who I believed were resolved upon a formidable outbreak. The whole of their principal chiefs met me, with the exception of the Maori King, who was ill, and I, to those chiefs, with the full assent of my Responsible Advisers, offered to constitute all the Waikato and Ngatimaniapoto country a separate province, which would have had the right of electing its own Superintendent, its own Legislature, and of choosing its own Executive Government, and in fact would have had practically the same powers and rights as any State of the United States now has. There could hardly have been a more ample and complete recognition of Maori authority, as the Waikato tribes would within their own district—a very large, one—have, had the exclusive control and management of their own affairs. This offer was, however, after full discussion and consideration, resolutely and deliberately refused, on the ground that they would accept no offer that did not involve an absolute recognition of the Maori King, and his and their entire independence, from the Crown of England,—terms which no subject had power to grant, and which could not have been granted without creating worse evils than those which their refusal involved.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir G. F. BOWEN, G.C.M.G., to the Right Hon. Earl GRANVILLE, K.G.

Wellington.—Respecting Trial of the Hauhau Prisoners. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 28th October, 1869.

My LORD,—

In continuation of my Despatch No. 113, of the 4th September ultimo, I have the honour to report that the trials of the Hauhau prisoners from the bands of Te Kooti and Titokowaru have been completed during the past month, before the Supreme Court of this colony.

- Your Lordship is already in possession of the opinion of the Attorney-General of New Zealand as to the political and legal status of these men, and is aware that he declared that they should be tried for levying war against the Queen; also that the learned and able Judge who presided at these trials (Mr. Justice Johnston), in his charge to the Grand Jury, practically indorsed the views of the Agent-General. I now further transmit a printed copy (corrected by himself) of the Judge's charge to the petty jury in the high-treason cases.
- Out of the total number of nearly one hundred prisoners, more than twenty of the least criminal were discharged, no evidence against them having been tendered on the part of the Crown; while the remaining seventy pleaded guilty, or have been convicted after long and patient trials before the Supreme Court. As I have already informed your Lordship, the Colonial Ministers and I, have been agreed from the beginning that, under the peculiar circumstances of this country no capital sentence should be carried out against Natives convicted only of having carried arms against the Queen. Accordingly, all the sentences, with three exceptions, will be certainly commuted, according to the degree of guilt of each individual, to various terms of imprisonment. The three exceptions referred to are those of Hauhaus convicted of treason and rebellion, and found in addition to have been concerned in cruel murders of unarmed men (Europeans or friendly Natives), and of women and children; or in other heinous atrocities, generally abhorred by the Maoris equally with the colonists. In these three cases, or at all events in one or two of the worst of them, the law will be allowed to take its course. However, the final decision on the report of the presiding Judge cannot (in pursuance of the regulations prescribed in the Governor's Commission and Instructions) be pronounced until after the formal meeting of the Executive Council, which will be held next week. It cannot, consequently, be communicated to your Lordship by this month's mail, which leaves Auckland this day.

- It need scarcely be said that in any capital executions the aggravations peculiar to sentences for treason will be remitted. Mr. Justice Johnston is of opinion that, in the present condition of the Statute Book, he was bound to pass sentence in the following terms: "You shall be drawn on a hurdle to the place of execution, and be there hanged by the neck till you are dead; and afterwards your head shall be severed from your body; and your body shall be divided into four quarters, which may afterwards be disposed of according to law." The Judge, with my sanction, stated on each occasion that this sentence would not be carried out in its terms. With regard to this point, I request your Lordship's attention to the following paragraph, which has appeared in one of the leading journals of New Zealand (Wellington Independent, 2nd October, 1879): "It is a matter of regret to almost every member of the community that the necessity of pronouncing sentence after the old form established by English law had not been removed by legislative enactment. Our civilization revolts from the parallel which may be drawn between the horrible mutilations of their victims by the Maoris, which we so emphatically denounce, and the sentence of barbarous mutilation after death to which the law deliberately consigns those condemned for the crime of high treason. This was evidently felt by the Judge whose painful duty it was to pronounce the sentence, and he took care to explain to the condemned that such part of the sentence would not be carried out. Nevertheless, softened as we may, it gives a handle for recrimination which we would fain avoid."
- Mr. Justice Johnston has written to me that, with the exception of the unfortunate circumstance alluded to above, the general result of these trials has been, in his opinion, "most satisfactory;" and that "they will prove of great service to the colony, as showing the true intentions and objects of the rebels, and silencing the calumniators of the Government and of the settlers in respect of their treatment of the Hauhaus.... The real nature of the West Coast rebellion has been made manifest—Te Kooti's professed object clearly having been to exterminate the adherents to the Government of both races, and to enjoy the plunder."

Compare the emphatic language on this point used by Mr. Justice Johnston in his charge, transmitted herewith (see the Enclosure).

Mr. Justice Johnston further writes that the prosecutions were very well conducted by the Attorney-General on behalf of the Crown; that the prisoners were ably defended by the counsel procured for them at the expense of the Colonial Government; and that the general demeanour of the jurors left nothing to desire.

- I will transmit by the next mail full official documents, and details respecting these important trials, and a report of the final decision of myself and my Ministers on the fate of the three most guilty criminals. Meanwhile, I beg leave to submit that the above-mentioned facts and opinions, as stated by the experienced Judge who presided, would of themselves be sufficient to justify the objections raised by me and others to the proposals made a short time ago for superseding the Supreme Court of the colony by the establishment of Courts-martial and other special and extraordinary tribunals for the trial of Maori prisoners. To omit many other obvious considerations, we felt, in the terms used in a previous despatch, that "there was no reason to suppose that the Supreme Court and the civil juries are unable or unwilling to administer with a severity sufficiently deterrent impartial justice to both races of the inhabitants of this country."

Governor of New Zealand to Secretary of State, No. 113, of 4th September, 1869.

I have, &c.,

G. F. BOWEN.

Enclosure. Mr. Justice JOHNSTON'S CHARGE on # the HIGH TREASON CASES.

GENTLEMEN OF THE JURY,—We have now come to the last stage of this most interesting and important trial—important in many ways which have been suggested to you by the learned counsel on both sides, and which will also suggest themselves to your own minds. I think it was quite unnecessary for either of the learned counsel to advert for a moment to the possible or probable results of the case, in order to induce you to give it your careful and dispassionate consideration; for if you feel, as I can scarcely doubt you do, the sense of awful responsibility which I feel towards the community on this occasion, you require no urging to be calm, careful, patient, and dispassionate. In your treatment of the case, what you have to think of is not what your neighbours will say, nor what public opinion may say to-morrow or the next day, or by-and-by, but what will weigh most with you is, how you shall answer hereafter, long after this trial is concluded, to your conscience and to your God.

Fortunately, the circumstances of our Mother-country, and of the vast majority of her colonies, have been such for many years that trials for high treason have been few and far between. Thank God for it. Nay, it has been so much so that we almost lose sight of the importance of the law on the subject, and of the punishment of crimes committed against that law. The prisoners at the bar are charged on this occasion under a statute no less than five hundred years old,—a law passed, not in the interests of authority and despotism, but in the interests of liberty, that men might know clearly and distinctly what treason was. Although the prisoners at the bar may not have had the same opportunities which many British subjects have had, by education and instruction, of knowing what the law is under which they live, I am bound to tell you that you must treat those men exactly on the same footing as any other British subjects amenable to the same laws, and that you ought to take the difference of race and situation no further into consideration than to ascertain how far it ought to influence you as to the inferences of facts which you should draw from their conduct and language. I should be wanting to myself and to the colony were I not to offer a just tribute to the learned counsel who have conducted this anxious inquiry. We have seen the principal law officer of the Crown, the Attorney-General, conducting the case on behalf of the Government; and a gentleman of long standing at the English bar, and of evident experience and skill, has been enabled, through the liberality and feeling of justice of the Government, to give the prisoners the benefit of his advice and watchful attention throughout the inquiry. I congratulate the colony on this being the case, because there is nothing which I have felt more strongly since I came into the colony, and which I feel more strongly day by day, than that the real welfare of this colony for the future, and the satisfactory connection between the aboriginal inhabitants and the Europeans, must in a great measure depend upon the temper and manner in which justice is administered in the tribunals of the country. While I pay this well-merited tribute to the counsel both for the prosecution and for the defence, I at the same time cannot believe that either kind of prejudice suggested by them will be likely to affect your minds in the least when you apply yourselves to the consideration of the matters before you. It is 'my special and peculiar duty, in the first place, to state to you what the law is as it affects the indictment and the circumstances proved; and, in the second place, to endeavour to assist you in applying that law to the facts. But with regard to the proper conclusion to be inferred, as matter of fact, from these facts, you are the responsible tribunal, not I; and, although it is competent for me to express my opinion upon the facts, and the inferences from facts, I shall probably, on this occasion as on most others, very rarely do so. If I indicate to you any kind of opinion of my own as to the inferences to be drawn from facts, correct me in your better judgment, if you should think I am mistaken.

The prisoners at the bar are accused by this indictment, on two different counts, with levying war against the Queen, under the statute 25 Edward III., passed in the year 1354, and called the Statute of Treasons. I shall confine my remarks to that portion of the statute which refers to the case we have to deal with,—the levying war against the Sovereign. Now, gentlemen, you will take it from me as settled law that any use of violence by a number of persons for the purpose of obtaining the redress of public grievances, or for the purpose of overthrowing the authority of the Queen, or of the constituted Government of the country of which she is the supreme head, amounts to the crime of high treason. Allegiance, which is the duty that underlies the definition of the crime, is the bond between the Sovereign—whether an individual, as in a monarchy, or the State, in a republic—and the people of the country. The duty on the part of the sovereign power in the State is to protect the people, their lives, liberties, and property; and the duty on the part of the people is to obey the law as declared and administered by the tribunals and Government of the State. In New Zealand—in all its islands—whatever the source may be from which the authority has arisen, I must lay it down to you as law that Her Majesty Queen Victoria is Sovereign, and that the Government established in New Zealand by virtue of the Acts of the Legislature of England is the Government of the Queen of England for this her colony. I further state to you that every person, not being merely a visitor from other countries, but who remains in these Islands, is, while residing under the protection of our laws, a subject to the Crown of Great Britain; and that the aboriginal or half-caste inhabitants, whether born before or after the settlement of this colony, are, by law, British subjects, and have the same rights and duties as natural-born subjects of the Crown. Therefore, if the prosecution have made out to your satisfaction that the prisoners at the bar were engaged with others in endeavouring, not to right some private grievance, or to exact some retaliation against private enemies of their own, or against tribal enemies, but to deny and resist the authority and withdraw themselves from subjection to the authority of the Government of Her Majesty in the colony; they are guilty of high treason. In allusion to one matter to which attention has very properly been called by the learned counsel for the defence, I tell you that you need not embarrass yourselves as jurymen—who have only to pronounce, as a verdict, Guilty or Not guilty—with any question as to the relative degree of guilt of these prisoners and the persons with whom they have acted in concert. I shall tell you presently the law in respect to persons acting in concert for a common purpose; but, referring as I have done to the question of the results of this inquiry, let me tell you that you have no right—and it must and would be unwise of you—to contemplate what may be done afterwards should your verdict be one condemning the accused. You must not consider whether the sentence of the law will be modified, or how the prerogative of the Crown may be exercised by those who have the power to exercise it. You must come to your conclusion regardless of the consideration whether, from what may be called the moral point of view, the prisoners before you are more or less guilty than those with whom they have been acting. I put it succinctly to you that it matters little to you whether it is Te Kooti or the humblest of these men that you have before you, if it be established that the acts of any may be taken to be the acts of all. And now I must advert to the question of force or compulsion, which was very properly urged by the learned counsel for the defence. This is one of the most prominent features of the defence, and requires that you should apply your minds vigilantly to the consideration of it, in order to see whether these parties, or some one of them, may not come within the principle on which compulsion is admitted as excusing co-operation with rebels. On this subject I will read to you a passage from the work of Mr. Justice (Sir Michael) Forster on the subject, which is one of the highest authorities on the head of law. The doctrine had originally been laid down that "the only force that doth excuse is a force upon the person, and present fear of death, and this force and fear must continue all the time the party remains with the rebels." But Forster afterwards says it will be enough if "upon the whole the accused may be presumed to have continued among the rebels against his will, though not constantly under an actual force or fear of immediate death."

Now, it is for you to say, when you come to review the evidence, whether that rule can be applied to the conduct of any one of the three prisoners. There is, no doubt, a considerable amount of evidence to show that Te Kooti is a man of strong will and iron rule, who does not threaten without striking; and from the evidence of some of the women you will probably infer that there were persons in his camp—females among them—who were almost paralysed by the fear of his threats, and who,—when you consider the specific language about prisoners, and his threats of how his god would deal with them,—may have been put into an irresponsible position. You will, however, have to test whether, when you review the whole evidence, that can be said with any show of justice with regard to any one of the three prisoners. If, as it is suggested, here is Hetariki at one time alone with the women, there is Rewi at another time alone, sick at Hungaroa, far away from Te Kooti, and again there is Matene going backwards and forwards as Kokiris, and taking an active and prominent part in attacks on outgoing scouts of the colonial forces—if all this be proved to your satisfaction, you are to say whether these men were acting voluntarily or were under compulsion. I must point out to you that, according to my judgment, you must, in asking yourselves whether there was force and compulsion or not, remember that if these men were originally forced, by fear of death and by the fear of Te Kooti's threats, to obey his orders while his power was impending over them, yet they afterwards got, as I may say, into the spirit of the thing, and voluntarily went and fought,—there was not such a present fear of death and danger to their persons from Te Kooti as would justify them under the rule which I have pointed out. That is to say, supposing it to be true that their first joining was under compulsion—that the first step in this long tragedy was under compulsion—yet if afterwards they resigned themselves to the situation, and did not escape when they could have escaped, but voluntarily joined in acts of rebellion, the doctrine of compulsion cannot be held to apply. In the first place, with regard to Hetariki, you find his voice—the voice remarkable above all others—recognized as the voice crying out, "Kekaka, kekaka," "Be strong, be strong," in the midst of the fight. Is that an indication that at that time he was there against his will,—that he was there doing something that nothing but the fear of death would compel him to do? Rewi is not certainly shown to have taken any leading part in the matter; but, with regard to Matene, the attack on the escort would seem to be almost conclusive. With regard to escaping, it has been shown that Ohapata escaped because he wished to do so, and it has been shown also that several women escaped. It is for you to consider whether, from the beginning to the end of this disastrous tale, you have any indication of any one of these men attempting to escape from the influence of the force of which it is said they were afraid.

Now, I lay it down to you as law that, without speculating about the animus and the intention of particular parties, if a body of men use violence towards the Queen's troops, whether Imperial or Colonial, or towards any persons in authority under the Crown, or assisting persons in authority under the Crown, for the purpose of shaking off the yoke of Government, it is as much levying war against the Queen as it would be to go and attack Her Majesty in Windsor Castle and slay her guards. Then, as it may be necessary to import the doctrine of specific intention, you will have to consider whether there is ample evidence of the intention of the parties, if not on their first arrival, at all events during many of the scenes that occurred after their arrival from the Chatham Islands. What was their intention? Te Kooti's intention at first, as he said, was to go to Taupo and overthrow the King. It is not suggested for a moment that he was going to make war on his own account. There is no indication, nor is there any pretence for saying, that what was done by Te Kooti was either in consequence of tribal quarrels or for the purpose of repossessing himself of land of which he or his party had been dispossessed by the Government. They belonged to different tribes, few of them had dwelt there, and there is no evidence to show that any land was taken from them by the Government; neither is there any evidence to show that the intention was to avenge themselves for a wrong they had suffered. Furthermore, there is no evidence to show that it was upon any plea of illegal detention or bad treatment at the Chatham Islands that they sought to take revenge. Endeavours were very properly made by the learned counsel for the defence to show that all their subsequent attempts were in consequence of the treatment they had received at the Chatham Islands; but you will see that those endeavours failed. No doubt the mere act of escaping from there is such as no one will blame them for, for they only obeyed the first law of nature. But they brought guns from there which were not their property, and they used those guns afterwards and took other guns. The case does not, however, stop there, for we have positive evidence as to the intention of Te Kooti, from what he repeatedly said in the hearing of persons at times antecedent to that at which their men voluntarily took a part in his acts. Gentlemen, if there were no other purpose that this trial could serve than this, it is well that the colony, the Mother-country, the world, should know that the deliberately avowed and repeated intention of Te Kooti was, as it has been expressed,—and I shall use no language of rhetoric to characterize the expression—to annihilate the momo kino, the "bad breed." On pressing the matter, and questioning the witnesses as to what Te Kooti meant by the "bad breed," and what was understood by it by his followers, it became a clear matter of fact that the "bad breed" did not mean this man or that; it did not mean the pakeha, the foreigner, merely, but the Government people of both races. Throughout the whole disastrous events, both the language and the actions of this party showed that their attacks were levelled against those who supported the Government. What Government that was there can be no doubt. It was the Government of Her Majesty in the colony. Therefore, I say, this is so pregnant and important a fact that, if nothing else resulted from this trial, your long detention from your homes, the inconvenience you have been put to, and which you have borne so patiently and intelligently, would be but little in your estimation compared with establishing the fact before the world that such are the intention and meaning of those persons, who, I am sorry to say, are still, as far as we know, in more or less active insurrection against the Government. The importance of the trial in this respect, of course, so far from tending to prejudice the prisoners at the bar, would have rather a contrary effect, for I say, notwithstanding the perhaps justifiable observation of the Attorney-General, that to my mind what becomes of these three men is comparatively insignificant to the great fact which this trial will probably establish—that, as far as regards the circumstances of that portion of the colony with which this case is connected, the Government has not been acting otherwise towards the hostile Natives than for the maintenance of the peace of the country, and that Te Kooti and his followers have not set up the pretence of a grievance done to them.

Much has been said during the trial as to the relevancy of particular facts towards establishing the general conclusion charged in the indictment; but, having paid due attention to the suggestions of the learned counsel for the defence, I have not seen my way to the disallowing any part of the evidence as to events, from the landing at Whareongaonga to the taking of Ngatapa, because, to the best of my judgment, all the acts appeared to be done in pursuance of one common design, perhaps originally instituted by Te Kooti, but carried out by him and his followers, of whom were two of the prisoners from the first, and the third joined them afterwards, all three, according to the evidence, taking an active part at some time in the conspiracy, and being well informed as to their leader's objects and intentions. The line of the case for the prosecution is this: that, having arrived from the Chatham Islands, where they possessed themselves of the ship and overpowered the guard, and brought away the guns of the guard with them, they went through a series of engagements with what I call the Queen's troops—the troops of the Government of the colony; that, living together in camps and pas, they had daily instructions, and that they were from time to time ordered by him to go by night, as detached parties called "kokiris," for the purpose of doing what? On one occasion to fetch ammunition; on three occasions, at least, if you believe the evidence, for what purpose? Not meeting the troops with whom they were fighting according to the custom of war, but going to detached places where settlers were, and Maoris friendly to the Government, for the express purpose of assassinating and destroying men, women, and children, who might be friendly to the Government. Whether the prisoners themselves took part in this particular action, or were one of this particular kokiri or that particular kokiri, seems to me to be a matter of little importance, if they voluntarily continued under Te Kooti, taking part in his proceedings; after the first occasion on which an order of this kind was given. Whatever may be the degrees of moral guilt, clearly in point of law they must be as guilty as if they themselves drew the murderous sword, or fired the destroying gun. [His Honor here described the relative positions of the various places at which the several events took place, and read the evidence at length, to the jury.]

Gentlemen, the case has occupied much of your time. If any of us, fallible and weak as we are, have in the course of the investigation allowed our minds to be either clouded by prejudice, or excited, I need not urge upon you that, now that solemn moment is coming when you are to determine, so help your God, Are these men guilty of the crime laid to their charge ? you will allow no passion, feeling, or prejudice, or suggestion from any source but one, namely, the evidence, to weigh either for or against the prisoners at the bar. As I said before, it may be that the moving spirits who have designed this great evil have not yet reached the hand of justice, but that, I again point out to you, can be no justification for making these men irresponsible for the acts that were committed by the followers of those leading spirits, if done in common concert with them. With regard to the question of levying war, I repeat that attacking the Queen's troops—and these men were the Queen's troops for this purpose—is of itself levying war; resisting the Queen's troops when they are supporting the Queen's authority, or endeavouring to take a place occupied by the Queen's troops, is of itself levying war against the Queen. Can you have any doubt the principal if not the only object existing in the mind of Te Kooti, and known by all his party to be existing in his mind, was to throw off the yoke, as they might have termed it, of the British Government—to rid themselves of that which they might consider between them and the enjoyment of the whole country ? No possible suggestion can be made, with regard to this portion of the Native race, at all events, that their object was to get and of which they complained that they had been wrongfully dispossessed. No suggestion can after be made that their conduct was even retaliation for some oppression or injury which they even pretended to have received at the hands of the British Government. No suggestion can be made that the insurrection in this part of the colony was the result of misconduct, ill-feeling, or mismanagement on the part of the European settlers or of the Government. With matters which are called political we have nothing to do here." It may be that some persons may think that if these prisoners - had been better; guarded these events would not have occurred; but what justification can that be to them for anything further than their escape, which undoubtedly the law of nature suggested to them ? If it were necessary to show this distinctive motive more clearly, does it not appear that the mode by, which, they sought to shake off the yoke of British rule was by annihilating the British people? Aye, and that so little was there of anything like a national spirit in it, that they were ready to sacrifice persons of their own race, and not only those who, in assisting the Government, might be said in some kind of sense to be traitors to the Native cause, but, harmless women and children of their own blood, merely because they were under the protection of the Government. If, gentlemen, these things or any of them are made out to your satisfaction, you cannot have any reasonable doubt, after the definition I have given you, that there has been levying war under the statute. But, gentlemen, before I conclude, I must caution, you not to allow any feelings, which may have arisen at the recital of the various events of the sad tale to blind, your judgment. The question for you to decide is, Did the prisoners assist willingly or by force to put down the Government of the country, or, throw off subjection to it, not with the idea of getting another political Constitution, but simply for the purpose of overthrowing the Government ? I wish you to understand that the incidental barbarities introduced into the case are; admissible as evidence, because they were committed upon persons, who were, or who were supposed to be, friendly to the Government. And now, gentlemen, the whole case is before you. Its importance cannot be overrated, and I feel very confident that no prejudice will have any effect upon your minds. You will feel you are now going to perform a duty, perhaps one of the most sacred, the most important, the most responsible, that you can have to answer for from your cradle to your grave.

No. 48. COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir G. I. BOWEN, G.C.M.G., to the Eight Hon. Earl GRANVILLE, E.G.

MY LORD,—

I have the honour to enclose herewith, for your Lordship's information, a copy of the final judgment of the Native Land Court, recently delivered at Wellington, in the case of the Eangitikei-Manawatu land claims, which (as will be remembered at the Colonial Office) have caused much angry; discussion during several years past in the southern part of this Island, and have sometimes threatened to lead to opeu warfare.

About seven years ago the fertile block of land lying between the Eangitikei and Manawatu Rivers, on the west coast of the Province of Wellington, and containing nearly a quarter of a million of acres, was purchased for the sum of £25,000, from the Ngatiapa Tribe, by Dr. Featherston, the Superintendent of the province, acting on behalf of the Crown. The scene presented at the payment of this money was witnessed by, Charles Wentworth Dilke, and is very graphically described in his recently published book "Greater Britain." The sale was, however, objected to by certain members of the Ngatiraukawa Tribe, who grounded their title chiefly on conquest, alleging that the land in question was, about fifty years ago, conquered from the Ngatiapas, the original possessors, by the Ngatitua Tribe, under their celebrated chief Te Rauparaha, who subsequently granted much of it to his allies, the Ngatiraukawa. Considering the very serious consequences which have followed the attempt, made in 1860, to carry out, in spite of the protest of a dissentient minority of the Native claimants, "the provisions of the sale of the small-block of land" (only 800; acres in all) on the Eiver Waitara, near Taranaki, the Colonial Government wisely abstained from pushing matters to an extremity in this new case. Unfortunately, however (as it now seems to, be generally agreed), the Manawatu-Eangitikei claims were, in the, first instance, excepted from the jurisdiction of the Native Land Court, instituted for the purpose of investigating and determining 'Maori titles, and composed of English Judges with Native Assessors. This error was, however, afterwards repaired by an Act of the New Zealand Legislature; and the petitions and protests of the conflicting parties, presented to me soon after my arrival in this colony in 1868, were referred; in due course of law, to the Native Land Court, sitting, at Wellington under the presidency of the Chief Judge, his Honour P. D. Fenton. The trial occupied no less than forty-five days, during which eighty-four Maori witnesses were examined. The Attorney-General appeared for the Crown, and Mr. Travers (one of the leading counsel at the New Zealand Bar) for the dissentients. The able and experienced Chief Judge has informed me "that the case was very well got up; that the assiduity and intelligence of counsel, on both sides were very remarkable; that the evidence was conclusive and: that there, remained no doubt; in the mind of any of the members of the Court as to the judgments."

- Mr. Maning, the Judge who, delivered the final decision, is the well-known author of "Old New Zealand," a book which is generally held by all competent critics to contain a very graphic and correct picture of the customs and character of the Maoris in the times preceding British colonization. The judgment delivered by him will in itself be found an interesting page of Maori history. The evidence, taken was chiefly respecting the intertribal wars of the last generation, and the territorial rights acquired and lost by the hostile clans, according to the Maori usage, by victory and defeat. One of the principal witnesses on the part of the Crown was Tamihana te Rauparaha, the only son of the conquering chief, and the last survivor of his name and race.
- The effect of the judgment of the Court is to confirm, in the main, what had previously been done by Dr. Featherston. Specific awards to the amount of 6,200 acres have been made (as shown in the schedules annexed to the order of the Court) to the dissentient claimants who had refused to concur in the sale. Subject to this reservation, the Rangitikei-Manawatu block of land has now passed to the Crown, has become a valuable part of the provincial estate, and is thrown open for European settlement. Nothing can be affirmed with certainty as to the future conduct of so impulsive a people as the Maoris; but I am assured that no further disturbance need, in all probability, be apprehended regarding this matter, which has been so long a source of grave embarrassment. Indeed, the Chief Judge (Mr. Fenton) has written to me in the following terms: "The Court has dealt with, and settled cases of much greater intrinsic difficulty, and possessing far more powerful extrinsic obstacles, than the Manawatu claim; and has never yet, even at Taupo, had a decision disputed, or even obedience delayed." I should observe that the Native Land Court sat at Taupo, a few months back, in the centre of this Island, in the middle of the Native population, and, at a great distance from the European settlements; and that the Judges had no force beyond a few Maori policemen wherewith to carry out their decrees. These facts seem to speak volumes for the confidence with which this Court is generally regarded by the Maori owners of the soil. By its aid the old tribal or communistic tenure, the source of so much internecine strife, is gradually converted into fee-simple; on the production of sufficient proof, certificates of title are given to individual landholders, and on these certificates Crown grants are issued. The Maoris, like the Europeans, are thus brought to look upon the Queen and the law as the protectors of their territorial rights.

No. 49. MEMORANDUM by the Hon. Mr. McLEAN, Defence Minister.

Respecting the Movements of Te Kooti.

SINCE the last monthly report, Te Kooti, Kereopa, and their followers abandoned the position taken up by them at Tahua, from which they were followed up by Topia, a chief of Upper Whanganui—one of Tawhiao's (the so-called King) adherents,—and by Major Kemp, of the Whanganui Native Contingent. It was deemed prudent to avoid pursuit through the territory of Tawhiao, and as Te Kooti took up a position between the Waikato frontiers and Tauranga, to which place he was invited by a chief named Hakaraia, who desired to avenge the loss sustained by himself and his people at Te Ranga, Tauranga, under Lieut.-Colonel Greer, of the 68th Regiment, in May, 1864.

It being necessary to dislodge Te Kooti from a position that threatened the safety of both Europeans and Natives in the settled districts of Tauranga and Waikato, Lieut.-Colonel McDonnell was directed, in concert with Topia and Kemp, to move against him. Some slight skirmishing ensued, the enemy's loss being six killed, a few prisoners, and 120 horses taken. Tapapa, the pa occupied by Te Kooti's force, was taken, and he retreated to Rotorua, where, in an encounter with a party of the Arawa, he sustained a loss of sixteen killed; the casualties on the side of the friendly Natives being three wounded, one mortally.

The operations during the month may therefore be said to have resulted in driving Te Kooti out of the King territory into the country of his oldest allies, the Ureweras. In scarcely one instance did he make a determined stand; it was principally by timely flight, from place to place, that he managed to escape apprehension.

Considerable excitement was created in the minds of the King Natives, i.e., Waikatos and Ngatimaniapotos, through the proximity of the operations. After their long and strict isolation, the presence of so large and mixed a force as has been operating in their neighbourhood naturally created a strong feeling. It is certain, however, that they as little desired the presence of Te Kooti and his followers as of our forces. The feelings with which the King and his advisers viewed the progress of events occasioned more general anxiety than even Te Kooti's movements.

The translation into Maori of Earl Granville's despatch in which he tells the Maoris that the balance of justice is on their side, and that only the strong arm can keep them down, has naturally aroused in the minds of a section of the Natives the idea that good may come of continued rebellion. It is something to them to know that the colonists appear to have lost the sympathy of the Imperial Government. The King and his advisers, who are strong in knowledge of the past, of course are not likely to allow their own opinions to be coloured by those of Earl Granville; but it may suit them to pretend they agree with him and his views are frequently referred to as an indication of Her Majesty's mind. Again, many of his young and hot followers, careless of the precise facts, read in the manifesto an incentive to a combined national movement. The furiously disaffected are also, of course, delighted with it. It has even worked mischief with that section of the colonists who have habitually felt themselves at liberty to interfere without authority, and lend their countenance to rebellion....

Ministers have lately had to exercise a good deal of firmness, in the face of the reports spread about of the intentions of the King Natives, in adhering to their determination to drive Te Kooti from the King country, and to pursue him until he and his band are dispersed or destroyed.

DONALD MCLEAN.

Present State of the Colony. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 4th June, 1870.

MY LORD;—

Mr. McLean, the Minister for Defence and Native Affairs, left Auckland for Napier and Wellington last week, and I have not any memorandum from him, showing the recent progress of events, to transmit by this month's mail.

- There is, however, nothing new of particular moment to report. The entire colony continues tranquil, with the exception of that portion of the North Island, near the East Cape, where Te Kooti still maintains himself, with a small band of followers, in the recesses of the Urewera Mountains, which are almost impenetrable in this season, the winter of the Southern Hemisphere. In addition to the men he lost in the fights at Maraetai and elsewhere, a considerable number of his former adherents have surrendered to the Government. He is watched, and, when possible, will be followed up, by the chief Ropata and the loyal Ngatiporou Tribe. Te Kepa (Major Kemp) and the Whanganuis have been conveyed to their homes on the West Coast for the winter, by sea from Opotiki, as they required rest after their long and toilsome march across the Island—but their services, as also those of the Arawa, will again be available when required; and it will be seen, from the official report of my recent visit to the North, that the chiefs of the Ngapuhis, the most powerful tribe in New Zealand, also repudiated all sympathy with Tawhiao, the so-called "King of the Waikatos;" assured me and Mr. McLean of their continued loyalty to the Queen, and of their good-will towards their colonial fellow-subjects and stated that "after peace has been made with Matutaera (i.e., Tawhiao), if he attempts to break that peace, the only feeling of Ngapuhi, in the event of such violation of peace, would be to go in a body and fight on behalf of the Government."
- I have mentioned, on more than one occasion, that the leading men of all parties here appear to be in favour of the policy described in my despatch of 7th December, 1868, as a "peaceful arrangement, not inconsistent with the sovereignty of the Queen," with the so-called "King party." Such an arrangement was virtually, though not in formal terms, made by Mr. McLean in last November, when he held a conference with Tamati Ngapora, Rewi Maniapoto, and other principal councillors and adherents of Tawhiao. It is generally believed here that any concession beyond an accommodation of this kind would be neither desirable nor indeed practicable, as it would be opposed to the opinions and feelings alike of the colonists and of the loyal Maori tribes.

Presentation of Swords to Maori Chiefs. Government House, "Wellington, N.Z., 26th June, 1870.

MY LORD,—

With reference to your Lordship's Despatch No. 28, of the 18th March ultimo, I have the honour to report that the six swords of honour sent out for presentation, in the name of the Queen, to certain Maori chiefs distinguished for their loyalty and gallantry, have arrived.

- Three of the chiefs referred to, viz., Te Kepa (Major Kemp), Ropata, and Mokena, are now in Wellington, and on the 20th instant, the anniversary of Her Majesty's accession, I presented their swords to them in the presence of the Colonial Ministers and other principal functionaries of Government, and of a large number of the members of the New Zealand Parliament. On the following day I entertained at dinner the three above mentioned, together with eleven other of the principal Maori chiefs.
- I shall take an early opportunity of presenting the three other swords to the chiefs for whom they are intended, and whose names they bear, viz., Pokeha te Taranui, Ihaka Wanga, and Henare Tomoana. The Colonial Government will provide at its own cost suitable presents for certain other chiefs—in particular, for Topia Turoa, who has recently distinguished himself in the last campaign against the rebels, and especially in Te Kepa's late march across this Island in pursuit of Te Kooti.
- There can be no doubt but that the presentation of these marks of Her Majesty's recognition of the loyal and gallant services of several of the chiefs of leading Maori clans will not only stimulate the recipients of this honour to further exertions in support of the sovereignty of the Crown and of the Cause of law and order in New Zealand, but will also produce an excellent effect among their countrymen generally.

Trial and Conviction of Captured Rebels. Government House, Wellington, N.Z., 28th July, 1870.

MY LORD—

In continuation of the second paragraph of my Despatch. No. 79, of the 3rd instant, I have the honour to report that of the thirty-four members of Te Kooti's band captured by the loyal Maoris under Majors Kemp and Eopata, and recently tried before the Supreme Court at Wellington, in the ordinary course of law, for "levying war against the Queen," thirty were convicted and sentenced to death; two were acquitted for want of proof; while the Attorney-General entered a nolle prosequi against the two remaining.

- The report of the learned and able Judge who presided (Mr. Justice Johnston) was considered yesterday by the Governor and Executive Council. It appears that these trials were conducted on precisely the same footing as those of last year, of which reports were contained in my Despatches Nos. 113,141, and 153 of 1869.

Published in the papers presented to the Imperial Parliament in April, 1870.

The Attorney-General prosecuted on behalf of the Crown, and the prisoners were defended by counsel provided at the cost of the colony.

- After the evidence against them given on the first day of the trial, most of the accused, by the advice of their counsel, asked leave to withdraw their plea of "Not guilty," and pleaded "Guilty." Mr. Justice Johnston observes in his report that thereupon "the Attorney-General said that he had intended to call a chief who would have proved that Te Kooti, with whom the prisoners had been acting, did not pretend to be fighting for land taken from him, and Mr. Allen (the counsel for the defence) admitted that he could not make out that Te Kooti was doing so." It will be recollected that with my Despatch No. 141, of, 28th October, 1869, I transmitted a copy of the Judge's charge to the jury in the high treason trials of last year, in which it was remarked that they would prove of great service to the colony as showing the true intentions and objects of the rebels, and silencing the calumniators of the Government and of, the settlers with regard to their treatment of the Hauhaus
- In my Despatch No. 141, of 1869, I further observed as follows: "It need scarcely be said that in any capital executions the aggravations peculiar to sentences for treason will be remitted. Mr. Justice Johnston is of opinion that, in the present condition of the Statute Book, he was bound to pass sentence in the following terms: 'You shall be drawn on a hurdle to the place of execution, and be there hanged by the neck till you are dead; and afterwards your head shall be severed from your body; and your body shall be divided into four quarters, which may afterwards be disposed of according to law.' The Judge, with my sanction, stated on each occasion that this sentence would not be carried out in its terms. With regard to this point, I request your Lordship's attention to the following paragraph which has appeared in one of the leading journals in New Zealand, the Wellington Independent, 2nd October, 1869: It is a matter, of regret to almost every member of the community that the necessity of pronouncing sentence after the old form established by English law had not been removed by legislative enactment. Our civilization revolts from the parallel which may be drawn between the horrible mutilations of their victims by the Maoris, which we so emphatically denounce, and the sentence of barbarous mutilation after death to which the law deliberately consigns those condemned for the crime of high treason. This was evidently felt by the Judge whose painful duty it was to pronounce the sentence, and he took care to explain to the condemned that such part of the sentence would not be carried out. Nevertheless, soften it as we may, it gives a handle for recrimination which we would fain avoid.' "The feeling expressed in the above words was so strongly shared by the Colonial Government and Parliament that the first Bill brought in and passed during the present session is "An Act to alter the Punishment in certain Cases of High Treason" (33 and 34 Vict., No. 1), of which I now transmit a copy. The Judge was thus enabled to pass the sentences of death in the common form.
- In his report of the recent trials, Mr. Justice Johnston states, "I am of opinion that all the convictions, whether on verdict or by confession, were obtained in due course of law; but that, considering the course taken with regard, to the prisoners condemned to death at the last special sittings, under the Disturbed Districts Act, it is not desirable that the sentence of death should be enforced against those prisoners." It will be recollected that in my Despatch No. 153, of the 24th November, 1869, and in the minute of the Executive Council which accompanied it, the reasons were fully given which induced me, with the advice and consent of my Ministers, to cause the capital sentence to be carried out last year only in the person of Hamiora te Peri, who was clearly proved to have been guilty, in addition to rebellion, of having taken an active part in the cruel murders of unarmed men, Europeans and Maoris, and of women and children in the Poverty Bay massacre. The sentences of the other rebels, seventy-six in number, convicted at the same sittings of the Supreme Court, were commuted, according to the measure of the guilt of each individual, to various terms of penal servitude. It will be further remembered that Mr. Justice Johnston afterwards expressed his opinion that "this result was the best that could have been arrived at;" while Mr. McLean, and all those who know the Maoris best, believe that the lenity of the Government has produced a favourable effect on the Native mind generally. They think, in short, that in this as in other countries the maxim holds good which declares that "the grass soon grows over blood shed on the battle field, but rarely over blood shed on the political scaffold."
- Not one of the thirty prisoners recently convicted was clearly proved at his trial to have taken an active part in the Poverty Bay massacre, or in the other equally heinous atrocities of Te Kooti and Titokowaru. Consequently, it was determined by myself and my Ministers, in the Executive Council held yesterday, to commute, in accordance with the opinion of Mr. Justice Johnston, the capital sentences in every case to various terms of penal servitude or imprisonment. The principle which we have laid down for our guidance from the beginning is that, looking to the circumstances of this country, sentences of death will not be inflicted for rebellion against the Queen's authority alone, unless such high treason is accompanied by murder in cold blood, or some other atrocity. Your Lordship has informed me that you observed with great pleasure the lenient course adopted by the Government of New Zealand, and hope that it will have the satisfactory results which they anticipate from it, and which it deserves.

No. 53. OPINION of the ATTORNEY GENERAL on LEGAL QUESTIONS raised in Earl GRANVILLE'S DESPATCH No. 121, of the 4th November, 1869.

Treatment of Unconvicted Rebels. Wellington, September, 1870.

OPINION of the ATTORNEY-GENERAL of NEW ZEALAND on the Legal Questions raised in the concluding Paragraph of Earl Granville's Despatch No. 121, of the 4th November, 1869, for the Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

I have been directed to peruse and consider the concluding paragraph of a despatch from the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies. (Earl Granville) to His Excellency the Governor, dated the 4th November, 1869, in which his Lordship observes upon the explanation offered by His Excellency in his despatch to the Secretary of State, dated the 7th July, 1869, in the following terms: "I do not clearly understand how you justify this notice as a matter of law. I understand you to disclaim the application of martial law, and, viewing Titokowaru merely as a notorious, but untried and unconvicted, rebel and murderer, I am not aware of any colonial enactment which would make it lawful for any chance person to shoot him down." As I understand, my consideration of this matter has been requested inasmuch as the explanations referred to were, to some extent, based on an opinion of mine.

I venture to submit that the observation of his Lordship on His Excellency's despatch is scarcely called for by the explanations offered by His Excellency, and seems intended to raise a somewhat different question from that raised in the despatch to which His Excellency's despatch of July, 1869, was in reply. It was not sought to justify the proceedings referred to upon the ground that they were authorized by the provisions of any colonial enactment. The propriety of the proceedings had been questioned as inconsistent with the usages of war. It was urged, in reply, that the persons to be affected were not entitled to the observance towards them of the usages of war: first, by reason of their being rebels in arms, and that such rebellion was not of such an extent or character as to make it expedient or proper to treat the rebels otherwise than as persons guilty of a breach of the municipal law; secondly, by reason of the hostilities being carried on in such a manner as would have disintituled even foreign enemies to such observance. The justification of the proceedings was based on the universal and supreme law of necessity and preservation of the State. It is by this universal and supreme law that the exercise of the so-called martial law, when-applied by the State to its subjects in arms against its authority, is sanctioned.

To the objection now raised, an answer in the words that there is a "colonial enactment" which makes it lawful for any chance person to shoot down a notorious, but untried and unconvicted, rebel and murderer, would be literally correct. "The English Laws Act, 1858," declares and enacts that the laws of England in force in 1840 shall, so far as applicable, be in force in New Zealand. The law of England on the subject is as follows: "If a person having actually committed a felony will not suffer himself to be arrested, but stand on his own defence, or fly, so that he cannot possibly be apprehended alive by those who pursue him, whether private persons or public officers, with or without a warrant from a Magistrate, he may be lawfully slain by them."—Hawker's [unclear: Plea of] the Crown, c. 28, s. 11; Burn's Justice—"Homicide." To the same effect is the following passage from Foster's. Crown Law, p. 27L: "When a felony is committed, and the felon fleeth from justice, or a dangerous wound is given, it is the duty of every man to use his best endeavours for preventing an escape; and if in pursuit the party fleeing is killed, where he cannot be otherwise overtaken, this will be deemed justifiable homicide; for the pursuit was not barely warrantable, it is what the law requireth, and will punish the wilful neglect of. I may add that it is the duty of every man in these cases quietly to yield himself up to the justice of his country."

I have already stated that the safety of the State and necessity is the reason for the exercise of such rigorous measures. This appears to be the opinion of Sir Michael Foster (Crown Law, p. 270): "Homicide in advancement of justice may likewise be considered as founded in necessity; for the ends of government will be totally defeated unless persons can, in a due course of law, be made amenable to justice."

I suppose that the expression "chance persons" is intended to mean a person without a warrant from a Magistrate, or in aid of an officer of police. The authorities above cited show that any person, though not an officer of police or aiding one, and though without a warrant, may, and indeed is bound to, pursue and bring to justice a person guilt of felony, though unconvicted. I suppose, also, that by the expression "to shoot down" is meant, at the most, "to shoot down when the malefactor stands to resist, or because he flies and cannot be otherwise overtaken." The authorities above cited show this is not only "not barely warrantable," but "what the law requireth."

If the observation of the "Right Hon. the Secretary of State is meant to imply that the shooting-down of a felon for sport, or in the indulgence of any evil feeling towards the felon, is not warrantable, then I am of opinion that the implication cannot be controverted. But I cannot conceive that such meaning was intended to be conveyed. The expression is, no doubt, indefinite. I should, however, consider it disrespectful to the Secretary of State to construe his observations as intending to imply that the Government of New Zealand, in taking the proceedings referred to, were inciting any of the people subject to its rule to an indulgence in an appetite for blood or needless cruelty. It seems to me that it is proper to construe the passage in the despatch referred to as assuming that the law does not authorize a private member of the community, without warrant from a Magistrate, in pursuing an unconvicted murderer, and in shooting him down when he cannot otherwise be overtaken. The Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

JAMES P RENDERGAST.

Death of the Te Tuni. Government House, N. Z. Auckland, 24th December, 1870.

MY LORD,—

As your Lordship is one of those English statesmen who took a personal and active interest in the early progress of New Zealand, you will doubtless learn with regret that Te Puni, the chief of the clan of the Ngatiawa, died, at the age of nearly ninety years, on the 5th instant, at his residence, Pitone, near Wellington.

- It will be remembered that Te Puni welcomed the arrival of the first emigrants sent out by the New Zealand Company, granted them the land on which the City of Wellington has since been built, and protected the infant settlement, on many occasions, from the violence of his Maori countrymen. He also fought gallantly for the Queen, though he was even then an elderly man, in the first Maori war of 1845-48. In a word, Te Puni was for the settlers in the South all that the celebrated Ngapuhi chief, Tamati Waka Nene, was for the settlers in the North of this Island. His great age has of late rendered him incapable of active exertion, but he was always glad to receive me and other English visitors at his own kainga (village). His last appearances in public were when he welcomed me on my first landing in New Zealand, in 1868, and when, in 1869, he attended the levie held at Wellington by His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh.

- The death of this loyal subject of our Queen, of this constant friend and brave ally of our race, to whom the early English settlers at Wellington owed the safety of their lives and property, excited much feeling throughout this colony. The Government ordered a public funeral at the public cost. Several of the Colonial Ministers and other leading settlers of all political parties were pall-bearers, together with the few surviving relatives and principal clansmen of the deceased; the Bishop of Wellington read the burial service of the Church of England, to which Te Puni was a sincere convert; Mr. McLean, the Minister for Native Affairs, delivered an eloquent address in their own language to the Maoris present; and the Volunteer Rifles and Artillery attended in full force, and fired the customary military salutes over the grave of the old warrior.

Maori Members in Legislative Council. Government House, Wellington, N.Z., 21st October, 1872.
MY. LORD,—

In my Despatch No. 79, of the 20th September ultimo, and on previous occasions, I have reported that the experiment of admitting Maori members to the House of Representatives had proved completely successful, and that it had been decided to admit them, also to the Legislative Council. A resolution recommending that course has been adopted in the popular Chamber, and it seems to be generally approved by all parties, both within and without the Legislature.

- As your Lordship is aware, the Maoris in the House of Representatives are elected by their countrymen; but, as the members of the Legislative Council are nominated by the Crown, the selection from among the principal Maori clans and chiefs was a matter of delicacy, requiring careful consideration. With the advice of my Ministers, I have now summoned to the Legislative Council, in the name of the Queen,—(1) Mokena Kohere, of Waiapu, in the Province of Auckland, a chief of high rank and commanding influence in the great clan of the Ngatiporou, and who was recently presented by Her. Majesty with a sword of honour for his long and gallant services in fighting for the Crown during the second. Maori war; (2) Wiremu Tako Ngatata, of Waikanae, in the Province of Wellington, the foremost chief of the clan of Ngatiawa. When the first English colonists, under the auspices of the New Zealand Company, arrived in this country in 1840, they found this chief living in a pa on what is now the site of the City of Wellington. Together with his friend and relative, the celebrated Te Puni (whose death was recently lamented by both races), Wiremu Tako Ngatata cordially welcomed the early settlers, made over to them large grants of land, and protected them from the attacks of the hostile Natives. I have already borne my testimony to the assistance which he afforded to me personally at the very critical period of the dangerous outbreak on the west coast of this Island in 1868.
- Both of the above-mentioned chiefs are universally recognized as good representatives of their race. They have taken their seats in the, Legislative Council, and have already begun to show, like their countrymen in the other. House, an intelligent and active interest in the debates, and in the general business of the Parliament.

Admission of Maoris into the Executive Council. Government House, Wellington, N.Z., 6th November, 1872.
MY LORD,—

In my Despatch No. 86, of the 21st October ultimo, I reported the appointment to the Legislative Council of two Maori chiefs, with the object that the Native race may henceforward be represented in both Houses of the Colonial Legislature. It will be remembered that Maori members, elected by their own countrymen, have sat in the House of Representatives during the last four years; and that, as I stated in my Despatch No. 79, of the 20th September ultimo, and on previous occasions, the experiment has proved a decided success.

- It is now agreed by the leading public men of all parties that the time has arrived when Maoris should be admitted also to the Executive Council. I have long been personally in favour of this course; and I have now, with the advice of my Ministers, appointed to the Executive Council two of the Maori members of the House of Representatives, viz.: (a) Wiremu Katene, a chief of the great northern clan of Ngapuhi; and (b) Wiremu Parata, a chief of the powerful southern clan of the Ngatiawa.
- Both these chiefs are men of much ability, and of large influence among their countrymen. They are also good speakers, and have taken an active and intelligent part in the debates of the House to which they belong. They will now be in a far better position to give valuable advice and information on Native questions to the Government; while they will at the same time afford a ready and useful means of communication with the Native tribes. Moreover, there can be no doubt that the admission of Maoris to the Executive Council, as well as to both Houses of Parliament, will tend to increase the confidence and to confirm the loyalty of the Native race throughout the country.

Rangitikei.—Visit of His Excellency Governor Bowen. Government House, Wellington, N.Z., 6th December, 1872.

MY LORD,—

I have the honour to report that I have recently returned from an official visit to the Rangitikei and Manawatu Districts, situated on the west coast of this Island, between Wellington and Whanganui.

- Large purchases of land have of late years been made from the Maoris in this quarter, and colonization is steadily advancing in a very satisfactory manner. A settlement of Swedes and Norwegians, as practised woodsmen, has been planted near the township of Palmerston, in the midst of the vast primaeval forest which overspreads that part of the country. To facilitate the export of the valuable timber, a tramway has been laid down from Palmerston to Foxton, the township near the Manawatu. Roads and bridle-tracks are being pushed forward in several other directions, partly with the help of Maori labour.
- A very important work has been undertaken, and is already nearly completed by the Colonial Government, in the connection of the East and West Coasts by means of the formation of a good carriage road from Foxton to Napier (the chief town of the Province of Hawke's Bay) through the gorge of the Manawatu River. This remarkable pass is the only opening in the cordillera or dividing watershed, which to the north of it is called the Ruahine, and to the south of it the Tararua Range. These mountains vary from four thousand to nearly seven thousand feet in height, and their summits are covered with snow during the greater part of the year. The narrowest part of the pass is about four miles in length; and the road has been skilfully carried at a short distance above the wide and rapid river. The precipitous slopes of the mountains on either side are clothed with the magnificent foliage of the New Zealand forests. In many respects, the Gorge, of the Manawatu, dividing the ridges of Ruahine and Tararua, resembles the Vale of Tempe, which is the gorge of the Peneus, dividing the ridges of Olympus and Ossa.
- For some time past a coach has been running regularly between Wellington and Whanganui, through Foxton. It is expected that within a few months from the present date a coach will be able to run from Foxton to Napier, which latter town will thus be brought into easy communication with the seat of Government. Already coaches run from Napier to the central Lake of Taupo, and from Auckland to Cambridge in the Waikato, which is only about seventy miles north of Taupo. The Maoris are at work on this part of the line, and it is confidently believed that in 1874 public conveyances will carry mails and passengers between Wellington and Auckland through the very heart of the Native and lately hostile districts. This is a result of the conciliatory policy of the Colonial Government, which would have appeared absolutely incredible if foretold only three years ago.

- In addition to their strategical and civilizing importance, these roads will have the effect of throwing open for settlement broad areas of rich pastoral and agricultural land, hitherto not only uninhabited, but almost unknown.
- But the most interesting feature of my recent tour was my conference at Foxton with the assembled chiefs and clans of the southern portion of this Island.
- There has been for more than one generation a fiercely-debated quarrel between several Maori tribes for the ownership of valuable lands near Otaki and the beautiful Lake of Horowhenua. Before the arrival of the English an internecine warfare had been carried on for many years; and it has required the constant efforts of the successive Governors to prevent these blood-feuds from breaking out afresh. At last the several disputants have been persuaded to submit their claims to the decision of the Native Land Court, a tribunal composed (as your Lordship is aware of English Judges and Maori Assessors. This Court is now sitting at Foxton, in the District of Manawatu; and on my arrival there I found the little township encircled by the camps of the contending tribes, which presented a most striking appearance, with the flags and streamers of the several clans, flying over their tents. The news of my promotion to the Government of Victoria, and of my approaching departure from New Zealand consequent thereon, had become known to the Maoris, and the leading chiefs came forward to express their regret, and their assurance that if I would visit Foxton on my return from the Gorge of the Manawatu they and their respective clansmen would forget their mutual animosities and gladly hold an united meeting to bid me farewell. I was amply rewarded for my ready consent to this invitation by the enthusiastic greeting which I received from the assembled clans, and by the speeches of the principal chiefs, all full of loyalty to the Queen and of good-will to myself.

Otaki.—Violent Conduct of the Muaupoko. Christchurch, New Zealand, 17th December, 1873.

MY LORD,—

I avail myself of the first despatch of a mail by the new service viâ California to inform you respecting a slight disturbance among the Native population, near Otaki, which may possibly be exaggerated in newspaper reports.

- I have the honour to state that during last week some acts of violence were committed by the members of a tribe called Muaupoko, by way of the forcible ejection of members of the tribe Ngatiraukawa from lands occupied by the latter, but adjudged by the Native Land Court to belong to the former in settlement of a dispute of very long standing. The total amount of land awarded was 50,000 acres, but the portion immediately in question had, I understand, been understood to be excepted, on special grounds, from the operation of the award. A chief named Hunia, who has served on our side under Major Kemp, burned the huts and destroyed the crops on this portion, whereupon some fighting with firearms ensued, which was at first reported, but is now contradicted, to have been attended with loss of life. The connection of one of the tribes with Waikato rendered the affair more serious than in itself it would have appeared; and some unruly members of the tribes declared an intention of forcing on hostilities. However, the Government officers of the district, acting under, instructions from the Native Minister, the Hon. Mr. McLean, have procured the submission of both parties to a reference to a Commission of Government officers.

- The Native Minister informs me that he has had much reason to be satisfied with the conduct and assistance of Major Kemp. In consequence of these occurrences, I had postponed from day to day my departure by land for Dunedin; but all cause for apprehension, is now removed.
- The altered circumstances of the Government in dealing with any Native disturbance may be estimated by the fact that the Native Minister, who was at the moment on a tour at Turanganui, in Poverty Bay, was able, without delay, to consult with his colleagues and subordinates, and to give his instructions by telegraph, keeping informed the Premier, who is at Dunedin, and myself here; the relative positions corresponding nearly to those of Inverness, Edinburgh, Hull, and London, and the scene of disturbance, being near the West Coast, as Glasgow. Besides this, the highly efficient state of the Armed Constabulary, and their judicious distribution, furnish, if need be, the means of interference, and of the arrest of the turbulent in any but the isolated district which I have formerly described.
- No Europeans were in any way concerned in this affair. I conjecture that the rehearing which the case is now to receive is and was desired by both parties to the dispute.

MY LORD,—

I have the honour to inform your Lordship that Sir Donald McLean has resigned his office as Native Minister, and has retired from the Government.

- I have been for some time aware that Sir Donald McLean has been anxious to be relieved from the duties and responsibilities of office as soon as his services could be dispensed with without detriment to the public service, but I regret to say that his immediate retirement has been precipitated by indisposition, though not, I trust, of a permanent character.
- Fortunately, however, owing chiefly, I believe, to the judicious policy adopted by Sir Donald McLean in his conduct of Native affairs, there is nothing which would lead me to think that any inconvenience will arise from his retiring at the present time, though I cannot help expressing my sincere regret that, in the consideration of Native affairs, I shall be deprived of the advice of one so thoroughly acquainted with the language, feelings, and customs of the Natives, and who has always exerted the great influence which he undoubtedly possessed with the Maoris in such a wise and judicious manner.
- Mr. Whitaker has resigned the offices of Postmaster-General and Commissioner of Telegraphs, and is now Attorney-General; while the seat in the Executive Council vacated by Sir Donald McLean has been filled by the appointment of Mr. Ormond, with the office of Postmaster-General and Commissioner of Telegraphs. MY LORD,—

It is with sincere regret that I have to announce to your Lordship the death of Sir Donald McLean, which took place at Napier.

- When I reported to your Lordship, by last mail, the retirement of Sir Donald from the office of Native Minister, I had no reason for suspecting that the illness from which he was then suffering would so soon prove fatal.

- Although, from the able and judicious manner in which he has for some years conducted Native affairs in this colony, his loss is not now likely to produce the same results that it might have done a few years ago, I still look upon his death as a serious loss to the colony, as even when out of office the great influence which he possessed among the Maoris would always have been available to smooth down and mitigate any difficulty that might arise.
- There is, in my opinion, no public man in this country to whom the colony owes a deeper debt of gratitude than to Sir Donald McLean, and he has left a name behind which will long be regarded with respect and esteem by all parties in New Zealand.

[COMMISSION OF APPOINTMENT.—By His Excellency Sir George Gipps, Knight, Captain-General and

(No. 2.)

INSTRUCTIONS for the COMMISSIONEES appointed to examine and report on Claims to Grants of Land in New Zealand, under the Act of the Governor in Council, 4 Victoriae, No. 7.

- THE Commissioners will proceed with all convenient despatch to the Bay of Islands, and on arriving there will wait on the Lieutenant-Governor, and, after showing him their Commission and instructions, will advise with him as to the best means of entering on their duties. In the execution of their commission they will not be subject to the control of the Lieutenant-Governor, except in the particulars hereinafter mentioned, but they will of course at all times yield to him the respect that is due to his station.
- They will bear in mind that the Act of Council does not authorize them to inquire into any case which is not especially referred to them by the Governor of New South Wales.
- Before proceeding to the actual investigation of any case, they will take care that the following particulars are duly, notified for at least fourteen days in one or more New Zealand newspapers, viz., the names of the parties interested as claimants; the names of all alleged settlers; the situation, boundaries, and estimated extent of the land claimed; the names of any opponents; the place of hearing, and the time of hearing. In cases of doubt or great importance, it will also be desirable that copies of the notices be transmitted to the Governments of New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land, for the purpose of being inserted in the respective Government Gazettes.
- Either the official Protector of Aborigines, or some person appointed in his stead by the Lieutenant-Governor, must be present at all their investigations, in order to protect the rights and interests of the Natives. The attendance of competent interpreters must also be insured.
- The Commissioners will conduct their proceedings, as far as they conveniently can, with open doors, especially whilst witnesses are under examination; but they will have the power of closing their doors for the purpose of deliberation, or, if necessary, to preserve order; and also to make such rules for the proceedings of their Court as they may deem requisite, being consistent with the provisions of the Act and with these instructions.
- In summoning and examining witnesses, recording evidence, and in every other step of their procedure, they will govern themselves strictly by the directions contained in the Act of Council; and in preparing their reports they will adopt the., accompanying form (Z), transmitting them with the least possible delay to the Colonial Secretary of New South Wales for the decision of the Governor.
- By the 5th clause of the Act the Commissioners are directed in very respect to set forth the number of acres which the payments made to the Natives by the claimants would be equivalent to, according, to the table in Schedule (D). They are not, however, to consider themselves absolutely bound to adhere to the number of acres so determined, but, within moderate limits, will be at liberty to recommend more or less, according to circumstances. As a general rule, the number derived from the table may be considered as the minimum to which the claimant may be entitled, whilst the maximum is fixed by the Act at 2,560 acres. The cases in which less than the minimum may be given will probably be where the land claimed is, from its situation or quality, particularly valuable, or where the articles given in barter to the Natives were likely to be hurtful to them instead of useful,— such, for instance, as gunpowder, firearms, or ardent spirits, or where the intercourse of Europeans, has clearly been prejudicial to the Natives. More than the number derived from the table may be given in a case where any individual has rendered personal services to the Natives, or where he may not be allowed to retain all the land on which he has made improvements. These, however, are points in which the Commissioners must be guided by their own discretion, and of course they must take care to keep their awards as far as possible in harmony with and in due proportion to each other.
- In calculating the value of improvements on lands not to be retained by the claimant, the Commissioners will only take into consideration how much more would the land sell for if entirely in an unimproved state. This sum, or its equivalent in land at its present selling value, may be allowed to the claimant in addition to the quantity to which he is entitled on account of his purchase from the Natives, whether that quantity be 2,560 acres or less; but it is of course to be understood that this applies only to cases in which the land wherein the improvements were made is not allowed to be retained by the claimant. When he retains the land he has the full benefit of his improvements, and herefore can claim no compensation for them.
- The Commissioners are also desired by the Act to set forth the situation, measurement, and boundaries by which the lands which they award to any claimant may afterwards be described in a deed of grant. To enable them to do this, a surveyor will be placed under their orders.

- In addition to the particulars above mentioned, they will specify in each report the mode of conveyance used in the purchase from the Natives, whether a formal deed or otherwise, the parties to it, and the proof. They will also insert a description of the land alienated by such conveyance but not awarded to the claimant, defined with such exactness as may be practicable and as may suffice for identifying the same, and preventing subsequent intrusion or encroachment.
- In making their awards, or in marking out lands, they will observe the general regulations which already have or may hereafter be established in New Zealand in respect to frontage on roads, rivers, or coasts, as well as other particulars, and take care that the whole quantity awarded in any one case be taken in one block.
- In the reservation of sites for towns, villages, works of defence, or other public purposes, they will (agreeably to the Act) follow such instructions as they may receive from the Lieutenant-Governor of New Zealand, and in the absence of any instructions from him they will act on their own discretion; and in awarding compensation for any lands which, were they not required for such purpose, might be granted to the claimant, they will take into consideration the probable value only which the lands would have been of to the claimant had he been allowed to retain them, and not the additional value which they may acquire in the hands of the Government, or in consequence of any proceeding on the part of the Government. They will also further take into consideration the increased value which may be given to any of the lands awarded to the claimant by the neighbourhood of the town, village, or work of defence to be established on the land retained by the Government. The compensation for lands so resumed may, if the case require it, be in excess of the maximum grant of 2,560 acres.
- As land will probably be claimed by the same person in different localities, every claimant, at his first appearance before the Commissioners, should be required to state the whole amount of his claims in all the Islands of New Zealand, and at the same time he should be warned—if a warning seems necessary—that the utmost which can be allowed for the claims of the same individual in the whole of the Islands is 2,560 acres; also that the claims of a number of partners can only be considered as the claim of one individual.
- When parties claim in different localities, each separate claim preferred by the same individual is to be considered as a distinct case and decided accordingly, i.e., on its own merits and within its own localities, with the single exception that the aggregate quantity recommended must not exceed 2,560 acres. Where the aggregate would exceed that quantity the Commissioners will use their own discretion, consulting, however, the wishes and convenience of the claimants as far as possible, whether to deduct the excess from any one of the spots claimed, or proportionably from the whole.
- If it shall appear in the investigation of any case that the real claimant, or rather the person who ought to be the claimant, is an alien, the fact must, be specially reported; but if the alien do not object, having the opportunity to do so, the award may go on and the report be made as in other cases.
- The Commissioners are not to decline to enter into any case on the ground that the fair claims of the parties will not be satisfied with 2,560 acres, it being an indispensable condition that every claim must be reported on by the Commissioners, except such report be dispensed with by the Governor.

By His Excellency's command.

Report of Visit to Kaipara. Auckland, 24th March, 1841.

SIR,—

In accordance with my instructions of the 4th ultimo, I proceeded on a mission from the Bay of Islands to the district of the Kaipara, with a view of obtaining every information relative to the purchases of land made by the Europeans from the Natives of that settlement, to disabuse their minds of the ill-concerted reports which have been circulated by evil-disposed British subjects, prejudicial to the interests of Her Majesty's Government, and to collect as much knowledge of the character and local advantages as that valuable part of the country affords.

Having obtained a guide from the chief Pomaré, we commenced our journey on Saturday, the 6th of March, and after three days' travelling arrived at the head of the River Wairoa, where we found the chiefs Tirarau and Waiata, with their most able men, busily engaged in felling and squaring kauri spars. These people received us very cordially, and we experienced from them every kindness and assistance. On the same day we held a conference, and the Government, with, its present and future designs, were the main topics of conversation. I endeavoured to explain fully and explicitly, the gracious intentions of Her Majesty, as represented by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, towards the aboriginal inhabitants of this Island. I referred them more particularly to the Treaty of Waitangi. To this they readily agreed, and admitted their clear understanding of the same. They had heard that an official communication had come from Her Majesty, forbidding the traffic of firearms and ammunition of every description. This report I undertook publicly to deny, and with a little explanation their suspicions on this head were allayed, and their minds at once divested of those apprehensions this information was naturally, calculated to inspire. They adverted to the exercise of magisterial power in the country, as applicable to the Natives, specifying several instances of New Zealanders who have been arrested and committed to gaol for misdemeanours, arguing that they were very well qualified to keep their own people in subjection. I told them that the able interference of the Magistrates among the Natives who had committed robberies had been patronized and approved of by the chiefs or masters of the respective culprits, and was a great preventive of future depredations. On this point I succeeded in satisfying their untutored minds, and convinced them of the protection they, with the white people, received by the establishment of law and justice in this colony. I also visited the chiefs Paikea and Weinga, who appear to exercise great influence among their people, and from whom we experienced every civility. The Natives, however, residing immediately on the Kaipara assume a character different from the generality of New Zealanders, being very presumptuous, and their manners offensive. They are possessed of vague and strange ideas concerning the settlement of Europeans in their country, asserting it is a precedent to a final extermination of their tribes and people. This information they have derived from one William Stephenson (a Native chief of that district), who has recently returned from Van Diemen's Land, assisted by a settler of Hokianga, who accompanied him. This chief, soon after his arrival, convened a meeting of the principal chiefs of Kaipara, and publicly declared that sooner or later they would become slaves, would be disinherited of their lands, and eventually totally exterminated. This, therefore, became a source of much excitement much conversation, and disputation; but I was glad to find that these detrimental objections had made but little impression on their minds derogatory to Her Majesty's Government. I used my influence to convince them to the contrary, and they appeared glad that I had visited them.... They still remain incredulous, but in no way hostile to the measures of Government, and I beg to submit that frequent interchanges with the New Zealanders of official and authorized persons will silence the Europeans, and assist the Natives in their interrogations concerning Her Majesty's Government. In the interim between these several meetings I collected all possible information regarding the purchases of land in the Kaipara and its vicinity, and herewith I have the honour to enclose a list of claims, with their particulars, preparatory to investigation; but I think it improbable that the Natives will attend the claimants to the township of Auckland for further examination. The Native inhabitants of Kaipara amount to about eight hundred; that of: the white population not more than seventy persons.

The tract of country from the Bay of Islands to the head of the Kaipara (with, the exception of a small portion in the neighbourhood of the Kawakawa and Waiomio) is exceedingly barren, and unworthy of cultivation. That, however, on the Rivers Wairoa and Otamatea—particularly on their banks—is very fertile, and affords ample scope for European location and cultivation, abounding in kauri and kahikatea timber.

We arrived at Auckland on the 20th, after an absence of fourteen days, during which period, the weather being very favourable, our party did not experience any indisposition.

Old Land Claims to be sent in for Investigation.

His Excellency the Governor has been pleased to direct it to be notified, for the information of foreigners claiming land in New Zealand by purchase from the Natives prior to the Proclamation issued by His Excellency Sir George Gipps, bearing date the 14th day of January, 1840, that, by a despatch from the Eight Hon. Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, it is ordered that all claims, whether British or foreign, be investigated and disposed of by the Commissioners appointed for that purpose. Such foreigners, therefore, as have not already forwarded the particulars of their claims to this Government are required to send them to this office without delay.

These particulars should set forth the precise situation of land claimed, its extent and boundaries, the names of the Native sellers and the consideration paid to them, and, in case of the claim being derivative, the names of the intermediate possessors of the land, and of the original purchaser, and the consideration given by him to the Natives.

Manukau Land Company. Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 28th October, 1841.
SIR,—

I have had the honour to receive, and lay before His Excellency the Governor, your letter of the 16th instant, as agent for a company styled "the Manukau Land Company," requesting permission to locate the immigrants daily expected to arrive in the barque "Brilliant," holding land orders from that body on land within the limits claimed by the company, under the circumstances of the unsettled state of the claims to land in New Zealand.

In reply, I am instructed to acquaint you that His Excellency, with the advice of the Executive Council, will sanction the immigrants expected in the "Brilliant" holding permissive occupancy for a period not exceeding two years-upon lands to be pointed out by the Surveyor-General on a portion of land on the Manukau.

I am further directed by His Excellency the Governor to request that, as all persons are entitled to the same advantages as the New Zealand Company, you will furnish a statement of all moneys expended in the purchase of lands in New Zealand from the Native chiefs and others; in the taking-up, chartering, and despatching ships for the conveyance of immigrants thither; in the maintenance of each immigrant before and during the outward voyage; in the purchase and transmission of stores for the public use of the settlers) collectively, on their arrival; in surveys; in the erection of buildings, or the erection of other works dedicated exclusively to the public service of the settlement; and in other heads of expenditure, or absolute liabilities, unavoidably required or reasonably incurred for the before-mentioned purchases prior to the date of the agreements in November, 1840.

SIR,—

With reference to my letter of the 28th ultimo, conveying to you the sanction of His Excellency the Governor to the emigrants sent out by the Manukau Land Company being permitted to settle on the Manukau, I do myself the honour to inform you of the terms on which the parties sent out by that company will be permitted to hold permissive occupancy of the land mentioned.

The emigrants will be allowed to locate on the Manukau on the express understanding that they occupy such land on sufferance only, until the pleasure of the Secretary of State shall be known on the subject. They will also be permitted to cut firewood and timber from the land adjacent, with the reservation of trees extending twenty inches in diameter and saplings under six inches.

I am further directed by the Governor to acquaint you that, in the event of the land so held by the emigrants sent out by the Manukau Company being hereafter sold to the Government, the parties holding permissive occupancy of the same will be allowed one month to remove their houses.

Manukau.—Arrival of Scotch Immigrants per "Brilliant." Government House, Auckland, New Ulster, 13th November, 1841.

MY LORD,—

I have the honour to inform your Lordship that a ship named the "Brilliant" arrived at the Port of Manukau on the 28th ultimo, bringing from Scotland twenty-seven emigrants, namely, sixteen men, eight women, and three children. The principal agent of the company applied to me for permission to appropriate to their use part of the land which had been purchased from the Natives by a Mr. Mitchel in 1835, and resold by his widow in 1839 to Major Campbell, Mr. Roy, Captain Symonds, and others, who formed themselves into a company under the title of "the Manukau Company." The lands in question are situated on the shores of the large estuary of the Manukau, and the extent, which is freely admitted, by the Natives to have been fairly purchased by Mr. Mitchel, may amount to thirty or forty thousand acres, which forms not one-third of the quantity contained in their deed.

The Manukau Company have sold in England, up to the date of the sailing of the "Brilliant," 8,500 acres of country land in one-hundred-acre sections, and eighty-five allotments of one-quarter acre each of town land, for which the sum of £9,350 has been received, and of that amount £5,250 had been reserved for emigration.

Having heard nothing from your Lordship respecting this company, I could make no appropriation of the land; but, to protect the settlers from the evils that would result from disappointment, I permitted the agent, with the advice of the Executive Council, a copy of whose minute I have the honour to enclose, to assign to the emigrants as they may arrive a settlement on the part of the harbour which has been measured out for a town, there to await your Lordship's directions.

Should your Lordship be pleased to allow them to form a town, I shall beg express directions to that effect, as Her Majesty's instructions specially forbid me to convey, grant, or demise any lands suited for such a purpose.

The formation of a settlement on the Manukau will be of essential benefit to this part of the country, and to the capital in particular; and I see no just objection to this object being effected through the intervention of this company in the same manner as the New Zealand Company have settled Port Nicholson. The port, which is by no means a bad one, will afford a more direct trade with the adjacent colonies; and the estuary, connected as it is by the Rivers "Waikato and Horotiu with the beautiful country of the "Waipa, will become the recipient of the produce of many hundred thousand acres of the finest agricultural land, which will readily find its way into Auckland.

I have, &c.,

W. HOBSON.

Mr. Fairburn's Land.—Portion allotted to the Natives. Protector's Office, Auckland, 8th November, 1842.

SIR,—

Referring to a letter from the Surveyor-General, referred to me under blank cover of the 7th instant, I do myself the honour to forward the following information to His Excellency the Officer; Administering the Government. It was always understood by the Natives that a portion, of the lands of Mr. Fairburn, amounting, according to his own showing, to one-third of the whole, should be retransferred to them.

- That the Natives had always liberty to cultivate on whatever portion of Mr. Fairburn's land they thought fit.
- That several little tribes are now, and have always been, living upon the said land, and others have been impatiently waiting to have portions of the said land pointed out to them as their residence; and that, until something decisive be done for the Natives relative to these lands, in selecting eligible situations for them, it appears to me a measure equally unsafe and unsatisfactory, both to the Government and their British and aboriginal subjects, to proceed to sell these lands.

I would therefore suggest that the earliest attention of His Excellency should be given to this subject, so that surveys may proceed and sales be effected.

Respecting Mr. Fairburn's Claim. Protector's Office, Auckland, 19th December, 1842.

SIR,—

I do myself the honour to acknowledge yours of the 16th instant, informing me of the instructions you have received from His Excellency to communicate with me on the subject of re-conveying to the Natives certain lands claimed by Mr. Fairburn on the west bank of the Tamaki. In reply, I beg leave to remark that the land claimed by the Natives, said to be included in, Mr. Fairburn's claim, never belonged to that gentleman, a reserve of one-third to themselves having apparently formed a part of the original agreement between the parties, and upon that ground they have taken possession of certain portions of the land. Some of the Natives have never even removed from it, but are now, and have heretofore been, cultivating on localities included within Mr. Fairburn's boundary.

I would therefore suggest that a map of the district of land claimed by Mr. Fairburn should be completed at your earliest convenience, marking the Native villages as reserves, and that a fair proportion of the Tamaki land should also be reserved for their benefit. The Ngatipaoa Tribe, being the principal claimants of the Tamaki, will expect their portion of land there.

I shall be very happy to render you any assistance that lies in my power in selecting such portions as Native reserves, and shall hold myself in readiness to accompany you to the spot for that purpose whenever it may suit your convenience.

GEORGE CLARKE, Chief Protector Aborigines.

Doubtless Bay.—Disputed Native Land Claims. Mangonui, 15th January, 1843.

SIR,—

I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government, that, upon my arrival here on the 6th instant to investigate the claims to grants of land in this neighbourhood, I found the Native chief Nopera, with upwards of two hundred and fifty of his tribe, awaiting my arrival in order to dispute and resist all the purchases, or pretended purchases, in or about Doubtless Bay that were not derived from him. Pororua established himself here with his tribe two days afterwards, supported by the Whangaroa Natives under Ururoa.

Upon my opening the Court and commencing the examination of certain sales of land made by Pororua (or Wharekauri) and others, Nopera entered and declared as follows:—

- He opposes all the purchases of land not made from himself at Mangonui.
- That he had a priority of right over all the land in the neighbourhood of Doubtless Bay, and denies the right of any other party to sell any land there without his sanction and ratification, which, however, had not been obtained in any case except in Captain Butler's purchase, which consequently was the only one he would allow of.
- That he considered the trifling property and cash given to him in 1840 by the Government for the lands in Doubtless Bay was only an earnest of what he was to receive for these lands, Pororua having received as much, although he had disposed of his rights to, and received payment from, the settlers. This purchase by the Government not having been completed according to his view of the matter, he thinks that the amount he has already received is only a fair equivalent for the feast given by him at Kaitaia upon the late Governor's arrival there.

He (Nopera) promises that the settlers at Mangonui shall remain unmolested and be permitted to occupy "the spots they reside on, with any cultivation attached," until the whole matter is arranged.; and this license he considers an ample compensation to Pororua, &c., for any rights they might have had to the lands; that he would not now relinquish his right over these lands either to the settlers or to the Government for any consideration that could be offered, but that he will maintain his right to the lands vi et armis.

The adverse tribes have opposed the sales made by Nopera to Dr. Ford and the Rev. Mr. Taylor, and with more show of justice, because these lands have been their dwelling-places for very many years.

I proposed divers modes of arranging their differences to these chiefs, but without effect, Nopera being the most determined in resistance. He considers that the offer, as, he calls it, of the Government in 1840 to purchase his rights over the heads of the Europeans already settled upon these lands was an absolute confirmation and admission of his title.

The two parties mustered upwards of four hundred fighting men, were fully armed, with abundance of ammunition, and their muskets loaded with ball-cartridge. Each party danced the war-dance, and was harangued by its respective chiefs, and at one time it appeared very probable that they would have come to blows before me.

I have frequently visited Nopera since in the hope of finding him in a more tractable disposition, but hitherto he has not given way in the least. I intend to proceed to Kaitaia in a few days to investigate the claims not disputed by these parties there, and shall endeavour to bring Nopera to terms during my stay there; but my hopes of being successful are very faint.

I have, &c.,

EDWARD L. GODFREY, Commissioner.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

Doubtless Bay.—Land Claims Dispute continued. Mangonui, 10th February, 1843.

SIR,—

Referring to my letter of the 15th ultimo upon the subject of the disputed Native titles which prevented my investigation of the claims to land at Mangonui, I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government, that I hoped to have brought Nopera to more reasonable views in the affair, by obtaining from him an admission of the sales understood to have been made by him and Pororua of these identical lands to the Government in 1840; but there appears to have been so strange a misunderstanding altogether with respect to this purchase that its assertion was of no benefit to me in the dispute, for Pororua had previously sold nearly every foot of land at Mangonui to individual Europeans, and Nopera most stoutly denies that he ever parted with his interests in them for the paltry consideration given to him.

I then proposed that the question of original title should be set at rest by Pororua's party sanctioning the disposal already made of the lands upon the east side of the harbour and river, and Nopera's doing the same for those on the west bank. To this arrangement, after much hesitation, Pororua's party consented; but Nopera (at the instigation of his chiefs, I believe) objected to it, and he continued in this obstinate mood, rejecting all attempts at accommodation, insisting vehemently upon his absolute right and title to the whole of the purchased lands. In this temper he quitted Mangonui.

Immediately after my arrival at Kaitaia all Nopera's tribes assembled there in considerable numbers, and in a public conference many violent and seditious speeches were made by Nopera and other chiefs. In these harangues they declared—

- That the sales of land around Kaitaia already made by Nopera and his party to individuals should be acknowledged; but that any surplus lands (i.e., those the Government does not grant to the claimants) will be resumed by the chiefs who sold them:
- That they will sell no more land, either to individuals or to the Government:
- That the chiefs will exercise all their ancient rights and authority of every description as heretofore, and will not in future allow of any claims or interference on the part of the Government:
- That they are all (except Nopera) very unwilling to arrange the dispute about the lands at Mangonui:
- That they (Morenga and his party) object to give the promised compensation for having stripped the vessel at Wharo; one old gentleman declaring that they would be on the look-out, and take advantage of every similar godsend:
- 6. That they all demur to any purchase of land which may have been made by the Government from Nopera in 1840, though they would not object to give some other compensation for any moneys then given to him by the Government.

These and many other violent expressions seemed to proceed partly from a feeling that not being allowed to dispose of their lands to whomsoever they pleased as formerly is an interference by the Government with a right they are not quite convinced they surrendered to the Crown. But in my opinion there were other causes of regret and discontent which we were unable to discover.

During the stay of Nopera and his tribes at Kaitaia, Mr. Kemp and I used, our utmost endeavours every day to correct and remove the erroneous impressions they have imbibed respecting the Government, but without much success. However, I obtained their recognition of every claim in this district from the North Cape to Mangonui (although the chiefs vowed that they will not again submit to similar investigations); and, after much debate, these tribes (Nopera's at least) consented to the arrangement I had suggested to Nopera at Mangonui, to determine his dispute with Pororua as above mentioned. Proposals to this effect, were instantly despatched to Pororua's party; but it was their turn now to be litigious, and the offers were immediately and indignantly refused by them, and a declaration made that they would come to no compromise in the matter. This change in their sentiments may have arisen from Pororua having received offers of assistance from the Ngapuhi, in the Bay of Islands, three large canoes with several chiefs having visited him immediately upon their hearing of Nopera's pretensions.

Upon my return to Mangonui a few days ago I found these parties continue as pugnacious as ever, with the exception of. Nga Takimoana, who withdrew the opposition he had presented to Mr Taylor's claims in Nopera's district, having convinced him that the lands of his family still remain unsold and unclaimed.

It is quite certain that I can do no more in this affair; but I think it would be very advisable that Mr. Clarke, the Protector of Aborigines, who purchased the lands from these tribes, and made other arrangements with them for the Government in 1840, should as soon as possible attempt their reconciliation, or at least the amicable and final adjustment of the points in dispute at this moment; and from the circumstance of Mr. Clarke having been the party engaged in all the above transactions, I thought it proper to promise the Natives that he will convey to them the pleasure of His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government touching all their differences and dissensions.

I have, &c.,

EDWAED LEE GODFEEY, Commissioner.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

Transmitting Form of Special Reports on Native Land Claims. Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 21st April, 1843.

SIR,—

It being, necessary, previous to the issue of the deeds for the lands recommended by the Commissioners to be granted upon the claims referred for their investigation and report, that every precaution should be used to insure a certain knowledge that the rights of the Natives therein have been completely extinguished, I have the honour to inform you, by the direction of the Officer Administering the Government, that with this view it has been considered expedient to require the following special reports:—

First, from, the surveyor, whether the progress of the survey has been interrupted by the Natives on the ground of ownership, and whether any claim has been preferred to him by them, or on their behalf, for any part of the land:

Secondly, from the Protector of the district, certifying that after due inquiry he is fully satisfied of the alienation of their lands by the former aboriginal owners.

To obtain the latter report the Surveyor-General has been instructed, whenever he shall receive notice from this office of His Excellency's approval of the intended survey of the lands to be granted upon any claim, to cause the enclosed form to be filled up from the Commissioners' reports and forwarded to you for the purpose of being transmitted to the Protector of the district in which the land claimed, is situate, for his report thereon.

On the receipt of this report from the Protector of the district, you will have the goodness to return the same to the office of the Surveyor-General—to accompany the final report of that officer of the completion of the survey of any lands, previous to their being proclaimed demesne lands of the Crown.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM CONNELL, (For the Colonial Secretary.)

Protector of Aborigines,

Government Notice.- Exchange of Land.

[Extract from New Zealand Gazette.] Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 6th September, 1843.

His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government directs it to be notified that, by a despatch recently received from the Eight Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, he is instructed that Her Majesty's Government has consented to allow all claimants who have established their titles to land in this colony, before the Commissioners appointed to investigate their claims, the option of exchanging their land for grants in the unoccupied portions of the district in which the Town of Auckland is situated, especial reference being had to the proportional values which have been established in the colony for town, suburban, and country allotments.

Claimants who are in the above position, and whose names will appear in the Supplement to the Government Gazette of this day's date, are accordingly informed that applications from parties desirous of availing themselves of this indulgence will be received at this office until the 31st day of December next.

By His Excellency's command.

WILLIAM CONNELL, (For the Colonial Secretary.)

Teems and Conditions relative to Exchange of Land.

Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 26th September, 1844.

IN order to carry into effect the notice formulated in the Government Gazette of the 13th instant relative to the exchange of land in the more remote districts of this colony, by claimants who may have established their titles to the same before the Commissioners, for grants in the unoccupied portions of the district in which the Town of Auckland is situated, His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government has been pleased to direct the publication of the following, terms and conditions under which claimants will be permitted to obtain that indulgence.

Claimants whose revised awards have appeared in the Supplement to the Government Gazette of the 6th instant will be divided into three classes, as follows:—

- Those entitled to less than 50 acres.
- Those whose awards amount to 50 acres, and do not exceed 320 acres.
- Those entitled to upwards of 320 acres.

Claimants of the 1st class will be allowed to make selections on the Eiver Tamaki, from a block of land set apart for that purpose, at the rate of acre for acre, to the extent of the revised award.

Claimants of the 3rd class will be allowed in a similar manner to select lands in the District of Papakura and on the Wairoa.

Claimants of the 2nd class will be allowed credit for so many pounds sterling as shall be equal to the number of acres to which they may be entitled, on any purchase they may effect at the Government land sale to take place on the 18th and 19th days of December next.

To afford claimants of this last-mentioned class an early opportunity of availing themselves of this arrangement, country lands in the vicinity of Auckland, on the Eiver Tamaki, will, on the 18th and 19th of December next, be offered "at public auction, at an upset price of one pound per acre. Particulars will appear in the next Government Gazette.

Claimants whose lands are situated within the County of Eden will not be entitled to the above mentioned privileges.

Provided in all cases that the land to be exchanged shall contain the whole claim, or series of, claims in cases where they are contiguous, and form a solid block; that the land to be exchanged be equal in amount to the quantity awarded, and of a fair average value: such not being the case, a proportionate deduction will be made.

Applications from claimants of the 1st and 3rd classes will be received at the office of the Colonial Secretary, when, on the report of the Surveyor-General as to the average value of the land, they will be placed in immediate possession of their grants.

Applications from claimants of the 2nd class who may propose to avail themselves of these conditions are to be forwarded to the office of the Colonial Secretary on or before the 9th December next.

Plans of the lands open for selection by claimants of the 1st and 3rd classes may be seen at the office of the Surveyor-General.

By His Excellency's command.

WILLIAM CONNELL, (For the Colonial Secretary.)

[Extract from New Zealand Gazette.] Rules for Exchange of Land in the Auckland District.

BY His Excellency ROBERT FITZROY, Esquire, Captain in Her Majesty's Royal Navy, and Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over Her Majesty's Colony of New Zealand and its Dependencies, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c.

In order that all claimants to land may be, as much as possible, on an equality with respect to opportunities of making exchanges of land with the Government, the following regulations are made public, and will be strictly observed.

Regulations respecting the Exchange of Land.

- No further exchange of land will be made by the Government previous to the last week of next June.
- There will be no restriction as to the quantity of land, whether town, suburban, or country, given by the Government in exchange for an equivalent value, or as much more as may be offered, in money, or in other land not yet granted by the Crown, but the claim to which has been recommended to the Governor for a grant.
- Before a Crown grant will be issued the land tendered in exchange for Crown land must be surveyed by Government, and, if found less in quantity than the amount-stated, the party, tendering will be required to make good the deficiency in money, or forego his intended exchange.
- Applications to exchange land will be received and registered till the fifteenth day of June next.
- Each such application must specify the quantity of land offered for exchange, the locality of such land, the number and letter (if any) of the land claim, and the Commissioner or Commissioners by whom it was investigated.
- No grant will be made out in favour of any person offering to exchange land at the end of June next, whose application shall not have been received by the Government before the sixteenth day of that month.
- A considerable portion of surveyed town, suburban, and country and will be put up to auction during the last week of June next, of which due notice will be given; but a sufficient quantity will be reserved for the sales in the months of September and December next, in order that other claimants whose claims may be then unsettled may have fair opportunities of open competition in exchange.
- Books will be opened at the Treasury for land claimants in order that they may have credit, in land only, to the amount of the quantities contained in their respective approved claims, which they may state their readiness to dispose of at the rate of one pound sterling per acre, in exchange for an equivalent value of Government land.
- Transferable notes will be given by the Treasury, on which it will be distinctly specified that the acceptance of such notes by the Government, at the above-mentioned sales, in exchange for land only, will depend on the validity of the claim they are intended to represent, and on their holder making good, in money, any deficiency in the quantity of land stated.

Given under my hand, and under the Seal, of the said Colony, at Government House, Auckland, this twenty-sixth day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-four.

ROBERT FITZROY, Governor.

By command.

ANDREW SINCLAIR, Colonial Secretary.

GOD SAVE THE QUEEN!

No. 19. NOTICE.

[Extract from New Zealand Gazette.] Respecting Fees on Exchange of Land. Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 6th June, 1844.

IN order to enable land claimants to avail themselves more easily of the existing arrangements for exchanging land, I am directed by the Governor to give notice, that payment of any fee on the final report of a Commissioner of Land Claims may be deferred until the issue of a Crown grant for any land obtained in exchange for that in respect of which the said fee may be payable.

No grant consequent on exchange of land will be issued after six monthssubsequent to-the day of sale or exchange; therefore in order to obtain any such grant the fee must be paid within six months from the day of exchange.

By command.

ANDREW SINCLAIR, Colonial Secretary.

No. 20.Colonel GODFREY, Land Claims Commissioner, to the Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Coromandel.—Native Claims in Lands awarded to Europeans. Coromandel Harbour, 8th June, 1844.
SIR,—

I have the honour to acquaint you, for the information of His Excellency the Governor, that since I have been in this district some applications have been made to me by Natives who laid claim to portions of land said to be included in the boundaries of award's made last year, for which they have not been paid, and which they will not surrender peaceably without so being.

As I consider it would be highly improper for me to make or propose any alterations in the awards upon cases that I have not heard—for there can be no doubt that the principal value of such evidence as we receive in these investigations is the impression it makes upon the hearers of it—I have referred these individuals to the Protector of Aborigines, Mr- Edward Shortland, who will examine into the complaints and report thereon.

My reason for bringing this matter under the notice of His Excellency, is that I conceive similar obstacles will arrive very frequently ia taking possession of grants, for it has not been unusual for claimants to refrain at the examinations from naming Natives who had applied often to them for payment for patches of land included in the claimed boundaries, and, when they wore fully sensible of the right of the Native to such spots, he has been promised a future payment; for them if he would not appear to object, upon which promise he has relied.

Now, from such circumstances, as we very seldom could obtain at the investigations an accurate description of boundaries, should the claimants receive a grant with such boundaries as are simply defined in the. Commissioner's report, without a survey of them pointed out by the Natives and justified by the Protector of Aborigines of the districts, I fear that much confusion and opposition will arise, hereafter; for we must expect that grants will be subdivided or disposed of to fresh settlers, and, if there are any such flaws in the original purchase, arising from unfulfilled promises or otherwise, payment will be instantly demanded from the new-comers, and should they refuse it they will be turned off the disputed ground quite as unceremoniously in the North as they have unfortunately been in the South. The class I speak of, the new derivative purchasers, being perfectly innocent of any error in the contract, and likely to consider a title springing from, a Crown grant as an ample ground of pertinacious holding, either mischief will ensue to the settlers if the Natives be strong, or if they be weak or isolated the Natives will suffer injustice.

The same considerations also should, I think, be borne in mind whenever His Excellency is pleased to enlarge any of the awards that I have made or shall make; for, in addition to the payment and other matters proved by evidence, I have frequently deemed it necessary to regulate the amount of the grant recommended by the quantity of land which, making fair allowance for the claims of opposing Native rights, it appeared probable to me that the sellers were clearly free to dispose of.

I have, &c.,

EDWARD L. GODFREY, Commissioner.

To the Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

No. 21. COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor GREY to the Eight Hon. Lord STANLEY.

Respecting Pre-emption Certificates issued under Proclamation of 10th October, 1844. Government House, Auckland, 9th June, 1846.

MY LORD,—

I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship the enclosed list of certificates of the right of pre-emption over certain lands having been waived by my predecessor, subject to the payment of fees at the rate of 1d. per acre. From this list, which I only received upon the 4th instant, it appears that about 100,000 acres of land have, under the terms of the regulations above alluded to, been disposed of in a manner which appears to me to have been at once unjust to Her Majesty's subjects of both races, and improvident in the extreme.

It will be seen from my predecessor's Despatch No. 36, of the 14th October, 1844, that this measure was obtained from him by the most improper means. Captain Fitzroy states in that despatch, "In the Gazette which I have the honour of transmitting with this despatch, and the enclosed minutes of Council, is a Proclamation respecting the purchase of land from the aboriginal natives of New Zealand, which I have deemed it not only prudent, but absolutely necessary, to issue, in order to prevent insurrection."

Again, Captain Eitzroy says in the same despatch, "I have to state that a number of persons have lately subscribed a large sum as a reward for whomsoever should do most towards stirring up and informing the Natives how to act together on this subject. During my visit to the southern settlements it was intended to agitate in the northern parts of the country, in order that on my return I might find the stream of popular feeling too strong to oppose effectually."

Such were the means which, my predecessor states; were pursued to obtain these concessions; and, as it is reasonable to suppose that the agitators for these concessions were those who most eagerly availed themselves of them when they were obtained, I regret that, as appears from the enclosed list, they should have been so largely rewarded for such conduct—if, indeed, they are ultimately allowed to retain these lauds. But your Lordship may readily conceive that so successful and lucrative an agitation will encourage people to pursue a similar course, and that such a terrible machinery as thousands of armed savages, which can be so readily set in motion, if it has once produced so decisive an effect, is likely to be frequently again made use of.

I have further to express my regret that, seeing the means which were taken to obtain these concessions from my predecessor, and the unjust nature of the concessions themselves, members of the Legislative Council, and various Government officers, were among the first to avail themselves largely of them.

I have applied the term "unjust" to these concessions, and I now beg to call your Lordship's attention to the reasons which make me think them unjust and oppressive to Her Majesty's subjects of both races: indeed, I might say that they are almost wholly subversive of the future interests of this country; and I will then show that the terms of the regulations themselves were evaded in the most improper manner.

I consider these concessions unjust to the Native, because free liberty to dispose of, his land to the highest bidder was not allowed him. The right of pre-emption over a certain tract of land was waived in favour of a certain individual, as will be seen from the enclosed copy of a certificate. It was waived on the application of this individual. No competition, therefore, was or could be raised. Now, I contend that the equitable consideration of the interests of a people standing to the Government in the position which the Natives occupy required that, if the right of pre-emption over any piece of land had been waived, the fact should have been publicly notified, and the sale should not have been allowed to take place until a certain specified time after the issue of this notice; and even then I think it should have taken place by public auction. I am also not satisfied that the Governor was authorized in law to waive the Crown's right of pre-emption over a small specified tract of land in favour of one individual.

I consider these, concessions unjust and oppressive to the settlers, for many reasons.

Firstly, I think that all those who bought small portions of land at £1 per acre did it under the full understanding that, in order that they might be able to buy any land in their vicinity which was requisite for the completion of their farms or the successful conduct of their operations, no land in their neighbourhood would be allowed to be sold otherwise than publicly and after due notice of the intended sale. By the regulations I am alluding to all such persons were grievously injured.

Secondly, I think that every settler and capitalist, even in the most distant portions of the colony, had also a right to believe that if any lands were about to be sold; whether they were fit for agricultural, pastoral, or mining purposes, or for cutting timber, such lands would only have been sold publicly and after due notice, so that a fair opportunity of purchasing them might have been afforded. This observation applies particularly to lands of great value, from their being believed to be rich in mineral productions.

Thirdly, I believe that a great injury will be inflicted upon the colony by giving such large blocks of land to many of the individuals named in the enclosed list, who are mere speculators.

I could go on accumulating reason upon reason against the justice of this measure, but I will only further allude to the case of those individuals who were allowed but one acre of, land for every five shillings they had expended, as well as to the case of those individuals who have in many instances paid considerably more than £1 per acre for their land. The settlers in the southern districts are indeed most cruelly injured by this regulation; one of the real objects, as I am informed, of the agitators and land-speculators being to attract here, by the cheap price at which they can sell land, those very labourers who are brought out to the southern settlements by the proceeds realized from the sale of lands at so high a price in that portion of the colony.

I now proceed to notice the manner in which the regulations were evaded. In the first place, in the notice of the 6th December, 1844, it was stated that "Lists of applications to the Governor to waive the Crown's right of pre-emption, showing the particulars of each and stating the answer given by the Governor, will be published from time to time in the Gazette." No such list was ever published, and I find from most respectable individuals, who were resident in the colony at the time, that they had no knowledge that such large tracts of land could be obtained on such terms; in fact, that they were wholly ignorant of the manner in which these regulations were carried out, and that they consequently never applied for land; so that this partition of a large tract of country had not even the merit of allowing all to start fair in the scramble.

Again, in the same Government notice, it is stated, "By, a limited portion of land, not more than a few hundred acres is the quantity implied." Your Lordship will find that some of the applicants, in order that they might not intrude upon the thousands, but keep within the hundreds as specified, only demanded 999 acres, which is certainly a most improper evasion of the spirit of the regulations, as indeed are the various applications for from 850 acres upwards. But the most common mode of evading the regulations was to apply for certificates of several hundred acres each for the applicant's children or friends. These evasions of the regulations were palpable. I have felt much difficulty in deciding upon adopting any course in reference to the new class of land claims which have arisen, under these regulations, as I am directed by your Lordship's despatch, marked "Separate," of the 27th June, 1845, to recognize any sales which my predecessor might have sanctioned under his last Proclamation, reducing the fee to 1d. per acre; whilst I am apprehensive that these instructions were issued by Her Majesty's Government without their possessing any accurate knowledge of the manner in which effect had been given to the terms of that Proclamation, or of its true nature and extent. I also feel certain that when persons attempt to take possession of their alleged purchases a formidable resistance will in many cases be offered by those Natives who are strong enough. And I feel, further, a great reluctance to be in any way concerned in inflicting upon the southern settlements the injury which I see is likely to overtake them.

I have, however, determined to issue a notice calling upon all persons claiming to have made purchases from the Natives, under certificates waiving the Crown's right of pre-emption, issued by my predecessor, to send in all the papers, whether deeds or surveys, connected with their claims, for examination within a period of two or three months, after which time no claims will be entertained. I will then appoint Commissioners to investigate into and report upon each alleged purchase; and I will not, except under special and urgent circumstances of justice, issue any confirmatory grants in satisfaction of these claims until I receive your Lordship's further instructions as to the general principles upon which Her Majesty's Government may wish them to be dealt with.

It only remains for me to add that I received to-day a deputation of some of the principal chiefs of the Waikato District, one of the most populous in the country; and in the immediate vicinity of Auckland, and that these chiefs informed me in the course of the interview that some land-jobbers had incited them to write a letter to me, asking me to permit them to sell their land to Europeans, and urging them at the same time to stand up for their rights as chiefs. They, however, assured me of their indignation at the mode in which the Crown's right of pre-emption over their lands had been waived, and expressed their readiness to leave the whole subject in my hands.

MEMORIAL of TAMAKI SETTLERS, AUCKLAND.

[Extract from New Zealand Gazette. ] Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 29th September, 1846.

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor has been pleased to give directions for the publication of the following address and reply, for general information.

By His Excellency's command.

ANDREW SINCLAIR, Colonial Secretary.

Protesting against the Crown Right of Pre-emption being waived.

"To His Excellency Captain GEOEGE GBY, Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Her Majesty's Province of South Australia, and Lieutenant-Governor of the Territory of New Zealand and its dependencies.

The memorial of the undersigned settlers and occupiers of land in the District of the TamaM and its vicinity sheweth,—

That your memorialists resorted to this territory upon the assurance of Her Majesty's Government that on their arrival they would have an opportunity of purchasing land from the Crown, and the Crown only, by fair competition at auction, of which per cent, of the purchase-money was to be applied as an immigration fund, and 25 per cent, in making roads and in other public works; and your memorialists were further informed that no purchase except from the Crown would be sanctioned or allowed.

That, upon the faith of such assurance, your memorialists hesitated not to pay for land in this district prices varying from 25s. to 30s. per acre, being considerably more than the upset price fixed by Her Majesty's Home Government, knowing as they did that, though land had been and might be obtained cheaper from the Natives, it was the duty as well as the interest of your memorialists to obey the laws and ordinances of the territory, and thereby claim and deserve the protection of the Government.

That your memorialists proceeded to cultivate their lands at considerable expense, undeterred by the numerous purchases from the Natives which they saw daily made, relying on the hitherto unbroken faith of the British Government towards her subjects, whether at Home or in the colonies, and never for one moment supposing that in their own case that faith would be first violated.

That your memorialists were aroused from this state of confidence by an announcement from His Excellency the late Governor that the right of pre-emption on the part of the Crown would be waived on moderate purchases from the Natives on payment of a fee of 10s. per acre, an announcement which your memorialists viewed with mingled feelings of alarm and distrust: of alarm, as they saw the consequent inevitable depreciation of value of their-property; of distrust, because, the boundary-line of national honour and good faith being once broken, they feared other equally important pledges might also be violated, and that even this measure was merely the precursor of other changes respecting Native purchases—a fear but too soon realized, the fee to the Crown on the waiver of the right of pre-emption being speedily reduced to Id. per acre.

That your memorialists have by the reductions in Crown fees received considerable injury in two shapes: Firstly, by depreciation in value of their lands; secondly, inasmuch as the sale of large blocks of Native land to speculators, who mostly have neither the intention nor means to cultivate them, prevents a concentration of inhabitants, causes delay in the making of roads (so necessary in every new colony), and will entirely annihilate the immigration and road funds by which your memorialists and the territory at large would greatly benefit; without referring to the stop put on free emigration which this course will cause in the Mother-country, for it is not to be supposed that parties will come to this land with the certainty of being driven into the interior of the country.

Your memorialists therefore trust that your Excellency will see the impropriety of sanctioning, under any circumstances the issue of Crown grants in respect of purchases made from the Natives, and thereby prevent the injury which impends on those who have dealt in good faith with Her Majesty's Government, and who have expended their capital upon Crown purchases.

PARRICK ANDERSON, Chairman.

[And nine others.]

REPLY of His EXCELLENCY to the foregoing MEMORIAL.

GENTLEMEN,—

In reply to the memorial you have presented to me, praying, for the various reasons therein set forth, that I would not under any circumstances sanction the issue of Crown grants in respect of purchases made from the Natives under the terms, of a Proclamation of my predecessor, dated 10th October, 1844, I have to acquaint you that, much as I regret the injury which may by this measure be inflicted upon the interests of yourselves, and, indeed, upon those of the vast majority of Her Majesty's subjects of both races who inhabit this colony, it is not at present in my power to do, more than assure you that, in arranging the complicated claims which have arisen under the terms of the Proclamation above alluded to, I will to the best of my ability and judgment do such justice to all the interests concerned as upon mature inquiry may be found practicable.

GEORGE GREY, Lieutenant-Governor.

MEMORIAL of AUCKLAND SETTLERS.

Praying that their Land Purchases may not be disturbed. [Extract from New Zealand Gazette.] Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 30th September, 1846.

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor has been pleased to give directions for the publication of the following address and reply, for general information.

By His Excellency's command.

ANDREW SINCLAIR, Colonial Secretary.

To His Excellency GEOEGE GREY, Esquire, Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief

in andover the Colony of New Zealand, and its Dependencies.

The memorial of the undersigned inhabitants of Auckland and its vicinity shmveth,—

That your memorialists, in pursuance and under the authority of a Proclamation issued by the late Governor, Captain Eitzroy, on the 10th day of October, 1844, became purchasers of land from the aborigines.

That such lands are now in the possession of your memorialists, many of whom have expended large sums of money, and are even now carrying on improvements on the same.

That your Excellency's decision relative to these purchases, published in the Government Gazette of the 16th of this month of June, has caused your memorialists much surprise, inasmuch as they are not aware of having in any way "evaded the regulations and terms under which the certificates "waiving the Crown's right of pre-emption were issued."

That your memorialists have been still more surprised at the information that your Excellency's decision has been influenced by a belief that your memorialists, are persons referred to in Captain Fitzroy's despatch to Lord Stanley, dated the 14th October, 1844, and published by order of the House of Commons in June, 1845.

That your memorialists are only just now aware of the existence of that despatch, and of the view which your Excellency has taken of the same.

That each of your memorialists takes this the earliest opportunity of most unequivocally declaring that he did not at the time mentioned in the despatch referred to, or indeed at any other time, excite the Natives on the subject of the Crown's right of pre-emption; that he neither subscribed himself, nor was he aware that any other person ever subscribed, any sum whatever "as a reward for whomsoever should do most towards stirring up and informing the Natives how to act together on this subject;" and, further, each of your memorialists declares that it was not his intention, nor is he aware of such intention having existed on the part of any other person, to agitate in the northern parcs of the country" during the Governor's absence in the southern, "in order that, on His Excellency's return, he might find the stream of popular feeling too strong to oppose effectually."

Your memorialists trust that this unequivocal denial will, at least as regards themselves, satisfy your Excellency of the groundlessness of the statements contained in the above-mentioned despatch; but, should your Excellency entertain a shadow of a doubt as to the accuracy of your memorialists' declaration, they entreat the institution of such an investigation as may be sufficient to satisfy your Excellency of their truth.

And your memorialists pray that your Excellency, feeling the injustice of dealing with their property on an assumption of the truth of that which is undeniably incorrect, will, in conformity with the Secretary of State's permission, grant to your memorialists that title to their lands, which was promised to those who purchased under the authority of the Proclamation of the 10th October, 1844.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

DANIEL LORRIGAN. WILLIAM GOODFELLOW. [And 43 others.]

REPLY of His EXCELLENCY to the foregoing MEMORIAL.

30th September, 1846.

GENTLEMEN,—

It is very gratifying to me to receive so distinct a declaration from a portion of the inhabitants of Auckland and its vicinity that they have not at any time excited the Natives upon the subject of the Crown's right of pre-emption; but it is nevertheless my duty to take this opportunity of publicly reiterating the complaints of my predecessor, by stating that, during the period I have administered the Government of this colony, most improper attempts have been made to induce the Natives to dispose of lands (to which, I believe, their title was doubtful) without any reference to the rights of the Crown—and the present and future interests of the inhabitants of this portion of Her Majesty's possessions.

I am fully satisfied that the great majority of the inhabitants of this portion of New Zealand-will in no way connect themselves with proceedings which, looking to the fearful calamities they must eventually entail upon Her Majesty's subjects of both races, cannot but be viewed with horror by the whole civilized world. I request them to lend me every assistance in their power for the-suppression of such attempts, and they may rely that I, upon nay part, will omit no means within my reach of promoting their prosperity and happiness.

The terms of the Government notice of which the memorialists complain were prepared with great care, and with the advice and consent of my Executive Council. They are in strict conformity with the Instructions of Her Majesty's Government, and I am aware that that notice afforded the most unqualified satisfaction to the vast majority of the Queen's subjects within this territory. My duty will not, therefore, permit me to depart from, or in any way to vary, its terms; and I can give you no further assurance upon this subject than that I will spare no exertion to arrange your claims in such a-manner as to render the greatest amount of substantial justice to the many and conflicting interests involved in them.

To the Gentlemen composing the deputation.

G. GREY, Governor and Commander-in-Chief.

No. 24.LAND CLAIMS COMMISSION.

[Extract from New Zealand Gazette. ] Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 25th January, 1847.

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor having been pleased to appoint Henry Matson, Esquire, a Major in the 58th Begiment, to be a Commissioner for examining and reporting on all claims to land under the Proclamation of the 26th March, 1844, the Commissioner hereby notifies that he intends to investigate the undermentioned claims at the Council Chambers on the 1st of February, 1847, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon.

The cases will be heard in the order in which they stand in the following list, and all parties interested are hereby summoned to be in attendance with their documents and witnesses.

By His Excellency's command.

ANDREW SINCLAIR, Colonial Secretary.

EXTRACTS from DESPATCH of Earl GREY to Governor GREY.

[Extract from New Zealand Gazette.] Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, August 10, 1847.

HIS Excellency the Governor has been pleased to direct the publication of the following documents, for general information.

By His.Excellency's command,

ANDREW SINCLAIR, Colonial Secretary.

EXTRACTS from DESPATCH No. 41, dated "Downing Street, 10th February, 1847."

The series of your despatches which I enumerate in the margin exhibit so clearly the injurious tendency of those measures, and the necessity of resorting to some prompt and effectual remedy, that I think it needless to enlarge on those topics. My immediate purpose is rather to satisfy to the utmost of my power the demand which you make for the support and assistance of Her Majesty's Government in arresting the progress of the danger which you anticipate from Governor's Fitzroy's decision on this subject.

The steps taken by yourself with this view appear to me to have been judicious. I approve of your determination to allow all claimants, binder the Proclamations of the 26th March and of the 10th October, 1844, or under the notice of the 7th December in the same year, to send in their claims within a prescribed period, on pain of the exclusion of them. I approve of your projected appointment of a Commission to report on every purchase, and your decision not to issue, except under very special circumstances, any grant to any such purchaser until you shall have received the further instructions of Her Majesty's Government.

These measures, however judicious in themselves, are, as you have pointed out, quite inadequate to encounter an evil of such magnitude. The effectual remedy must be of a different character, and must be taken under the immediate authority of Her Majesty's Government.

On referring to the official correspondence, I find that Governor Fitzroy's first Proclamation, waiving the Crown's right of pre-emption, was dated on the 26th March, 1844. It formed one of a great body of enclosures in his despatch of the 15th April in the same year. The effect of that Proclamation was to require the payment to the Crown of ten shillings in respect of every nine acres out of ten, of which the pre-emption should be so waived.

Six months later, that is, on the 10th October, 1844, Governor Fitzroy issued a second Proclamation, reducing the payments to the Crown in those cases from ten shillings to one penny an acre. This last Proclamation was transmitted by the then Governor on the 14th of the same month of October, 1844.

Lord Stanley's despatch of the 30th November, 1844, though disapproving the first of these Proclamations, gave a distinct but reluctant sanction, to it. On the 27th June, 1845, his Lordship, in his despatch of that date to yourself, directed you to recognize any sales which Governor Fitzroy might have sanctioned under his second Proclamation. But his Lordship expressed his opinion that it was a most impolitic arrangement, and earnestly impressed upon you the inexpediency of allowing such purchases for the future. On the 14th August, 1845, Lord Stanley recurred, to the subject, and expressed his desire that the practice might be discontinued as soon as it could be safely done, and he explained that he had understood the first Proclamation as limited to a particular district which he proceeded to define, and he stated his earnest wish to revert to the original plan of prohibiting all direct purchases from the Natives.

The result therefore seems to be that the first, or (as it has been called) the "ten shillings an acre" Proclamation, has been sanctioned by Her Majesty's Government in reference to the particular district defined by Lord Stanley; that the "penny an acre" Proclamation (as it has been termed) has been sanctioned by Her Majesty's Government to this, extent—viz., that any sales which Governor Fitzroy might have sanctioned under it were to be recognized. To whatever extent the faith of the Crown is thus pledged to the purchasers it must be maintained inviolate, be the consequent inconvenience what it may. But, except to the extent to which any such pledge has been given, Her Majesty remains perfectly free to take such measures as the welfare of her subjects in New Zealand requires.

In assuming the right to issue any such Proclamation your predecessor was plainly exceeding his lawful authority. This must be perfectly obvious to any one who reads the Royal Charter, Commission, and Instructions, which enacted and limited his powers. But though, Captain Fitzroy thus exceeded his authority in a manner which, even if there had been no other reasons for doing so, would have rendered it indispensable that he should be removed from the Government of New Zealand, to refuse now to acknowledge the claims of individuals, founded upon acts done by him while he was in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him by Her Majesty's Commission, would be inexpedient, since it might unjustly affect persons who have availed themselves of the Proclamation in ignorance of the defective authority on which they rested, and also because it might very injuriously impair the authority of those who exercise the power of the Crown in its distant colonial possessions thus to establish the principle that their exceeding their authority vitiated their acts, and that private individuals cannot safely regulate their conduct upon the principle that whatever a Governor may do under his Commission is to be assumed to be lawfully and properly done, until the contrary is declared by superior authority. While, therefore, on the ground of Captain Fitzroy's having disobeyed his Instructions, and also that of the manifest impolicy or the Proclamations of the 26th March, 1844, and of the 10th October, 1844, and of the notice of the 7th December, 1844, waiving the Crown's right of pre-emption, the Queen is pleased to disallow and annul those acts and each of them, Her Majesty is further pleased to declare that this order of disallowance shall not prejudice any acts which may have been done in strict pursuance of the Proclamation of the 26th March, 1844, antecedently to your receipt of this despatch, or any acts which, may have been done in strict pursuance of and under the authority of the Proclamation of the 10th October, 1844, antecedently to the receipt by the Governor of New Zealand of Lord Stanley's despatch of the 27th June, 1845. It is Her Majesty's further pleasure that all such acts so done before such respective periods shall be as valid and effectual as if the Proclamations under which respectively such acts may have been done had been confirmed and allowed by Her Majesty.

Having thus reconciled the observance of the faith of the Crown with the prospective abrogation of these unfortunate acts of your predecessor, it remains for me to observe that the claimants under these Proclamations have a title resting on no other ground but that of a strict and positive legal right, and that their titles have no support from justice, equity, or public policy. To whatever extent they can clearly bring their cases within the true meaning of Governor Fitzroy's Proclamations, to that extent their demands must be satisfied.

But it is not merely competent to you, but is your plain duty, to withhold any grant from the Crown, and any aid in any other form, from every purchaser under these Proclamations who shall not be able to prove, in the strictest manner that he has complied with and literally satisfied the requisitions of the Proclamations in every particular they contain.

You will therefore refer every such claim to the Attorney-General for New Ulster, calling on him to report whether it is in exact conformity with the Proclamation under which it may be preferred. And you will make no Crown grant to any such claimant without the previous certificate from the Attorney-General to that effect.

It will further be necessary, before any such Crown grant be issued, that the Attorney-General should certify to you that the Natives from whom the purchases may have been made were, according to the Native laws and customs, the real and the sole owners of the land that they undertook to sell. It will be the business of parties claiming the benefit of such sales to produce such evidence as the Attorney-General may consider to be required to enable him so to certify; and they must do this at their own charge without cost to the Colonial Treasury. Finally, in every grant which you may make in pursuance of these Proclamations, it must be expressly declared that Her Majesty enters into no guarantee or warranty of the title to the lands, save only so far as to engage that the grant shall be considered as barring the title of the Crown to such lands, and as transferring to the grantee any right to the lands which, at or previously to the, date of the grant, may have been vested in the Queen.

You will give immediate publicity to Her Majesty's decision, and to the motives of it as I have already explained them. I anticipate that the result will be that of the purchases made under Governor Fitzroy's Proclamations very few indeed will be sustained. I have no difficulty in avowing that it will be gratifying to me to learn that such is the result, for the whole transaction is one which it is impossible to contemplate without a lively regret that any persons should be benefited by it at the public expense, and an earnest desire to confine that benefit strictly within the limits which the Royal faith, as pledged by Lord Stanley's despatches, prescribes.

MY LORD,—

I have the honour to enclose for your Lordship's information some tabulated returns,

The tabular returns, being very voluminous, have not been printed.

showing, in as far as practicable, the nature of the claims to land which have arisen under my predecessor's Proclamations of the 26th March and 10th October, 1844, waiving the Crown's right of pre-emption over certain lands the property of the Natives. The returns were accompanied by a letter from the Colonial Secretary, containing a summary of the several facts which have been established by the compilation of these documents in his office. Unfortunately the information obtained is not so complete as could be desired, the papers sent in by the claimants being in many respects unsatisfactory, and not affording the information they ought to contain.

The following facts, however, have already been substantiated: The total number of claims which have been preferred is 148, of which 47 arose under the ten-shillings-an-acre Proclamation of the 26th March, 1844, and 101 under the penny-an-acre Proclamation of the 10th October, 1844. The number of claimants is however much less than 148, probably not really more than one-third or one-fourth of that number, as several individuals have preferred several distinct claims; and in other cases merely the names of several children of the same family have been written down, to enable one person to establish a claim to a large tract of country. The quantity of land claimed under the ten-shillings-an-acre Proclamation of the 26th March, 1844, is about 1,800, acres. It is at present impossible to tell the quantity of land claimed under the penny-an-acre Proclamation of the 10th October, 1844. The extent of land over which the Crown's right of pre-emption has been thus waived is nominally, in acres something less than 100,000 acres; but, in addition to the number of acres, the certificate of waiver of the Crown's right of pre-emption contained a description of the natural boundaries of the tract over which the Crown's right of pre-emption was so waived, and it has been found that the tract so described contained in some instances more than five times the number of acres named in the certificate.

It will also be seen from the letter of the Colonial Secretary that the following important facts are clearly established by the accompanying returns: (1.) The conditions of the notice, which stated that the only effect of waiving the Crown's right of pre-emption was to open that portion of land to public competition, and that lists, of the applications made for such waiver, and of the answers returned, would be from time to time published in the Government Gazette, were never fulfilled, no such publication having in any one instance taken place—by which all competition on the part of the public was precluded. (2.) It has already been shown, partly from the statement of the claimants, partly from the testimony of the Natives, that in fifty cases the land had been purchased from the Natives previously to the issue of the certificate of the Crown's waiver of the right of pre-emption. (3.) It has already been ascertained that in at least forty-six cases a portion or the whole of the consideration given was in muskets, gunpowder, and other warlike stores, and that these were, with only two exceptions, given to the Natives during the actual existence of a formidable rebellion in the country. This evil, however, probably prevailed to a greater extent than has been ascertained; for the Colonial Secretary states that the documents given in by the claimants are so vague that it is impossible in some cases to tell what were the articles given, or the prices at which they were valued.

Auckland.—Native Claims within Extended Grants. Downing Street, 2nd December, 1847.

SIR,—

I have the honour to acknowledge your Despatch No. 41, of the 17th April, 1847, on the subject of the grants which your predecessor had extended beyond the established maximum limit of 2,560 acres.

By this despatch I learn that, as had been anticipated by one of the Commissioners of Claims, great difficulties are beginning to arise from Natives coming forward who considered themselves to have rights to portions of the extended grants, and that the peace of the country was thereby seriously endangered. You mention that under these circumstances you would probably be unable to await the instructions for which you had previously applied, and that you had formed the intention, in all cases where the disputes of the Natives about these grants might come before you, to commence legal proceedings for the purpose of ascertaining whether they are not null and void; because, if so, you were resolved not to take any steps which might bring Her Majesty's troops into conflict with her Native subjects in support of an invalid title to land. In taking this resolution you have my cordial approval. No European can have the least pretence to expect that the Government should suffer itself to be led into hostilities in support of any titles to land which were both in themselves invalid, and contrary to any well-founded rights residing in the Natives.

Upon the receipt of my Despatch No. 50, of the 1st March, 1847, you will find that I had already authorized you to institute proceedings, wherever your Law Advisers thought that they would be successful, for reversing the extended grants; but at the same time that the persons so dispossessed should have the privilege of purchasing at the minimum upset price any lands on which they might have incurred any considerable expenditure in reliance on the grants and on the promises of the previous Governor.

You have, by your intended course on disputed cases, anticipated the first part of those instructions. With regard to the latter part of them, it is, I conclude, very improbable that any European will have had time or opportunity to make any substantial outlay on the extended portion of those grants in reliance on the expectations arising from Governor Fitzroy's measure; but, should this have occurred in any case, it would appear desirable to allow the claimant every facility to acquire the property, provided he can furnish the Government with the means fully to satisfy every Native having a good claim to the land, and provided also that the whole, amount paid by him, whether for compensation to the Native or as a price to the public, does not fall short of the established minimum price for so much land as he is allowed finally to acquire.

Auckland.—Legal Investigation of certain Land Claims approved of. Downing Street, 3rd December, 1847.
SIR,—

I have, the honour to acknowledge your Despatches, No. 42, of the 19th of April, 1847, and No. 64, of the 5th July, 1847, reporting the steps you had taken to bring to a judicial decision the rights of purchasers under Governor Fitzroy's Proclamations, commonly called the ten-shilling-an-acre and the penny-an-acre Proclamations.

In my Despatch No. 41, of the 10th February, 1847, I had mentioned that, if there were any cases (although it seemed improbable) in which every condition of these Proclamations has been literally fulfilled, and, in which also it could be proved that the Natives from whom the purchase had been made were the real and sole owners of the land which they undertook to sell, the grant should not be withheld, but that, unless the whole of these conditions were met, none ought to be issued.

I regret to see, by your first report that already-one of the claimants, a butcher at Auckland, Had treated with most reprehensible violence and injustice a Native who had a claim to some land which this person had bought of a different tribe. This case affords an ample example of the danger likely to arise out of the vast tracts of land suddenly, acquired in the manner mentioned. You had provided for the purchasers the means of equitably commuting such claims; but you state that they showed little disposition to acquiesce in that mode of settlement, being under an impression that it was impossible to shake their titles.

I entirely approve of the resolution you formed, under these circumstances, to bring the question to issue. It appears to have been done in the manner best calculated to give the subject a fair trial; and the learned and elaborate judgment pronounced by the Court will long remain a valuable record of the principles of law applicable to cases of this nature. The result has been to show that the supposed purchase from the Natives conferred no valid title. All proceedings arising out of this decision will probably have been closed before, this despatch can reach you. Should you, however, still require any general intimation of the views of Her Majesty's Government on the subject, I can merely say that in this, as in all analogous instances of cancelled, grants, I think the cardinal principle by which you may feel confident of securing substantial equity in your proceedings is this: that when a European claimant has made a bona fide and considerable outlay on the faith of any Government Act or Proclamation, you should allow him every reasonable facility to acquire the same or a corresponding portion of land, subject to the two conditions of fully satisfying every Native claimant, and of not paying less in all than the established minimum price of land in the colony. I need scarcely add, however, that any individuals who may have been guilty of acts of violence so discreditable to the European character and so injurious to the interests of the community as those you have brought under my notice, in the particular instance specified in your Despatch No. 42, may be deemed to have forfeited all claim to the assistance or good offices of the Government.

Report of Proceedings for Settlement of Claims under the Fitzroy Proclamation. Government House, Auckland, 4th December, 1847.

MY LORD,—

I had the honour, upon the 1st instant, of receiving your Lordship's Despatch No. 76a, of the 25th June last, from which I learned that the intelligence which had reached England upon the subject of the land claims, since the date of your Lordship's Despatch No. 41, of the 10th February last, had not led your Lordship to make any alterations in the instructions contained in that despatch. I am thus able to consider the instructions your Lordship intends to issue upon these subjects as conclusively settled, and no change is therefore requisite in the line of proceeding I immediately adopted upon the receipt of your Lordship's despatch of the 10th February. Under these circumstances, it will now be proper for me to report in detail what these proceedings were, and in how far they have, up to this time, effected a settlement of claims under the ten-shillings-an-acre and the penny-an-acre Proclamations.

I shall probably best acquaint your Lordship with the nature of the proceedings I adopted upon the receipt of your Despatch No. 41, of the 10th February last, by enclosing for your perusal the opinion of the Attorney-General on the course which, in conformity with the terms of that despatch, would have to be pursued for the adjustment of the land claims; and a copy of the minute, which I read in the Legislative Council, explanatory of the arrangements I proposed to adopt, and of the arguments upon which I justified that arrangement, and then by adding the following explanatory remarks:—

In your Lordship's despatch of the 10th February I found that a point peculiarly relied upon, and the force of which was evident, was that to whatever extent the faith of the Crown had been pledged to the purchasers under my predecessor's Proclamations it must be maintained inviolate. I conceived, therefore, that this was to be the rule of proceeding which was, in as far as practicable, to regulate my conduct.

I was at once, however, met by serious difficulties. In the first place I thought it clear that this rule ought in strictness to be interpreted solely with reference to the rights of the Crown, and that, as the Crown upon the issue of my predecessor's Proclamations was pledged to respect the rights of all the Queen's subjects, it could not be regarded as being pledged, by the act of any executive officer, to perform acts in favour of some individuals which would be in direct violation of the rights of others of Her Majesty's subjects of both races. Upon the other hand, I felt it to be my duty to aid, as much as lay in my power, those of Her Majesty's subjects who had in any degree been led by the acts of the Executive Government to become involved in purchases and speculations in land; but yet only to carry this aid to such an extent as would not irretrievably injure or destroy the future prospects of the colony.

Another difficulty presented itself of a serious kind, which was that, under the terms of your Lordship's despatch as read by the Attorney-General, each claim would require a long and minute investigation, which might by the claimant be lengthened out for many months, perhaps even for years; and, in the meantime, as the whole of the land in the vicinity of Auckland was claimed by purchasers, or pretended purchasers, the progress of the colony would have been greatly retarded, and a continued expense for military protection would have been entailed upon Great Britain. It appeared, therefore, desirable that any arrangement I made should embrace, as a leading principle, the immediate and final adjustment of these claims.

Another difficulty which I foresaw would arise from my giving effect strictly to the terms of your Lordship's despatch was that, from the nature of the grants I was required to issue, landed property in the vicinity of Auckland would be held under tenure of two different kinds, which appeared, for many reasons, objectionable. Secondly, the Crown would, in the instance of these confirmatory grants, have virtually recognized that there was some efficacy in a title derived by direct purchase from the Natives, and I feared that the recognition of so unusual a principle might ultimately give rise to serious inconveniences, and to most embarrassing questions in our Courts, and establish a precedent which I was anxious, if possible, to see avoided.

Another very serious difficulty in the way of the settlement of these land claims was that the Crown's right of pre-emption was waived over a country which had never been surveyed, and the Surveyor-General was not, I believe in any instance, consulted whether or not the land was required for roads, public purposes, or the sites of towns. The public convenience and the future welfare of the colony therefore appeared imperatively to require that, the Surveyor-General should examine the country, lay out and reserve lines of roads, as well as lands required for public purposes or the sites of towns, before a grant of any description should be issued.

I felt, therefore, upon a full consideration of all these circumstances, that, under the terms of your Lordship's instructions I should be justified in varying from the direct terms of your despatch of the 10th February, if I could devise an arrangement which would secure—(1) To the colony at large the advantage of the land required for roads, public purposes, or sites of towns; (2) to the claimants such consideration as would secure to them such claims upon the good faith of the Crown as they might be able validly to urge, without any violent or absolutely unjust violation of the rights of the rest of Her Majesty's subjects; (3) an immediate and final adjustment of these claims upon a basis which would not inflict a lasting injury to the colony; (4) a title to the claimants of the ordinary kind, and so complete a survey that no future litigation could arise regarding boundaries between adverse claimants, either Native or European; (5) that the public should be put to no expense in the adjustment of these claims.

I trust that your Lordship may find that the terms of the arrangements which I proposed for the adoption of the claimants, and which are detailed in my minute, in a great degree attained all these objects.

I now proceed to report upon the progress which has been made in carrying out the arrangements I have made.

About sixty of these land claims have already been disposed of—in fact, all those of the most pressing kind in the immediate vicinity of Auckland. Roads have been laid out in all the districts where the claims have been examined, and these roads have been reserved, as well as all places required for public purposes or for town sites, as also the excess found in the claim over the quantity of land named in the pre-emption certificate, and the tenths in the case of all claims exceeding 200 acres. In every instance the claim has been carefully surveyed, and laid down in its true position and in all cases of disputed boundaries the Commissioner has adjusted these disputes by arbitration. Finally, the claimants have received a Crown title of the usual kind, so that every precaution has been taken to prevent future litigation. Generally the Government have found the claimants glad to accept the terms offered; and some of them, in order to obtain them, have abandoned claims to very large tracts of land.

Although by the arrangements proposed no claimant obtains a greater extent than 500 acres of land, I cannot deny that much injury has been inflicted upon the colony by these grants of land having been given to people who in many instances cannot and in other instances never intend to use them, as also by the public having lost a large extent of land, which those who have obtained it could now sell from £7 to £10 an acre, whilst the means of emigration and making roads have been lost to the colony yet, after bestowing every care and attention upon the subject. I was unable to devise a better arrangement than I concluded, and, having once made this arrangement, I thought it right to dismiss wholly from my mind all remembrance of the mode in which these claims had originated, and of their unjust nature, and to do my utmost to modify the evils they had entailed upon the colony, by employing the Natives to make roads through the country given to the claimants, thus putting the colony in the state it would have been in had the land been sold in the usual manner; whilst the arrangements your Lordship has made for sending out pensioners will, in a great measure, compensate for the loss of the emigration fund. I hope, therefore, that, these causes will greatly modify the evils of the system I was compelled to sanction, and that this part of the colony will now advance rapidly in prosperity.

It only remains for me to state my hope that your Lordship will, upon considering all the difficulties with which the question was embarrassed, approve of the course which I have pursued; and, in the event of your Lordship doing so, I would venture to request; as the whole proceeding from the issue of the first Proclamation by my predecessor appears to have been illegal, that your Lordship would advise Her Majesty to sanction the issue of the Crown titles in the usual form, which I have given to the claimants. I think that, the Australian Land Sales Act having been repealed in New Zealand, this act upon behalf of Her Majesty would, if formally done, quiet all doubts regarding these titles, and effectually set at rest all further question regarding these unfortunate claims.

I have, &c.,

G. GREY.

The Right Hon Earl Grey.

Enclosures.(No. 1.)ATTORNEY-GENERAL'S REPORT.

ON the course to be pursued under the terms of Lord Grey's despatch on the subject of claims to land under Governor Fitzroy's Proclamation, I have the honour to report as follows:—

The result appears to be this: that Governor Fitzroy's Proclamations are declared to have been issued by him without authority, and so to be null and void; but that the acts done under them are to be recognized so far as they were done in strict pursuance of them. That, in order to entitle any claim (whether under the first or the second Proclamation) to be entertained, two things must be proved: (1.) That Governor Fitzroy, in waiving the right of pre-emption, did so in manner, within the extent, and according to the terms of his own Proclamation. (2.) That the claimant, on his part, complied strictly with the requisitions of the Proclamation: in other words, that the proceedings were throughout "in strict pursuance of" and "under the authority of the Proclamation." The Proclamations declared that the right of pre-emption would be waived over "limited portions of land," and in the notice of the 7th December, 1844, Governor Fitzroy declared that by the term "limited portion" was meant "a few hundred acres."

In cases where the right was waived over a greater quantity than a few hundred acres, the Act not being in strict pursuance of the Proclamation, the claim would, by a rigid construction of Lord Grey's despatch, be out of Court. But an interpretation more favourable to the claimant might, I think, be adopted, without a violation of the fair spirit of the despatch, viz., that the mere fact of the waiver being excessive shall not invalidate the claim, but that, if in other respects valid, the claimant may receive a grant not exceeding a few hundred acres (say 500 acres). In no case whatever can the claimant, according to Lord Grey's despatch, receive an absolute Crown grant in the usual form, but simply a deed, releasing in favour of the claimant any right which the Crown may have in the land. The course to be pursued in the investigation of a claim preferred under the despatch would be this: (1.) It would be examined in order to ascertain whether Governor Fitzroy's Act in waiving the right was in "strict pursuance" of the Proclamation. If it should be found that the right had been waived over land reserved by the provisions of the Proclamation, then the claim would at once fall to the ground. If it should be found to be correct so far as Governor Fitzroy's acts were concerned, then the inquiry would be, Has the claimant, on his part, complied strictly with the requisitions of the Proclamation? If it should be found that the claimant has purchased the land from the Natives before obtaining the waiver of the right of pre-emption, or wilfully understated the quantity of land, &c., then the claim must fall to the ground by reason of the claimant having on his part failed to comply strictly with the requisitions of the Proclamation.

But, assuming a claim to have passed the first two stages of inquiry, then would arise the question, of title. Was the land purchased from the true Native owner or owners, according to Native law or custom? The necessary evidence on this point is to be produced at the expense of the claimant, and, failing to be satisfactory, the claim would, after all the expense and delay incurred in the course of the investigation, fall to the ground.

But assuming, the evidence to prove satisfactory, then the claimant would be entitled to receive a deed releasing the Crown's right only, and in no case for a greater quantity of land than 500 acres, the remainder, if any, falling to the Crown as part of the Royal demesne.

Apart from its small intrinsic value, such a title, differing so widely from the ordinary absolute Crown grant, would always be looked upon with suspicion in the market. The claimant under it would be liable at any time, within a certain number of years, to actions and claims by Native claimants, and would frequently, for the sake of quiet possession, have to buy off or satisfy Native claims which had not been considered when the purchase was originally made.

W. SWAINSON, Attorney-General.

(No. 2.)EXTRACT from MINUTE of His Excellency the GOVERNOR.

THE Regulations the Government intend to adopt are as follow:—

"The choice of any one of three modes of proceeding will be left open to all the claimants: (1) Either to avail themselves of the provisions of the instructions from Her Majesty's Government, which I have now laid on the table; or (2) to avail themselves of the provisions of the local Ordinance (No. 22, Sess. VII.) to authorize compensation in colonial debentures to be made to certain claimants to land in the Colony of New Zealand; or (3) to avail themselves of the following regulations, which the Government are prepared to adopt.

"The Government will issue at once to all claimants under the ten-shillings-an-acre Proclamation (who complied strictly with the terms of the Government notice of the 15th June, 1846), and whose claims have been already investigated or may hereafter be investigated by the Commissioner, and favourably reported upon by him, absolute Crown grants, in the usual form, on their paying within one month from the date of the report of the Commissioner the remainder of the fees due. The grants to include the reserve-tenths (at £1 per acre) in cases where the whole quantity granted does not exceed 200 acres. The same rule will be extended to the penny-an-acre claimants for blocks not exceeding 500 acres (whether the land may be cultivated or not), whose claims have been, or may hereafter be, favourably reported upon by the Commissioner, on their paying 5s. an acre within the same period of time.

"The same grant, and a title upon the same terms, will be issued to all the penny-an-acre claimants in whose favour the Crown's right of pre-emption may have been waived over more than 500 acres of land; but in these cases the quantity of land granted (on which alone the fee will be demandable) will never exceed 500 acres, and any title which the claimant may have acquired over the remaining portion of the claim will remain in the Crown; but the Government will not undertake to extend this last rule to a distance from the Town of Auckland exceeding twenty miles. It must also be distinctly understood that the Government will in no case extend the rules relating to the penny-an-acre claims to those cases in which there is any probability of the title to the land being justly disputed by the adverse Native claimants. The fee of 5s. an acre demanded upon claims of this character is intended to cover the expenses of the Commissioner's Court, the Government surveys, and to satisfy any Native claimant who may afterwards appear, the Government, by giving an absolute title, taking upon itself to make the title good."

SIR,—

I have the honour to acknowledge your Despatch No. 134, of the 24th December, accompanied by a memorial, addressed to me by a considerable number of the inhabitants of Auckland and the surrounding districts, expressive of their confidence of the equity and judgment with which you will deal with the outstanding land claims in New Zealand, and of their hope that Her Majesty's Government will not be misled by any statements to the contrary, nor interfere with the powers you hold to deal with the subject. You are aware of the concurrence which I have always felt in your general views on these questions, as well as of the reliance which I have placed upon your judgment on those points upon which an opinion could only be formed on the spot. And I have to request that you will so inform the memorialists, and will acquaint them that it has been very satisfactory to me to receive their expressions of confidence in your administration.

Mr. McLean appointed a Commissioner under Land Claims Ordinance. 20th October, 1851. Colonial Secretary's Office, Wellington,
SIR,—

I am directed by His Excellency the Governor-in-Chief to transmit to you a Commission, under the Great Seal of the New Zealand Islands, appointing you to be a Commissioner under the Land Claims Ordinance, Session I., No. 2. Before entering upon your duties it will be necessary for you to take the oath prescribed by the ordinance, and Captain Thomas has therefore been duly empowered to administer the same to you.

Commissioner.

H. S. WARDELL, Esq., R.M., Poverty Bay, to the NATIVE SECRETARY.

Intention of Natives to retake Possession of Lands sold to Europeans. Resident Magistrate's Court, Turanga, 27th May, 1859.
SIR,—

I have the honour to hand you herewith copies of letters addressed by me to the Hon. the Colonial Treasurer, dated respectively the 29th June, 1858 (No. 55), and the 21st August, 1858 (No. 73), reporting an expressed intention on the part of the Natives to retake possession of land which had been sold by them to individual Europeans. In consequence of a communication from the Commissioner of Land Claims to that effect, I represented to the Natives that he might be expected to hold a Court in this neighbourhood during the summer now just passed, and induced them to leave the cases, to which my annexed letters refer, for his decision. His not yet having visited this district has therefore been a cause of disappointment to them. At a meeting of Natives held yesterday the intention I have reported was again expressed, -but, on my urging them, to abide the decision of the Commissioner, whose arrival might be immediately expected, they consented.

Under these circumstances, I have the honour to submit for the consideration of His Excellency that it is desirable a Court of Land Claims should be held in this neighbourhood at as early a date as convenient, in the hope that it may be the means of ending an agitation which is calculated to produce a bad feeling between the European residents and Natives.

I have, &c.,

HERBERT S. WARDELL, Resident
Magistrate.

The Native Secretary, Auckland.

Poverty Bay.—As to Native Intentions to reclaim their Lands. Resident Magistrate's Court, Turanga, 29th June, 1858.

SIR,—

The Europeans in this neighbourhood are residing on land purchased at various times by private individuals from the aboriginal owners. For those lands no Crown titles have been issued, but I am informed the claims have been submitted for the decision of the Land Claims Commissioner Recently Kahutia and other Natives have expressed their intention to repay the cattle and goods received for the sale of these lands, and require a rental for the occupation of them. The cattle - received in payment for lands, claimed by Thomas Uren and Robert Espie are now-being collected and will shortly be returned. This will, I think, prove the commencement of a general movement. I not apprehend any force will be used to remove the Europeans, but I think it probable that they will be subjected to such a series of annoyances and depredations as may eventually compel them to leave.

Under these circumstances I have the honour to beg to be informed if, in the opinion of His Excellency's Government, I can pursue any other course than that I have adopted, namely, to represent to the Natives that as they were consenting parties to the sale of the land in question, the simple fact of their returning the payment of the purchasers, without their consenting to receive it, will not destroy their claim to the land.

I have, &c.,.

HERBERT S. WARDELL, Resident Magistrate.

The Hon. the Colonial Treasurer.

Price of Land, returned, and its Sale repudiated. Resident Magistrate's Court, Turanga, 21st August, 1858.
SIR,—

Referring to my letter of the 29th June, No. 55, I have the honour to inform you that the payment received for the land purchased by Thomas Uren and Robert Espie has been returned by the Natives: that is to say, the cattle which formed the payment have been driven on the land and left there, although the Europeans interested have not consented to receive them. The Natives are satisfied for the present with having, as they say, returned the payment. I am glad to say that the movement hitherto has been confined to Kahutia and his party, and there appears no immediate prospect of its being followed by other Natives.

I have, &c.,

HERBERT S. WARDELL, Resident
Magistrate.

The Hon. the Colonial Treasurer.

No. 34. MEMORANDUM by the LAND CLAIMS COMMISSIONER on the Land Claims at Poverty Bay.

IN obedience to the Governor's commands that I should state in an official form the substance of a private letter I recently addressed to His Excellency from Poverty Bay, I have to make the following remarks on the land claims there under purchase from the Natives.

These claims are few in number, and do not comprise together more than 2,200 acres. Only six are for land bought prior to Governor Sir G. Gipps's Proclamation of 14th January, 1840. The others relate to transactions entered into contrary to law at various periods from 1840 to 1854 or 1855.

When Governor Fitzroy introduced what is called the penny-an-acre Proclamation the Turanga settlers asked him to waive the right of pre-emption so as to enable them to complete their purchases; but he refused. With the exception of these transactions, of a small piece of land sold to the Government not long ago as a place for the Resident Magistrate, and of the land set apart for the Bishop's industrial school, the Native title has not been extinguished, and the district remains in the hands of the Natives.

Mr. McLean was to have inquired into the claims at Turanga some years ago, but was prevented from doing so, chiefly, I believe, on account of so many of them being illegal, while in his position towards the Natives it would have been almost impossible for him to avoid going into them. The same difficulty was in my way; for, while the Land Claims Act gave me no authority formally to "investigate" cases in which land was bought without the sanction of Government since 1840, the Natives were anxious to have all inquired into, if any.

For some time past there has been growing up a desire on their part to repossess themselves of the lands they had sold; and before I got to Poverty Bay there were discussions among them as to whether they should appear before me at all, lest by doing so they should compromise the position they had assumed towards the settlers. However, they determined to come, and several meetings took place between us in the last week of December, 1859. They opened the discussion by a very decided intimation of their intention to resume all the land; but in order to strengthen their position they adopted a course quite novel, namely, that of repudiating their sales, commencing with the claim of the Bishop of Waiapu, which I had always understood to be disputed by nobody.

During the meetings I explained to them that there were three classes of claims at Turanga: (1) Those arising prior to 1840; (2) those arising out of the setting-apart of land for the maintenance of half-caste children; and (3) those arising out of purchases after Sir G. Gipps's Proclamation.

The only real difficulty attached to the last class. I took pains to explain the grounds of the doctrine that wherever they had actually parted with their title it passed to the Crown; and that, therefore, they should give up the land sold irrespective of the date of purchase. Further, that they had nothing to do with any regulations as between the Crown and its subjects of the European race regarding the ultimate disposal of the land. The principal seller had been a chief named Kahutia; and thereupon he confessed to having sold the land wrongfully, confirmed the allegation of the Natives that they had an equal right to it, which has never been satisfied, and admitted that they talked of sending him off to another part of the East Coast, as a kind of punishment. Of course this last was an unmeaning threat, but the end of it was that they united in the declaration that they would repossess themselves of the land. To this I objected that they had permitted the settlers to live there for years, and to incur a good deal of expense in building and cultivating, and that it would be unjust to take the land and not pay for the improvements. They admitted the justice of paying for these, and requested me to value them; which, however, I had no power to do. Most of the settlers, seeing the course things were taking, got alarmed and decided not bring forward their claims at all, lest when the evidence came before me their own witnesses should, as Kahutia had done, repudiate the sales. Even in a case where the evidence seemed to establish the claim, the claimant considered it would be hazardous to make a survey; and, though (in accordance with the rule I have pursued from the first) I refused to allow young men to annul transactions of the older chiefs, I think it would be difficult in any case to make such a survey as I require before issuing a grant. The settlers then expressed a desire to abandon their claims to the Government, in the hope of some day getting a title; and I took the opportunity of pointing out, in claims arising since 1840, the absurdity of their calling upon the Governor to protect them and expecting the aid of the law to maintain their violation of it.

On the whole, I could not but arrive at an unfavourable opinion of the Natives. I never heard anywhere such language used about the Queen's authority, law, government, Magistrates, and the like. I think much of this state of things arises from the decline of chieftainship in the district, instanced by the proverb among them that "at Turanga all men are equal;" and it would have been far better if the ordinance of 1846 had been put in force, and straggling settlers prevented from occupying the land contrary to law. This is, in my opinion, the chief cause of the bad state of feeling that has grown up at Poverty Bay. Whatever may be the true reason, it has resulted in preventing the settlement of the claims, and at present I see no prospect of making such a settlement.

F. DILLON BELL, Land Claims Commissioner.

No. 1. Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Reporting on Native Claims to Oruru Valley. Mangonui, 23rd February, 1855.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report the result of investigations into claims raised by certain natives to the Valley of Oruru, which I was commissioned to inquire into by His Excellency's directions conveyed in your letter of the 28th November last.

At the date of this letter the whole of the land-purchasing operations to the north of Auckland were conducted by Air. Johnson.

This valley is situated on the tract of debateable ground which usually lies between the possessions of every two great tribes in New Zealand, and has been a bone of contention for generations past, between the two great divisions in the North,—the Ngapuhi and the Rarawa.

Besides the Ngapuhi and the Rarawa, another party have now appeared, headed by a young man named Tipene, of the Ngatikahu Tribe, the original possessors of the land in question, who were formerly on the side of the Rarawa, taking part with them against Ngapuhi in 1842. They have now quarrelled with their late Chief Noble, and are urging their claims under the auspices of Tamati waka.

It appears that all parties partook more or less of the payments made by Dr. Ford and the other Europeans, the original purchasers, through whom the lands reverted to the Crown; and had the ground been actually taken possession of at that time, it is very probable that no difficulties would have been raised by the natives.

During the twelve years which have elapsed since that event, affairs have changed. A war between the Rarawa and Ngapuhi, who suffered considerable loss of life on both sides, has taken place, about the right of selling lands in the District of Mangonui, and it happened that the Valley of Oruru was the scene of the hostile encounter.

Whatever the rights of these belligerent tribes may have been respectively, prior to this war, an equal loss of life raised the claims of both parties upon a new basis, and not being able to agree together, the place was by mutual consent abandoned.

Noble appears to have been the first to return to the contested ground, with the sanction, he affirms, of the Government, in consideration of the services he rendered in the war against Heke.

These circumstances have led to a complication of native difficulties; and the land being required for the location of settlers, it became evident that the first step was to extinguish the claims of Noble, the party in possession, and this was done recently for the sum of one hundred pounds, through the hands of Mr. White, the Resident Magistrate, and Noble now without equivocation acknowledges the land to be Crown property.

Next in importance, with a view to quiet occupation, is the settlement of the demands of Pororua and the Ma Uri Uri of Hokianga, (Ngapuhi,) and I think a sum of one hundred and fifty pounds might be advantageously spent in attaining that object, as well as a sum of one hundred pounds to the young chief Tipene who has now headed a third party of claimants.

Pohipi, a chief of the Rarawa, also advances a claim of fifty pounds, maintaining that he has as good a right as the other parties, having lost several men in the defence of his claims in the war with Ngapuhi in 1842; and I would also recommend the liquidation of this claim, after which the question will be settled on a satisfactory footing, and considerable blocks of land can be obtained from the Rarawa without any of these complicated difficulties with which the present claim is surrounded.

The aggregate amount now required will be three hundred pounds, which, together with the former payments, will raise the cost of the Valley of Oruru to about the same amount as would have been paid for a new purchase of the same size in the present time; and I beg to request you to move His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government, to approve of the foregoing arrangements being carried out, and the amount transmitted for me, to the care of the Sub-Treasurer, Bay of Islands.

I beg further to state, that some of the foregoing parties of claimants are very insolent in their demands, notwithstanding the liberal manner in which I have dealt with their claims, and propose referring their case to a higher authority in Auckland; but as I have, acted in co-operation with Mr. White, the Resident Magistrate, who is also of opinion that the measures I have proposed are the best that can be devised, I hope that a firm refusal will meet them in Auckland, after which I have no 'doubt but that they will accede to the terms offered them. I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, District Land Commissioner. Donald McLean, Esq., Principal Land Commissioner, Auckland.

No. 2. MEMORANDUM by Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP.

Report on Claims of Tipene to a portion of Oruru Valley.

BY His Excellency's directions, Tamati Waka appeared at the Land Purchase Department in reference to the claim of a young chief, named Tipene, to a portion of the payment for the Valley of Oruru, near Mangonui, (or Doubtless Bay), for the purchase of which the Government is now under negotiation. In explanation of this claim, the following paragraph from Mr. Johnson's Report of the 23rd February, 1855, will show the position in which the applicant stands:—

"Next in importance, with a view to quiet occupation, is the settlement of the demands of Pororua and the Mauriuri of Hokianga." (Mem.: Their chief is Moses Tawai.)

"Besides the Ngapuhi and the Rarawa, another party have now appeared, headed by a young man, Tipene, of the Ngatikahu Tribe, the original possessors of the land in question, who were formerly on the side of the Rarawa, taking part with them against the Ngapuhi in 1842. They have now quarrelled with their late chief, Noble, and are urging their claims under the auspices of Tamati Waka."

Mr. Johnson, in recommending a division of the money, proposes a sum of one hundred pounds (£100) to be given to the chief Tipene.

Tamati Waka has represented his claim to be nearly equal to that of Pororua, who is to receive, I understand, £150; and suggested that Tipene's people should receive the same amount in order more effectually to satisfy several outstanding claimants, of whom the very influential, chief Rangatira, of Hokianga, is one, and to enable the Government to take quiet possession of the valley in so far as they are concerned.

Although in all native transactions it is very objectionable, and often entails trouble, to interfere with another officer's arrangements, still, as Tamati Waka had already seen Mr. Johnson, and having come to Auckland with these chiefs principally to lay the case before the Governor; and having, moreover, strongly recommended an additional sum of £50 to be given, I undertook to submit the question for his Excellency's favorable consideration and approval, upon the understanding that, if Mr. Johnson completed the purchase, they would pledge themselves that no further claims should be made upon the Government for the land in question.

H. T. KEMP, Native Secretary, Land Purchase Department.

Auckland,

4th May, 1855.

Mr. JOHNSON (Acting Chief Commissioner) to Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP.

To Negotiate for Land at Mangonui for Canadian Settlers.

SIR,—

Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 7th December, 1855.

Heremth I have the honor to forward for your information, the copy of a letter from Mr. Commissioner McLean, relative to the negotiations to be entered into for the purchase of a block of land near Mangonui, in order to afford every facility for the settlement of a body of Canadian' immigrants in that district.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, (Acting for Chief Commissioner)

H. T. Kemp, Esq.,
District Commissioner, Bay of Islands.

Enclosure.

Wellington, 17th November, 1855.

SIR,—

In order to give every facility to the settlement at Mangonui of a body of Canadians, which Dr. Stratford has come out to establish, I have the honor to request that you will take an early opportunity of instructing Mr. Johnson to take charge of the office at Auckland, so as to enable you to proceed without delay to your district at the Bay of Islands.

After arriving at Waimate you will consult Tamati Waka, Pene Tau, and other influential chiefs, in reference to the object of your visit to Mangonui, to which place you will repair with the least possible delay to confer with the chiefs of that district in reference to the lands which they wish to dispose of.

Every care should be taken to distinguish between lands which have been already ceded to private individuals, and those which have never been purchased from the natives. For instance, it may be presumed that lands already purchased do not require to be interfered with on the part of the Government. Your operations will, therefore, be principally directed to the acquisition of fresh tracts of land for the purposes of colonization.

In making preliminary negotiations for the purchase of lands, it will be necessary for you to enquire the extent of land that has already been alienated by the natives, as well as the extent, capabilities, and position of those unalienated lands which they may now wish to dispose of; the price for which (subject to ample reservations for their own present and future wants,) such lands can be obtained by the Crown; and whether the payment for it can be judiciously extended over a period of years, conditionally perhaps, that, in order to satisfy the numerous claimants, the first instalment may be made equal to one-half of the whole purchase-money.

It is of importance that all Reserves made for the natives should be distinctly marked by natural boundaries, such as rivers or other conspicuous features of the country as this will be the means of saving expense in surveying reserves, and of preventing differences, from the unalterable nature of such boundaries.

Before leaving Auckland, you should supply yourself with the reports and other documents that have passed through the hands of the Commissioners appointed to investigate titles to land in your district, together with every other document you may be able to procure having any reference to the purchase of land in that district.

His Excellency has impressed upon me the necessity of cautioning every officer of this department to use the utmost care and discretion in acquiring lands from the natives, as each officer will be held responsible for any difficulties or disturbances that may arise out of any purchase in which he is engaged.

Of course you will not conclude any definite arrangement with the natives, until you have first reported the nature of them to me, for the information of the Government.

From the prudence you have displayed in former negotiations, and the long and intimate knowledge you have had of the natives of your district, I have every reason to hope that your negotiations will be attended with success.

I have, &c.,

DONALD MCLEAN, Chief Commissioner. H. T. Kemp, Esq., J.P., Acting Chief Commissioner, &c., &c.

P.S.—In making arrangements for the acquisition of land, it may be found advisable to issue a few Crown Grants, of from ten to one hundred acres each, to four or five of the principal chiefs out of the lands they may surrender to the Crown.

DONALD MCLEAN, Commissioner.

No. 4. Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Relative to Land for Canadian Settlers. District Commissioner's Office, Waimate, Bay of Islands, 11th April, 1856.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report for the information of His Excellency the Governor, that I have just returned from visiting the districts to the northward of the Bay of Islands.

Agreeably with the request contained in your letter, my attention was directed towards the acquisition of the Victoria Valley, upon which to establish a body of Canadians under the agency of Dr. Stratford.

The valley of the Victoria, better known to the natives as Takahue, is situated on the northern side of the Rua Taniwa Range, and about midway between the Oruru Valley and the western coast, the two valleys being separated by a bush of from seven to eight miles in length, which I traversed, and through which a road might be easily opened up, thereby connecting the two districts, and thus forming a nearly direct line of communication with the Harbour of Mangonui, the principal port of safety in that part of the island. The Victoria Valley is nearly triangular in shape, is well watered, and skirted with excellent timber, the soil of a rich alluvial deposit, and, at a rough estimate, may be said to contain about twenty thousand (20,000) acres. A large portion of it has been under cultivation by the natives, and there exist at present some few scattered plantations of no very large extent.

Noble Panakareao, the chief of the Rarawa Tribe, is the principal owner of the valley, and upon my expressing a desire to visit it, he informed me that it had never been offered for sale, that it was more than probable it would be required for the use of the natives, whenever the surrounding districts shall have been purchased by the Government. At the same time he led me to infer that a large price, would be asked if the Crown should propose to buy.

I regret that, owing to the very sudden and serious illness of Noble, further enquiries have been postponed; but, judging from what I have heard in other influential quarters, I think a sum of £3,000 (three thousand pounds) if the money were on the spot, and a few reserves, comprising in all about two thousand (2,000) acres, would effect the purchase.

Of its importance taken in conjunction with the settlements of Oruru and Mangonui, there seems to be no doubt, and that a large portion of it would be taken up at once by settlers, if the native title were extinguished.

It is decidedly the finest district in that part of the Province, and presents great facilities for settling. If His Excellency should deem it advisable to make an offer of the sum above-mentioned, I think it might be done without prejudice to either party; but I would respectfully urge, as a prior arrangement, that the long outstanding claims for the Valley of Oruru should be brought to a final and amicable conclusion.

I have,&c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

The Principal Commissioner,
Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

District Commissioner's Office Waimate, Bay of Islands, 12th April, 1856.
SIR,—

I have already adverted to the importance of settling the outstanding native claims to the Valley of Oruru.

I beg now to state as briefly as I can the particulars connected with these claims for His Excellency's information.

The Valley of Oruru was originally said to be purchased by Mr. S. H. Ford, and afterwards transferred by him to the Government for scrip. There were at the time of sale to Mr. Ford two distinct parties, resident owners, headed by their respective chiefs, Noble and Pororua. The purchase seems to have been defective, inasmuch as Noble's party alone received the bulk of the property paid by Mr. Ford. Pororua repudiated the sale in so far as his claims to half of the valley were concerned, and when Colonel Godfrey opened the Commission for investigating claims at Mangonui, Pororua joined issue with Noble, and hence followed the war, which ended by the latter giving up the contest, with considerable loss in killed and wounded.

Pororua was advised to retire, which he did, and resided with his friends at Whangaroa, and for some time it was considered as neutral ground.

Noble, I believe, afterwards received George Grey's sanction to return to Oruru for his services during the rebellion, and renewed his claim, which was met by Mr. White paying him the sum of £100 and a section of land of 100 acres, upon which he now resides.

This being done, the land was thrown open for sale by the Government, and the sum of between three and four thousand pounds (£3,000 and £4,000) realized.

To a portion of the land thus sold, Pororua continued to urge his claim, and a young chief named Tipene, connected with Noble's party. Both these parties have since visited Auckland, and their claims have been submitted for consideration, through Tamati Waka.

His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government promised that they should meet with every attention.

Mr. White, the Resident Magistrate at Mangonui, is most anxious that these claims should be speedily and finally settled, and the natives are equally anxious for an amicable settlement. After a careful hearing of the two claims, their demands (being much reduced from what they originally were) were left standing thus:—To Pororua, representing the powerful Ngapuhi Tribes, two hundred pounds (£200) in cash, or one hundred and fifty pounds (£150) and a section of land of one hundred acres. To Tipene, representing Moetara, Busby, and other northern tribes, £150: total, £350, cash.

The occupation by Pororua of a section of land in the Oruru, would be to bring two opposing chiefs into collision, which, for the sake of the district and of the settlers, it would be very desirable indeed to avoid. If you concur in this view of the case, the payment of the money would, I think, be by far the most satisfactory means of removing the present serious difficulties, and setting the question at rest.

Enclosed is a copy of a letter which has already been forwarded by Mr. White, and shows how important it is that no time should be lost in meeting the claims of these natives.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

The Principal Commissioner,
Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Reporting Difficulties arising out of the Non-Settlement of Claims to Oruru. Resident Magistrate's Court, Mangonui, 25th June, 1856.

SIR,—

I have the honor to call your attention to the very serious difficulties the settlers and resident natives at Oruru are subject to, in consequence of no steps having been taken to extinguish the claims of certain natives acknowledged by the District Commissioner, Mr. Johnson. When Mr. Kemp visited this district, he informed me that certain promises had been made to Tipene, by which his claim was computed at one hundred pounds; Pororua's is one hundred and fifty pounds, and Rarawa fifty pounds.

Tipene is constantly at variance with the people at Oruru, and is making vigorous efforts to return to settle there. Pororua the same. Between the two, the settlers are kept in a constant state of excitement, and a sense of insecurity very much cripples their enterprise. Moreover, a portion of Mr. Campbell's land has been occupied, but I cannot interfere in consequence of the unsettled question of payment.

May I request you will take the earliest opportunity of setting this question at rest, as it causes many disputes. One has lately occurred which the natives are apprehensive will lead to serious difficulties.

Forwarding Mr. Commissioner Johnson's Report on Oruru. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 31st July, 1856.
SIR,—

I have the honor to transmit for your information and guidance a copy of Mr. Johnson's report on the claims adduced by the Ngapuhi and Rarawa Tribes to the Oruru Valley.

I think it is necessary that you should be furnished with a copy of this report, as the Resident Magistrate (Mr. White,) informs me that the settlers at Oruru may be subject to annoyance from Pororua, Tipene, and other claimants, if this question is not speedily settled; and I am now bringing under the notice of His Excellency the propriety of your proceeding to Mangonui to effect a final adjustment of these claims.

In the meantime, and pending His Excellency's authority for undertaking this duty, I shall feel obliged by your fully acquainting yourself with the merits of this case, in order that you may guard against any future claims being adduced to this debateable territory, beyond those stated in the enclosures herewith.

I have, &c.,

DONALD MCLEAN, Chief Commissioner.

H. T. Kemp, Esq.,
District Commissioner, Bay of Islands.

No. 8. The CHIEF COMMISSIONER to Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP.

To Settle Native Claims. Chief Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 29th August; 1856.
Sir,—

I have the honor, by direction of the Governor, to inform you that His Excellency has been pleased to authorize the expenditure of a sum not exceeding three hundred pounds (£300) in the settlement of the outstanding claims to the Oruru Valley at Mangonui, and I have to request that you will take immediate steps for the final extinction of these claims.

A warrant has been issued authorizing the Sub-Treasurer at Russell to pay the sum of three hundred pounds (£300) to you, upon your requisition in the usual form. You will, however, be good enough to abstain from withdrawing this sum from the Sub-Treasury, until the natives are prepared to receive it in full settlement of all claims, and to execute a document securing the Government from all future claims on the part of either of the tribes who are interested in the land.

You will have to account for this money to the Sub-Treasurer within one month from the date of drawing the advance by furnishing him with attested copies of the Native Deeds, and of this letter of authority.

This sum of three hundred pounds (£300) is the amount recommended by Mr. Johnson in his report of the 23rd February, 1855, and sanctioned by the Colonial Secretary's letter of the 7th of April following; but I perceive from your letter of the 12th of April last, that either a sum of three hundred and fifty pounds (£350) will now be necessary, or that a grant of One hundred (100) acres of land will have to be made to Pororua. I trust, however, that you will use your best exertions to effect the final settlement for the sum now sanctioned, and that you will use your utmost endeavour to avoid giving Pororua the land grant of one hundred (100) acres, as his retention of any land in the Oruru will, I apprehend, give rise to disputes with the Rarawa, which, in the final settlement now to be effected, should be carefully avoided. I conceive it would be more advisable even to, give an additional fifty pounds (£50) to Pororua, if you cannot settle it otherwise, than to make him a grant of land that may be a fruitful source of discord hereafter. In the event of your having occasion to pay fifty pounds (£50) beyond the sum now authorized, this amount may be disbursed out of the balance of One hundred and one pounds thirteen shillings and five pence (£101 13s. 5d.) you have in your possession; and, should it be impossible to effect a settlement without the one hundred (100) acres of land, you must have a conveyance from all the Natives concerned, giving up their entire interest and claims to the one hundred (100) acres in question in favour of Pororua.

I have no doubt Mr. White will aid you in carrying out the necessary arrangements with the Natives.

I have, &c.,

Requesting a further sum of Money on account of Oruru Claims. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 7th September, 1856.
SIR,—

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 29th inst., in reference to the settlement of the Oruru claims.

It is not, I think, improbable that, owing to the decease of the chief Noble (whose assistance was very beneficial to the Government) subsequently to the arrangements reported in my communication of the 12th, April last, the position of this long-vexed question may in some measure become altered.

In anticipation of this, I propose to invite Tamati Waka to accompany me, if he conveniently can; and as he has considerable influence with Pororua's party, his services would be very acceptable, and be approved by His Excellency the Governor.

As you so fully concur with Mr. White and myself in withholding, if possible, the grant of any land in the Valley to Pororua, I would respectfully urge the propriety of having placed at my disposal, and without delay, an additional sum of Two hundred pounds (£200) to meet any new difficulties that may arise; and as by your instructions the sum of Three hundred pounds (£300) already advanced, is not to be withdrawn from the Sub-Treasury until the Natives have, in the first instance, signed over their claims, I shall proceed at once to the District to complete these arrangements if I can; and in the meantime I trust that a further sum of Two hundred pounds (£200) will be made available at the Sub-Treasury, in the event of its being required or any part thereof. You will no doubt see the policy of this arrangement when I add in explanation that the planting season has already begun, and the difficulties that generally follow, when the Natives obtain a firm footing on the land; Hitherto, Tipene's party have abstained from cultivating at Noble's request, and I am in great hopes of still finding it an open question, and if so, of bringing it to a conclusion, without much additional trouble and expense.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

Reporting Final Settlement of all Claims to Oruru. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 29th September, 1856.

SIR,—

I have much pleasure in reporting for the information of His Excellency the Governor, that the outstanding claims to the Valley of Oruru have been finally and amicably disposed of, and, as I have every reason to believe, to the satisfaction of the whole of the Natives concerned.

- On receipt of the instructions which accompanied the sum of Three hundred pounds (£300) forwarded through the Sub-treasurer at Russell, I lost no time in proceeding to Mangonui and Oruru, where, having assembled the different claimants, they finally agreed, after a series of well-conducted discussions, to receive the sum of Three hundred and fifty pounds (£350) in full compensation for their claims to the Valley.
- Pororua, who is a chief of considerable importance, and a lineal descendant of Hongi Hika, for several days insisted upon having a section of one hundred acres granted (100 acres) to him upon the same terms with Noble, the late chief of the Earawa tribes; and as he had already commenced to cultivate, it seemed to be for some time doubtful whether he would consent to receive a money compensation, although an additional sum of Fifty pounds (£50), authorized in the fourth paragraph of the instructions, was tendered to him. He; however, finally accepted the sum of Two hundred pounds (£200), the amount allotted to him, as a full compensation for his claims; and his immediate followers, who occupy but a small plantation (about an acre and a half) are under a written agreement to leave the ground so soon as they have removed their crops.
- Two small reserves of about a quarter of an acre each, at the entrance to the Oruru River, have been set apart for the use of the Natives generally, near to the public road, as a convenience to travellers, and where they might also haul up their canoes while upon their trading excursions.
These reserves will be laid and mapped off by Mr White, who has also undertaken the survey of the external boundaries of the block, so soon as, the young chiefs deputed to accompany him have finished putting in their crops.
- There were present at this meeting several influential chiefs from the north, with Busby, the successor of the late Noble Panakoreao. He. is a man of good standing, a friend to the Europeans, and his influence extends over a large body of Natives in the north. He. has suggested that the section of 100 acres granted by the Government to Noble, and now occupied by his widow and her attendants, should be purchased; if a favourable opportunity presented itself, with a view to the Valley of Oruru being left entirely to the Europeans, who may thereby be induced to settle in larger numbers.

Of Mr White's assistance, most kindly given, I was glad to avail myself. By his previous acquaintance with the details and bearings of these claims, a vexatious and troublesome, question has at length been finally and amicably settled.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Certain Hokianga Chiefs prefer Claims to Oruru. Land Commissioner's Office, 11th December, 1856.
SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that certain Hokianga chiefs, names as per margin, Wiremu Tana Papahia, Tomairangi, Ngarewa, Te Karu, Marupo. have come, to Auckland to request a further payment for Oruru.

They have been informed that the whole amount the Government intends to pay for that land has been transmitted to you and paid to the Native owners.

It appears that Tipene is at fault in not having paid Rangatira Moetara his share of the Fifty pounds (£650) he received for the purpose.

- They offer to sell the Maungataniwha. District, and you will be good enough to report if they are the real claimants; whether it would be a desirable purchase; and ascertain the extent of the land, and the terms on which it can be purchased.
  - They advance a claim to land purchased by the Rev. Mr. Matthews, and you will also report what the nature of their claims to that land is, and whether that question can be easily adjusted by you.
- They wish to exclude a piece of land called Pararaki from the sale to Mr; Matthews.

DONALD MCLEAN, Chief Commissioner.

Reporting on Blocks near the North Cape. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 10th June, 1857.
SIR,—

In my communication dated the 20th April, No. 14, 1857, I had the honor of informing you of a journey I propose to undertake for the purpose of examining and entering into negotiations with the natives for certain blocks of land near Parengarenga (North Cape). I have now the pleasure to report my return from that expedition, and to state, for the information of His Excellency the Governor, the progress made towards the extinguishment of the native title over a considerable portion of available country within that district. In these arrangements I was favoured with the advice and assistance of Mr. White, who accompanied me throughout.

- Enclosed I forward a rough sketch of the blocks we are in treaty for, as well as of those which have been already alienated by the natives, showing, as nearly as possible, their connection with each other.

At a rough estimate these cannot, I, think, in the whole be far short of forty thousand acres (40,000), thirty thousand (30,000) of which are included in the land now offered to the Government. They stand thus:—

No. 1.—Muriwhenua (South): A rough estimate, about 25,000 acres.

No. 2.—Wharemaru: A rough estimate, about 3,000 acres.

No. 3.—Otengi (sketch not given): A small block adjoining the Oruru purchase, about 2,000 acres.

- The boundaries of these blocks have already been carefully traversed, and were pointed out to us by the leading chiefs of the district, including Busby, Walker, King, Bobart, Clarke, and others, who are the principal sellers of the land. The negotiations have been conducted in the most public manner, and every facility given to claimants or other interested persons to appear.
- The land comprised within these blocks is open and undulating; on the western shore a ridge of sand-hills prevails, but on the eastern side soil of a good description. The beautiful harbour of Houhora, or Mount Campbell, nearly central, affords easy communication, and makes it at all times accessible. The land in its present state is well adapted for sheep farming.
- Adjacent to these blocks are two smaller ones near Ahipara and Rangiawhia: from the former a supply of useful timber can be obtained. The arrangements, however, for the purchase have been postponed at the instance of the native chiefs.

To these may be added also a portion, if not the whole of the Victoria Valley, which may in all probability be negotiated for in a few months, and forming altogether a valuable acquisition to the Crown lands in this district.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

The Chief Commissioner,
Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Recommending Purchase of Noble's Reserve. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, June 12th, 1857.
SIR,—

During my recent visit to the North, I observed a difficulty in which the settlers as well as the natives residing in the Oruru Valley are placed with reference to the occupation of a reserve which was made by the late chief Noble Panakareao, with the sanction of the Government, and, for which a Crown grant had, I believe, been given previously to the first settlement of the outstanding native claims in that district.

Allusion to this reserve is made in my report of the Oruru, dated 29th September, 1856.

2. The case seems to be simply this:—Noble leaves an infant daughter, his legal representative. There are also the immediate followers and servants of Noble who still reside and cultivate upon this reserve. They have been urged to move to their respective locations by the Government and by the chiefs, and it was agreed that they should have done so some time ago.

It is understood, however, that some of the settlers, whose interest it is to keep these people at Orurn, have since advised them to remain where they are, and the consequence is that the natives are in doubt as to which course it would be right for them to adopt.

Mr White, the officer of the district, has requested me to make a statement of the circumstances for the information of the Government; and, as the majority of the settlers are unwilling that any annoyance should arise between them and the natives, I would respectfully recommend for consideration that this reserve be purchased, if possible, from the native trustees; and the money invested in some more suitable manner for the benefit of Noble's child, if it were thought desirable by the chiefs interested. If this suggestion is approved, Mr

White could soon supply a plan of the reserve, and furnish any further details you might wish for.

The section itself, being an extremely valuable one, would be very soon purchased, and the Government would be at once reimbursed in the outlay that may be necessary for the extinguishment of the native title.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

The Chief Commissioner,
Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Respecting the Prices fixed for Blocks near the North Cape. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 7th December, 1857.

SIR,—

Agreeably with the instructions contained in your letter No. 216, 26th September, 1857, authorizing me to carry out the negotiations for certain Blocks of land in the northern part of this district on the most economical terms, I have the honor to, report for the information of His Excellency's Government that the following sums of money have been fixed upon in payment for the several blocks alluded to, viz.:—

Total acreage—One hundred and five thousand six hundred and forty-four acres (105,644)

Total amount required—One thousand seven hundred and thirty pounds sterling (£1,730).

The plan, which is to be forwarded by first safe conveyance direct from Mangonui, will show the purchase in its compact form, and, from its position and other advantages, will make it, I trust, a valuable addition to the Crown lands of the district. All the proceedings connected with the fixing of these sums have been carried out in the most public manner, on the spot, in which I enjoyed the benefit of Mr. White's advice and assistance, who travelled with me; and, while the sums named are as economical as they could be expected, we both have every reason for believing that, if approved by His Excellency, they will give satisfaction to the whole of the native sellers, and help to pave the way for future negotiations.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

To conclude Purchase of. Blocks near the North Cape. Chief Land Purchase Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 21st December, 1857.

SIB,—

With reference to your letters (Nos. 57, 32) of the 7th instant, stating that the following sums have been fixed upon in payment for the several blocks the negotiations for which you were authorised to carry out in my letter of September 26th last, viz.—

— I have the honor, by direction of His Excellency the Governor, to request that you will be good enough to conclude these purchases at the above-named rates, for which purpose the sum of One thousand seven hundred and thirty pounds sterling (£1,730) will be transmitted to the Sub-Treasurer at Russell, to be handed over to you upon your requisition in the usual form.

You will use the greatest care in making the deeds and translations as perfect as possible, and endeavour to render the arrangements final and complete. It having been observed that certain passages in the deeds transmitted, by you to this office are vague, and therefore objectionable, I have to request that you will adhere as closely as circumstances will permit to the form of deed used by the other Commissioners, which have proved to be intelligible to, and binding upon the natives.

A desire having been expressed by the natives to sell other and more valuable lands for immediate occupation than those in the northern extremity of your district, you will be good enough to direct your attention to the acquisition of those lands which are more immediately required for settlement, without overlooking the offers of such larger and less valuable blocks that may be offered; but in every instance you should give prior consideration to such blocks as the Kawa Kawa, and others in that vicinity, which I understand the natives are anxious to dispose of.

I have, &c.,

D. McLEAN, Chief Commissioner.

H. T. Kemp, Esq.,
Bay of Islands.

Reporting Completion of Purchase of Blocks near the North Cape. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 9th February, 1858.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report for the information of His Excellency the Governor, that the payment for the several blocks of land in the neighbourhood of Mangonui known as—

- Muriwhenua South;
- Wharemaru;
- Otengi;

was completed on the 3rd and 4th instant.

Copies of translations from the original deeds, describing the boundaries are herewith forwarded, prepared for proclamation, in accordance with your Circular of the 18th December, 1857.

The plans of survey, carefully executed by the Messrs. Campbell, having already been transmitted to you "by Mr. White, I shall feel obliged (if not already submitted for His Excellency's inspection) by your allowing them to accompany the descriptions of the boundaries herein inclosed.

Recommending Purchase of these Blocks. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 22nd September, 1858.

SIR,—

I have the honor to forward, for the information of His Excellency's Government, the enclosed copy of a letter from Mr. White in reference to the acquisition of two blocks of land which are immediately in the District of Mangonui. The negotiations for these blocks were entered upon agreeably with the instructions given in your letter of the 28th October, 1857, urging the acquisition of land in the neighbourhood of Mangonui, when available for colonization.

Mr. White now states that the natives have fallen in with our views with regard to the boundaries, the object having been to buy up the whole of the available land between the Oruru and Victoria Plains, and by this means' to connect the blocks as soon as possible. Having explored the country at the head of the Oruru Valley, I am able to report that a junction with the Victoria could be made with but little difficulty, thereby bringing the whole of that: fertile district into connection with the Port of Mangonui; and on the grounds also submitted in Mr. White's letter, would respectfully recommend the purchase for the approval of his Excellency the Governor.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

The Chief Commissioner,
Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Enclosure.Mr. WHITE to the DISTRICT COMMISSIONER.

Mangonui, September 7th, 1858.

SIR,—

The natives having consented to meet our views relative to the boundaries of Kohumaru Block and the Wai Kainga or Maunga Taniwha Block, which adjoins the Kohumaru, both of which overlap the Oruru Block surveyed by me, being most desirable purchases, I beg herewith to report them as ready for survey, and would recommend that the work be commenced as soon as possible, as the payments for these blocks will hasten, the acquisition of the Victoria Valley, about which there has been much discussion of late; and, as you are aware, these lands will be a valuable acquisition, not only on account of the good soil, but fine timber. May I request your early attention to this communication?

I have, &c.,

As, to the naming of Blocks of Land. Chief Land Purchase Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 12th October, 1858.

'SIR,—

Adverting to your letter of the 22nd ult., enclosing a communication from Mr. W. B. White, and recommending the purchase of two blocks of land named, Kohumaru and Maungataniwha, which you state were negotiated for in accordance with my instructions of the 28th October last, I have the honor to make the following observations thereupon:—

1st. The letter referred to by you was based upon an offer made by Heremia Te Ara to dispose of a Block named Matawherohia.

2nd. You were requested on the 22nd January last to carry on negotiations for the purchase of the Matawherohia Block, and to report the probable cost and area thereof.

3rd. In your letter of the 22nd ult you speak of the two Blocks Kohumaru and Maungataniwha under names which have not been previously used, stating at the same time that these blocks were referred to in my communication of the 28th October last

It is obvious, therefore, either that Kohumaru and Maungataniwha must be other names for one and the same block, previously known as Matawherohia, or that one block has been confounded with another.

To prevent the recurrence of any mistakes in future, you will be good enough in reporting a block in any stage of its acquisition:

To give, on the first mention thereof, the principal name by which the block is known, and strictly to adhere to such name in all after communications.

2nd. To refer to former letters, if any, on same subject, giving the number and date thereof; and in acknowledging receipt of letters sent hence, to adhere to the same rule—all communications issued from this office being numbered on the first page..

It will readily occur to you, from the above observations, how liable any person unacquainted with the localities is to fall into unavoidable mistakes, being misled by names which are entirely new to him. If these blocks should be identical with that hitherto known as Matawherohia, you are already in possession of the necessary authority for having the external boundaries surveyed, which service may be performed by the surveyor attached to your district.

I have, &c.,

DONALD MCLEAN, Chief Commissioner.

H. T. Kemp, Esq., J.P.,
District Commissioner, Bay of Islands.

Reporting Prices Fixed. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 18th January, 1859.

SIR,—

I do myself the honor to report, for the information of His Excellency the Governor, the result of negotiations for land within the district of Mangonui, from whence I have recently returned.

Kindly assisted by Mr White, our attention was principally given to fixing the prices for the three following blocks of land, which had already been examined by us, viz.:—

- No. 1. Kohumaru Block, estimated to contain about ten thousand-acres (10,000), for which we offered the sum of three hundred and fifty pounds (£350), but which, for the present, has been declined by the natives.
- No. 2. The Puheke Block, estimated to contain about eight, thousand acres (8,000 acres), for which the sum of three hundred pounds (£300) has been fixed.
- No. 3. Keihana's, or the Upper Aurere Block, estimated to contain about five thousand (5,000 acres), for which the sum of two hundred and twenty pounds (£220) has been fixed.

The above-mentioned blocks are all within a short distance of the harbour and township of Mangonui. The 1st, or Kohumaru Block, is easily accessible by water, and although the surface is very broken, there is much of the land that is desirable, with a plentiful supply of timber, including some very fine kauri.

Nos. 2 and 3 join each other, and are open undulating land, with a great part flat. They form a part of Doubtless Bay, and are an extension of the Mangonui Country District. The soil is light and poor, and fitted principally for grazing.

These purchases, if completed, will connect a long line of country North of; Mangonui, over which the native title will have been extinguished.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP.

The Chief Commissioner,
Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Relative to Purchase of Noble's Reserve in the Orunt, Block. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 1st August, 1859.

SIR,—

I have the honor to, acknowledge receipt of your communication, bearing date 12th June, in Which you recommend the purchase by the Government of the native reserve in the Oruru Valley granted; to the late chief Nopera Panakareao.

In reference thereto I have the honor to inform you that His Excellency is not at present prepared to authorize the proposed purchase, but defers giving a final answer until further information shall enable him to form an opinion as to the expediency of the course recommended by you.

I have therefore to request that you will state more particularly your reasons for recommending the alienation of this reserve by the family of the late chief Noble: also to express the opinion of the Government that ample provision ought to be made in landed property to be secured to his heirs, and that it is not apparent why the Oruru is an unfit or undesirable locality for the purpose.

The annoyance caused to the European settlers through the irregular occupation of the reserve by Noble's followers might possibly be removed by leasing it for a term of years. Upon the expediency or otherwise of such an arrangement you will have the goodness to report.

SIR,

I have the honor to inform you that I Have this day agreed with the Native owners relative to the price of the Hikurangi Block, the survey of which I forwarded some days since.

They have consented to take Two. Hundred and fifty pounds (£250) for the Block. The expenses, -for entertainment of Natives and 'travelling expenses will not exceed Ten pounds (£10). I would urge that the money be paid as soon as possible, the Natives being very sickly, and the money would be the means of providing them with food of a nourishing nature, of which they stand much in need.

Mr. Kemp being perhaps in Auckland will facilitate the arrangements relative to the purchases of this Block

SIR,—

A letter addressed to His Excellency the Governor, from a chief named Ruhe, has been received at this office in reference to certain claims at Oruru,; but there is no means of 'ascertaining, except through you, whether the land is comprised within the claims recently settled by you, or whether it is a new piece of land.

If the, land is situated within the purchase already settled, no fresh claim can be admitted, but if it is land which he wishes to sell outside the Oruru Block, his best course is to confer with you on the subject.

I have written to him accordingly, and transmit the letter through you for your information and report

Reporting Completion of the Purchase of Hilairaiigi Block. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 14th April, 1861.
SIR,—

I do myself the honor to report for the information of His Excellency the Governor, that I recently proceeded to the Districts of Mangonui and Whangaroa, carrying with me the sum of two hundred and fifty pounds (£250), the amount agreed upon for the purchase of the Hikurangi Block, which was duly paid to the native claimants, in the presence of the Resident Magistrate and other officers of the Government. During my stay at Mangonui I accompanied Mr. White to Whangaroa, for the purpose of holding a Circuit Court. I availed myself of this opportunity to hold a final meeting of the principal chiefs concerned in the sale of a considerable block, of land at the head of the Whangaroa Harbour, estimated to contain from thirty to thirty-five thousand acres (30 to 35,000-acres). For the block. I have been some time in treaty. Apart from its other advantages, its acquisition would be very desirable as connecting the whole of the public lands between the Bay of Islands and Mangonui, and is the only intervening block over which the native title has not been extinguished. Owing to the death of the principal chief, Ururoa, of the district, our arrangements have been interrupted, and the purchase will in consequence be delayed for some time. I proposed to the chiefs, as a safe way of ascertaining all claims, that they should with their own people first cut the lines (for which some allowance should be made at the time of offering the payment); and that the Government would undertake to furnish, a surveyor. They promised to give a reply on a reconsideration of the proposal there made. During the holding of the Court, the state of the country and other political, subjects, were freely discussed by the chiefs; and in reply to many questions put by them, Mr. White and myself furnished them with such information as we were able, and thought suitable under the circumstances

Negotiations for Block near the North Gape postponed. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 17th April, 1861.

SIR,—

In continuation of my report of the 14th instant, I have the honor to report, for the information of His Excellency, that the remainder of the block of land near the North Cape, which has been under negotiation, has been withdrawn for the present in consequence of a disagreement between the native claimants; The terms proposed to them were these: That, if they required a Reserve for their own use, the Government would have it surveyed for, them, and then to offer them a lump sum for the block. The necessity for an outline survey of the whole block being in this instance dispensed with, from the fact of its being clearly defined by natural lines, as well as by other surveys already made at the Government expense. This, claim, although of considerable extent is inferior in quality and not required at the present, time for settlers. Should the natives agree to our terms, I think it may be purchased for a reasonable sum.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP,
District Commissioner.

The Chief Commissioner, Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Respecting Land offered for sale by Hone Heke. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 3rd February, 1863.

SIR,—

Referring to a letter addressed by the Hone Heke to the Government, relative to the sale of a block of land near the Pupuke, in the district of Whangaroa, and to my report thereon, I have the honor to state, for the information of the Honorable the Minister for Native Affairs, that as this is the only extensive block between the Government lands already purchased within the district of the Bay of Islands and Mangonui, over which the native title has not been extinguished, it has been arranged, after a prolonged negotiation, to offer the sum of one shilling and three-pence per acre, which was finally agreed to by the principal chiefs, Hare Hongi, Paora Ururoa, and others. The survey of the block will be entered upon without delay, and shall be reported as soon as finished.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP, District
Commissioner.

Whangaroa, Pupvke, Block under Survey, District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 2nd April; 1863.
SIR,—

I have the honor, to report that the survey of the Pupuke Block in the District of Whangaroa, is being conducted by Mr. Richardson, and the survey of the suburban lots in the town of Kororareka by Mr. Fairburn; the natives in both cases having amicably arranged their boundary lines. The natives on the Hokianga side also propose to carry on the Whangaroa survey, so as to include the lands between the Maungataniwha and the head of the Mangamuka, if they can agree among themselves.

I have, &c.,

HENRY T. KEMP.

The Chief Commissioner, Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Transmitting Plan of Pupuke Block. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 8th July, 1863.
SIR,—

I have the honor to report for the information of the Government, that the plan of the Pupuke Block having been completed, I have requested the Surveyor to forward it direct to Auckland, by the schooner Kiwi, the quantity being computed at nineteen thousand and three acres (19,003 acres) of bush and open lands. Of its position, connection with other blocks over which the native title has been extinguished, and other capabilities, the particulars may be gathered from the notes made by the Surveyor on the plan at my suggestion, and will as nearly as possible supply the Government with all the information they will, I think, desire to have.

Chief Sub-divisions marked on Plan.

Adopting the course that has recently been taken at the instance of the native claimants, the principal sub-divisions have been made and laid down on the map, under which they will receive their several shares of the payment, a further and more detailed distribution being afterwards made, according to their own customs, and with reference to the peculiar nature of each individual claim.

The plan has been submitted to Tamati Waaka for his inspection, as the back or interior lines of the block join the claims of the Hokianga natives. Before the survey was made, the tribe, of which Tamati is the principal chief, had occupied the banks of the Maungakino, and Te Rototi streams, and have been for some time engaged in felling kauri spars. I have, on behalf of the Government, stated to Tamati Waaka that there would be no objection to his retaining possession of the timber which he had already contracted to supply, as well as to avoid any difficulty as to the precise boundary between the two tribes—a point upon which there has been some little dispute, but which Tamati Waaka has taken great pains to assist me in adjusting. I beg leave to recommend that this arrangement may be approved and confirmed by the Government.

I have already reported that the price to be paid for the block was fixed, prior to survey, at the rate of One shilling and threepence an acre (1s. 3d. per acre); but in order to secure an available outlet or landing-place on the Whangaroa Harbour, I have engaged to pay the Chief Ruinga at the rate of Two shillings and sixpence for 589 acres (2s. 6d. per acre), for part of which he had been promised at the rate of Twenty shillings (20s.) by private hand, so soon as direct purchases were allowed.

I beg to enclose Mr Richardson's bill for the survey. As we proceeded with the lines the work was unavoidably delayed by the natives, which he has charged for. I have attached a certificate to that effect, and shall feel obliged by your having the amount paid to him as soon as convenient.

A requisition for the entire purchase money shall be forwarded as soon as arrangements have been made with the natives as to the most suitable place and time for payment.

I have, &c., H T. KEMP,

District Commissioner,

The Chief Commissioner, Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Whangaroa (Pupuke Block) 19,003 acres Land Purchase Department, Bay of Islands, 5th November 1868.
SIR,—

I have the honor to report for the information of the Government, that the sum named in the margin was paid to the natives' for the Pupuke Block, in the District of Whangaroa, and the deed signed on the 8th ultimo' ah instalment of eighty pounds (£80) having been paid to Tamati Waaka and his brother, Turau, on the 30 th ultimo.

With reference to the removal of the kauri timber from within the block, on the Hokianga side to which an allusion is made in your letter transmitting the money, I am requested by Tamati Waaka to say, that, having received a fair share of the payment, any further claim to the timber in question, ceases on his own part and that of his people. The original deed is herewith enclosed, for which, please forward a receipt.

I have further to report that, soon after the payment was made, an offer of the remainder of this block was brought under discussion; of about the same extent, with more available land and valuable kauri timber, commanding the entire head, of the Whangaroa harbour, through which, also, the proposed new line of road will pass. Without evincing any undue desire to purchase I have entered so far upon negotiations, as to leave but little doubt of its acquisition within a reasonable time, and thus form together a suitable and, I think, a desirable site for a settlement.

I have, &c.

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

The Chief Commissioner,
Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Purchase of the Toatoa Block. Civil Commissioner's Office, Mangonui, September 30th, 1864.
SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that I have made arrangements with the native owners of a block of land, bounded by the Maungataniwha west, Hikurangi and Otengi Blocks and the Parapara River, and called Toatoa, that it should be surveyed; and I have directed Mr. S. Campbell to perform that duty. It is to be divided into two blocks.

The northern part is to be sold by Henry Kemp and others; the southern part by Matthew Tauhara, Wiremu Pikahu, and others.

I have also purchased a small block of forty-four acres adjoining the Maungataniwha West Block, close to the Victoria Valley, it having been cut off by a road which I have had opened into the valley. For this I have paid the owners Five pounds ten shillings (£5 10s.). I considered it advisable to close this purchase at the request of a large number of natives.

I have taken a receipt for the money, and they will sign the proper transfer on your arrival here.

I have been applied to very frequently by the native owners of Poneke, Mangatete, as to when the purchase of that block is to be settled for. I have not received the survey, but I have lately written to the Government to forward me forms of deeds for Poneke and Tipene's Reserve, Waimutu, at Taipa, which I have recommended should be purchased.

I am anxious that you should come to this district as soon as you can, not only that you may conclude these purchases, but I am of opinion that the natives will sell portions of Victoria when these lands are paid for; and I am also desirous of introducing The Native Land Act, 1862.

I have, &c., W. B. WHITE, Civil Commissioner

H. T. Kemp, Esq, Land Purchase Commissioner, Keri-keri.

Purchase of Poneke Block. Land Purchase Department, Bay of Islands, 13th January, 1865,
SIR,—

In reply to your letter of the 24th instant, I have the honor to report for the information of the Hon. W. Mantell that the purchase of the Poneke Block, in the District of Mangonui, of three hundred and forty-five (345) acres has been completed for the sum of Forty-three pounds two-shillings, and sixpence (£43 2s. 6d.), the deed of which shall be forwarded by an early opportunity.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

The Native Secretary, Auckland.

Poneke, 345 acres, £48 2s. 6d; Waimutu, 79 acres, £29 10s.; Taunoke, 44 acres, £5 10s.— Total, £88 2s. 6d.
Land Purchase Department, Bay of Islands, 18th January, 1865.
SIR,—

I have the honor to forward herewith three deeds named in the margin for small blocks in the District of Mangonui which have been purchased at the request of the Natives, and, as they joined other Government blocks, Mr. White and myself agreed to make the purchase for the sums named, which we hope will meet with the approval of the Hon. the Native Minister.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP, District
Commissioner.

The Native Secretary, Auckland.

Toatoa Block Purchased. Civil Commissioner's Office, Mangonui, 24th February, 1865.
SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that the plans and deeds are completed for the purchase of the Toatoa Block, divided into three blocks of 843, 534, and 2,486 acres, which at 2s per acre will amount to Three hundred and eighty-six pounds six shillings sterling.

The hundred pounds which you forwarded to me is still available for this purchase. As the natives are very-impatient to be paid, I should be glad if you could make it convenient to bring the money with you when you come up.

The Runanga will meet on the 28th March next.

Kaiaka Block Surveyed.

I have further to inform you that the Kaiaka'Block of land, situate between the Mangatete Block and Victoria River, has been surveyed, but is not yet mapped. It is larger than the Toatoa, and being superior land, the natives for a long time declined to take less than five shillings per acre; but I have now reduced the price to three shillings per acre, which they have agreed to take.—8,000 acres.

I should be glad if you will obtain sufficient money to complete this purchase also, on your arrival here.

I have, &c., W. B. WHITE, Civil
Commissioner.

H. T. Kemp, Esq., District Commissioner, Keri Keri.

Lieut.-Colonel ST. JOHN to Lieut.-Colonel McDONNELL.

Takehue Block to be jturcha sed. Native Office (Land Purchase Branch), Wellington, 30th October, 1873.
SIR,—

In reference to your letter of the 27th September ultimo, on the subject of the Takehue- Block, Victoria Valley, I have the honor, by direction, to inform you that His Honor the Superinten dent of Auckland has signified his approval of the acquisition of this block on the terms which you mention as likely to be accepted by the native owners, viz., 3s. per acre.

I am therefore directed to request that you will, without delay, enter into negotiations for the purchase of the block in question, taking at the same time the utmost care as to what natives you deal with and how you deal with them, so as to make certain of securing to the Crown a safe title. In mentioning the rate of 3s. per acre; it is to be understood that this is to be the maximum pricei, and your endeavours should be directed to reduce it if possible. I have also to recommend you to obtain information from every available source, so as to obviate any future complication.

I append for your, guidance, a copy of an extract from instructions issued to you in November, 1871, by the Hon. Mr. McLean, which will apply to the present case.

I have, &c., J. H. H. ST. JOHN.

Lieut-Colonel McDonnell, Auckland.

Enclosure.

IN purchases of this nature it is of the utmost importance that careful inquiry should be made among the native owners as to the prospects of completing the transaction without incurring the chance of any future trouble or disagreement.

You will, therefore, have to pay-special attention to this, as the Government do not desire to acquire any land from the natives, however valuable it may be, if the acquisition is attended with any risk of disturbance, or revival of feuds among themselves.

You will proceed to examine this block and report fully upon its capabilities, whether for grass or cornland, for timber, water, and any other points which it is desirable to be fully aware of.

You will also have the goodness to furnish the Under Secretary, Native Office, with a rough sketch, of it, as accurate as the circumstances will allow you to make, giving its proper boundaries; and in enumerating the latter, you will be very careful to ascertain that no mistake can in future occur between the proposed sellers and the Government, but that a clear definition is given of the area, with its limits.

You will also give me a clear idea as to what reserves it will be necessary to make for the natives in the case of these, discriminating most carefully their acreage. I have to request that you will lose no time in acquiring the information and forwarding a report of it to the Government.

Should anything in the transactions occur affecting the natives, I have to request that you will forward to me a report.

DONALD MCLEAN.

Native Office (Land Purchase Branch), Wellington, 30th January, 1874.
(Circular.)

It is deemed highly advisable that, whenever, practicable, transactions remaining incomplete for the purchase of native lands should be brought to a close: land purchase officers are therefore requested, before beginning any fresh negotiations, to use their energies to conclude those on which they have already entered.

It is however left to their discretion how far they are to act in the above manner, as no advantageous offer should be lost; but generally they are instructed to devote their exertions to bringing to a complete end the arrangements for the purchase or lease of native lands which they have initiated.

H. T. CLARKE, Under Secretary.

No. 1. THE SURVEYOR GENERAL to the HON. the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Bay of Islands. As to land in the vicinity of the Waitangi falls.

Surveyor General's Office, Auckland.

23rd January, 1847.

SIR,—

With reference to the information called for by his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor relative to the land in the vicinity of the Waitangi Falls, I have the honor to report that there is no data in this office, which enables me to state definitely where the boundaries of the several claimants are situated.

Messrs. Busby and Henry Williams have both received grants of land in the vicinity, but from the form of the grant issued to these and the other land claimants, it is not possible to determine upon any existing documents the boundaries of their several claims.

The boundaries described in the deeds of grant which have been issued to the land claimants, were copied from the commissioner's report; unaccompanied, except in a few instances by an actual survey.

It was intended, I understand, that these deeds of grant should be only of a temporary nature, in order to place the claimants in possession of their land, until time was gained for the preparation of more perfect titles.

For this purpose the claimants were requested to get their boundaries surveyed by licensed surveyors, when it was understood that new deeds would be issued to them. Only two claimants have had their land surveyed according to these instructions, and it does not seem probable that any others will do so within a reasonable time; should this prove to be the case, a difficulty will arise in obtaining the necessary witnesses to the boundaries of the several purchases of land; and it becomes a question whether the Government should at once undertake the surveys to prevent future disputes.

I have, &c.,

CHARLES W. LIGAR, Surveyor General.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

No. 2. Native Meeting at the Bay of Islands.

27th June, 1854. Second Payment for Kororareka demanded. Bay of Islands.
(From our own Correspondent.)

ON the 27th ultimo (June) the usual quietness of Kororareka was strangely varied by the sudden appearance of a gay flotilla of canoes, thronged with some hundreds of half-armed natives, mostly of the late Kawhiii's tribe, who came to demand a second payment for the whole extent of the township: The late purchase from the natives, at Whangarei, of Mr. Busby's claim, by the Government, seems to be the chief precedent on which this preposterous demand is founded, as has been unhesitatingly stated by some of the natives themselves. A general meeting and proper audience were, however, demanded, and Mr. Clendon, the Police, Magistrate, together with Mr. Duncan, the Government Interpreter, and the whole staff of the police (only two) duly met them in the Court House, to hear, and, if possible, adjust their grievances. The nature of the claim will be found in the proceedings of the meeting, which were as follow:—

Te Huhanga (son of Kawhiti).— My father being dead I stand now in his place, and come forward to see Kawhiti's words fulfilled. When my father was alive he came here and asked a question, which question this meeting is now called upon to hear and answer. The question is asked that the remains of Kororareka be either given up, or payment given for it That is all I have to say.

Seven other natives spoke to the same effect.

Mr. Clendon replied as follows:—Eight chiefs have stood up and spoken. All they have said is, that they want payment for Kororareka. Not one of them has given any reason for making that demand. When one makes any claim he should be able to give a just cause why a claim should be complied with. If the present claimants held the land at any former period, how, have they lost possession ? When the whites came hither they found certain natives in possession of Kororareka. These Natives sold the land, and received payment in full, to their own perfect satisfaction. A Governor afterwards came, who appointed Commissioners to investigate all the land claims, and settle all disputes. The Commissioners accordingly settled all questions arising out of every claim submitted to them; but not a single word about the present claim was ever hinted to them,—nay—even to the present moment, although fourteen years have since elapsed; for this is the first time it has been brought forward. If the present claim is just, why was it not submitted to the Commissioners, when all concerned were well aware of their being here, for the very purpose of settling disputes?

Keirangatira.—We knew no better then,—we were foolish.

Mr. Clendon continued:—The Government was pleased with the proceedings of the Commissioners and gave Crown letters, or grants, for the settled claims. The holders of such grants are therefore free from any further payments for the lands so granted. Any after claims must be made, to the Government that issue such grants, and not to the recipients. Most of those who sold and those who purchased the land are now gone, leaving the third and fourth occupiers generally the present holders.

Kairangatira.—We never received any payment for the land.

Mr. Clendon.—But those who sold it received full payment. For how much of the land is payment now claimed ?

Kairangatira.—For all Kororareka.

Mr. Clendon.—Who sold it?

Te Kuhanga.—Pawai, Manganui, and others sold it.?

Mr. Clendon.—How did they come, to sell it, if your claim is just,—if you owned the land ?

Te Kuhanga.—I don't know. I am a young man, and only repeat what I hear from the aged. A war took place, and the land was left by my grandfather that bloodshed might cease; and also in return for the slain.

Mr. Clendon.—When I came here first the land was possessed by Keri' Keri and his tribe. No white man except Jack Poynter was here. Mr. Duke afterwards built, a house, having paid £100 for the ground. Before I went away there was a fight. After the-fight I went away. When I came back I found Titori, Manu, Moka, and Wharerahi in possession of the land. They said the land belonged, to Pomare and others. I bought my land from Pomare; I then went to England, and when I came back I found the whites buying land. Since then there has never been any dispute; and the whites who had purchased the land, received the Queen's letter. They have therefore no more payment to make. Now you have only two people to deal with, the Government and the party who sold the land. Some portion of Kororareka is yet in possession of the Ngapuhi natives, and perhaps you might feel inclined for a compromise, by inducing them to sell it to the Government, and share with you the proceeds. I will send all you say to the Governor, and am only ashamed that you have given me no reason to forward, in company with your demand: If you had explained your reasons, I might possibly have admitted that they were just.

Kairangatira.—It is your own fault.

Mr. Clendon.—How?

Kairangatira—(after along pause).— We persist in demanding payment.

Mr. Clendon.—The occupiers cannot reasonably be expected to pay twice for their lands.

Hoterine then explained the nature of the present claim. It seems that a battle having occurred between Kawhiti (the original possessor) and Manu, Moka, and Wharerahi's tribes, the former, from the persuasion of his friends, to prevent further bloodshed, vacated- Kororareka; and the others, having thus got possession, held, and sold the land. The latter maintain that the place was not vacated merely for the prevention of bloodshed, but was fairly conceded to them as conquerors, in remuneration for those of their tribe who had fallen in battle. The speaker further stated that the Government had given numberless precedents for double payments in the South.

Mr. Duncan explained that these were merely successive instalments of the original amounts agreed to be paid.

Wikiriwhi said that, they only fulfilled the dying words of Kawhiti, in urging the present demand.

Mr. Clendon.—Here is a native who denies your claim, and how can I settle that claim until you settle the question first among yourselves., Arrange that first, and then apply to the, Governor. He is a good man, and will readily pay the utmost attention to all your just demands.

Te Kahanga.—One moment more. I still persist in my claim, and will continue to do so in fulfilment of the dying words of my father. I make no noise or disturbance about my own lands elsewhere.

George King (another chief), said he was sorry to hear that the present police were to be removed. They had given perfect satisfaction to the natives; and, if they were to be replaced by strangers, many troubles, quarrels, and disputes might occur between both races through their inefficiency.

Two other chiefs made similar remarks.

Another chief wished the delinquent natives not to be imprisoned previous to conviction, as, he said, was the custom in Auckland, where he knew of a native to be locked up, for, the night and acquitted next day. He had no, objection to their being imprisoned, and well punished when proved guilty.

Mr. Clendon then thanked the several chiefs for their orderly behaviour during the proceedings; and the meeting dispersed.

After the meeting a kind of ex officio debate was conducted in the open air, when the question of war between the sellers of the land and present claimants was warmly canvassed, but ultimately abandoned for the gorohahly more beneficial project of appealing to the Government, on the Whangarei principle of double payments. In the meantime the claimants intend to address the Officer administering the Government upon the subject; and have postponed their next meeting at Kororareka for two months, that; all parties may have full time to learn the result of their negotiations. What comes next must wholly depend, therefore, on the degree of wisdom with which this ridiculous claim, will be encountered by the heads of the present administration. Some of the claimants go as high as £5,000 in their demand, and threaten immediate occupation, war, &c., with all the bombast of a Gascon; but the large majority are far more moderate in both their demand, and reference to future proceedings—New Zealander.

No. 3.MR COMMISSIONER KEMP to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report for the information of His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government that the purchase of a block of land, estimated, to contain from twelve to eighteen hundred acres, in the Bay of Islands, was finally completed on the 2nd instant, and payment to the amount of One hundred pounds sterling (£100) made to the Native owners, in the presence of Pene Tauī, one of the leading chiefs of this part of the island.

The particulars connected with this purchase are these:—Some time ago two or three of the leading chiefs of the Urikapana tribe visited Auckland, and offered this block to the Government, when they received from the Governor a promise that, so soon as an officer was appointed to the Bay of Islands, the purchase, if a desirable one, should be made. In compliance with His Excellency's promise, I entered upon an early investigation of the ownership of this land, and, after allowing time sufficient for any outstanding claimants to appear, with the assurance also of Tamati Waka and Pene Tauī that the proper claimants had been consulted, I concluded the transaction, and the deed, which is herewith enclosed, with its translation, was duly signed, and the money equally distributed between the parties concerned. A rough sketch of the block is also enclosed for His Excellency's information. The land described in this deed is situate on the shores of the Bay of Islands; is for the most part hilly, but abounds with timber suitable for ship or boat building and for fuel, and is accessible by boats at high water. It is known as the Waitapu and Kaipatiki.

I believe this is the first purchase made by the Government direct from the Natives in this neighbourhood. The price paid is, perhaps, somewhat higher than is usually given by the Government; but, as a preliminary measure, and as an inducement for further and more extensive sales, the sum thus given will not, I think, be considered unreasonable.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.
Donald McLean, Esq., J.P., Principal Commissioner, Auckland.

No. 4. Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Reporting negotiation for Ornowdke Block. District Commissioner's Office, Waimate, Bay of Islands, 18th August, 1855.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report for His Excellency's information that I have been for some time past in treaty for a block of land estimated to contain about seven thousand acres, known by the name of Omawake, an open, undulating country, with a small portion of excellent timber attached to it, but the soil, generally speaking, of an inferior description. Its position, however, and proximity to the harbour of Bussell, (being not more than twenty miles distant in a Westeiiy direction,) point it out as a tract of land which it is desirable should be as soon as possible in the hands of the Government. It is, moreover, unoccupied by the Natives, is the key to the rich country skirting the lake Omapere, and would, if purchased, taken in conjunction with other blocks which have been, or may be hereafter, acquired, form an excellent site for an inland settlement.

After taking considerable pains to ascertain the nature of the several claims to ownership, together with a personal inspection of the land, I decided to offer the Chiefs concerned in the offer of sale the sum of Three hundred pounds, (£300) which, however, has been for the present declined.

I think, perhaps, that it would be unwise to press the matter, and that the negotiations may be suspended for a little time longer with advantage to all parties; and, should the Chiefs not accede to these terms, an additional hundred might be offered, if the Government would sanction my doing so.

The sum asked for by the Natives at present is Two thousand pounds (£2000).

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.
Donald McLean, Esq., Principal Commisoner, Auckland.

No. 5.Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP to the CHIEF LAND COMMISSIONER.

Purchase of Parangiora and Wiroa Block. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 29th August, 1855.
SIR,—

Immediately upon my concluding the purchase alluded to in my letter of the, instant on behalf of Thomas Hansen, at Purerua, the chiefs offered the adjoining block of land to the Government, known as Parangiora and Te Wiroa, which is, from its position and water-communication, likely to become very valuable. Aware that this block of land had been sought after by intending settlers, I was anxious to complete the purchase, which I did for the sum of Two hundred pounds sterling (£200). The extent of the block may be from.' One thousand to fifteen hundred acres (1,000 to 1,500 acres), a large portion of which is flat, and, taken as a whole, in every way available for cultivation. It forms part of the large peninsula, having the Bay of Islands on the eastern side, and the long coast line to the north on the other, and is intersected by branches of the rivers Poukoura and Mangonui.

This land was offered and purchased from the chiefs named in the margin, and will, I have no doubt, be taken up by settlers so soon as it is advertised for selection and sale.

Kingi Wiremu, Tareha; Hohaia, Waikato; Engi Hori, Era; Pakira, Tareha; Rata, and others.

It has a considerable portion of water frontage, but timber on the ground is scarce. There are no native reserves within the block, so that the surveys may be made in a comparatively short time and at a trifling expense to the Government.

Deed of Sale enclosed.

The Deed, translation, &c., is herewith forwarded, and I trust that the purchase will meet with His Excellency's approval.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.
Donald McLean, Esq., Principal Gommissioner.

No. 6.Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Reporting Completion of Purchase of the Omaiwake Block. District Commissioner's Office, Waimate, Bay of Islands, 28th February, 1856.
SIR,—

Referring to my letter of the 18th August, stating the negotiations which' had been entered upon for a block of land known as "Omawake," containing about seven thousand acres (7,000), I have now the honor to report for the information of His Excellency the Governor that the purchase lias been finally completed for the sum of four hundred (£400) pounds sterling, agreeably with the recommendation made in the letter above alluded to. The deed, which has been duly signed, shall be forwarded with its translation by the next conveyance.

Before concluding this purchase, I was anxious to bring together the principal chiefs concerned in the reservation of a wahi tapu, or sacred place (the only reserve in the block, known as the Wiroa), of some importance to the natives, which I succeeded in doing, taking advantage of a considerable meeting which took place a few days since, upon the occasion of their exhuming the remains of several influential chiefs for the purpose of removing them to their final resting place. The boundaries of the wahi tapu, or sacred burial ground, having been carefully marked off by the parties concerned, they left me free to treat with the proper owners of the land; and in doing so it has been the means of setting at rest a question which had, on more than one occasion, been the cause of dispute and' annoyance among the native claimants.

A reference to the position of this block has already been made in the report above mentioned.

Upon a more minute examination of the country surrounding it, I think it will be found" eventually to bring into close, connection the important harbours and water communication of the Bay of Islands and Whangaroa on, the eastern side, and of Hokianga on the west, more especially if I should succeed in acquiring the adjoining blocks known as Pirau and Mokau. The interior communication is unusually good for this country, and it also presents the advantage of being unoccupied by the natives. The district thus, described comprises the land from whence the three rivers emptying themselves into the Bay of Islands, Hokianga, and Whangaroa, take their rise, and adjacent, to which is the spot selected by George Grey as an inland township, or military post.

Adjoining the block thus purchased for the Government is one which was originally acquired from the natives by Mr. James Shepherd, on behalf of J. M. Osmond, No; 333 G. As far as I can ascertain, the maximum grant for 2,560 acres has been made out, and issued to Mr. Onond on the 22nd October, 1844, under a minute of Governor Fitzroy's, dated 12th September of the same year. No survey has ever been made of this land, or boundaries defined of the quantity granted, by which to guide the Government, the claimant, or the natives. This is by no means an isolated case from among the claims scattered throughout this district.

So soon as the quantity granted to Mr. Osmond is selected and surveyed (which I think should be done with the least possible delay) I believe it will then be found that the surplus, together with what has now been purchased, will form a considerable block over which the native title has been extinguished, becoming at once the property of the Crown, probably to an extent of twenty thousand acres (20,000).

On the importance of having these surveys made I think I cannot speak too strongly; politically, it seems to be growing, into a grave question within which the interests of the Government, the settlers, and the natives are closely interwoven.

His Excellency will be glad to learn that I continue to receive the assistance of Tamati Waka, Mohi Tawhai, and other influential chiefs of this district.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

The Principal Commissioner, Land Purchase Department,
Auckland.

No. 7. MR COMMISSIONER KEMP to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER

General Report District Commissioner's Office, Waimate, Bay of Islands, 6th April, 1856.
SIR,—

Agreeably with the request contained in your circular, I have the honor to enclose a statement connected "with land purchases for the information of His Excellency the Governor.

With reference to the 3rd paragraph of that circular I beg to state that all deeds or other documents connected with the transfer, of land in this district have already been transmitted to the Land Purchase Office at Auckland, accompanied by duly certified translations, and, in reference to the last clause, have to report generally upon the state of the natives as follows:—

- The Natives in this District are, generally speaking, peaceably inclined, and I think well disposed towards the Government; at the same time, it is very apparent that they have made, but little advance in-civilization, owing probably to the limited trade that is carried on, compared with other districts more frequented by shipping, and where the number of European settlers is more numerous.

- Native customs are also now in more repute than they were a few years ago; but the observance of them is strictly confined to themselves, and does not in any way interfere with the Europeans.
- In a moral point of view, no improvement is visible, and the habit of intemperance prevails in almost all districts where spirits are to be obtained; they are, moreover, lax in the outward observances of Religion, whereas, in the earlier stages of the Colony, their attendance was regular and punctual, and its influence very generally, and very beneficially, felt; some allowance is, I think, to be made, when it is considered that the Missionary agency has been reduced to a comparatively small and feeble body.
- A tacit assent to British law, I think, everywhere exists; practically, it cannot be said to be in operation amongst the mass of the native people; notwithstanding this, but little real crime is committed. Fortunately, the distribution of the pensions to several worthy Chiefs have been the means of checking the more turbulent spirits, while at the same time the services of several intelligent Chiefs of rank have been given to the Government authorities without any return, and often at personal inconvenience and loss. Pene Tau, whose death I reported, was one of that number.
- Maize, potatoes, and pigs are raised in quantities only sufficient for their own wants, a small quantity of wheat is shipped from the western coast; but kauri gum, the article now in demand by the merchants in Auckland, forms a source of profitable employment.

In the districts of Mangonui and Kaitia, for example, an order for five hundred (500) tents has recently been sent by the natives to Auckland, to afford them shelter at the diggings, should the rainy season overtake them. They have, a few cattle, but horses are numerous.

- The supply of arms and ammunition is, generally speaking, kept up amongst the different tribes, but more, I think, as weapons of defence against each other. It is difficult to trace from whence the supply is obtained, since great secrecy prevails on this subject.
- Land is offered for sale in almost every part of the district, but not in very large blocks, perhaps from one to five thousand (1,000 to 5,000) acres, having an equal proportion of good and bad soils, and in some parts very fine, timber. Assuming that an efficient purchasing agency were at work, and that cash could be tendered to the natives on the spot, and that without delay, the price to be paid would be but trifling compared with what it may be under the present system, and at the same time the whole of the surplus land be in a few years transferred to the Crown, and so long too as the preemptive right of purchase rested entirely in the hands of the Governor. If however direct purchases were sanctioned by private parties, the prices realized by the natives would no doubt be nominally much larger; but, nevertheless, barter of this kind would be so much mixed up with other trading operations, that in many cases the natives would be deeply plunged into debt, in the shape of mortgages upon the land, thereby causing quarrels amongst themselves, and entailing annoyance, expense, and trouble to the Government. Of the importance of surveys, whether as regards the Government, the settlers, or the aboriginal owners, the past, present, or future dealings with the natives for land, it would, I think, be impossible to speak too strongly. The Government is hardly aware of the extent of its possessions, the native title to which has been-extinguished many years since, and taken for scrip: but as no surveys have been made, and many of the original sellers have been removed, by death or other causes, same difficulty will be found in reclaiming this land; hence it is that the greatest care and caution is requisite in fixing the boundaries of such blocks as are now being offered for sale; one great object indeed has been, to unite, as well as to extend, the property of the Government, and as these purchases proceed, to elicit from the natives an acknowledgement of the title of the Crown to lands they originally sold to the Europeans under the arrangements above mentioned.

Hoping this imperfect outline will meet with His Excellency's approval.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP,
District Commissioner, Bay of Islands.

The Principal Commissioner, Land Purchase Department,
Auckland.

OMMISSIONER.

Reporting offer, of Taraire and Whakapaku Blocks. District Commissioner's Office Bay of Islands, 13th April, 1856.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report for the information of His Excellency the Governor, that two blocks of land have been offered for sale on the North and South sides of the "Whangaroa Harbour, known as Taraire and Whakapaku, both, of which I have examined and ascertained the boundaries as laid down by the native sellers.

The block known as the Taraire, on the South, comprises both open and forest land (some very fine kauri), and is accessible by land carriage from the Bay of Islands, and by water from Whangaroa. It has good natural boundaries, no Native Reserves, is adapted for grazing or agricultural purposes; would furnish some very fine spars; adjoins land which is already in the hands of the Government, forming altogether a compact and valuable estate. The portion offered by the natives may be estimated at from three to four thousand acres., This block might, I think, be purchased for Three hundred and fifty or Four hundred pounds.

The block Te Whakapaku on the North Shore is chiefly open land, with scattered portions of forest, is well adapted for grazing, is easily accessible from the Port of Mamgonui, would be very soon occupied as sheep, runs, and joins land exchanged by private owners with the Government; estimated, to contain about three thousand acres, might, I think, be purchased for Three hundred pounds. Total, Seven hundred pounds sterling.

The principal Chiefs concerned in these sales are Tamati Waka, Ururoa, Hongi, Kingi, Wiremu Hafiro, Pakira, the sons of the well known Te Puhi, and several inferior persons.

These blocks were offered many months since, negotiations have been steadily going on, and no difficulties that I am aware of exist, for final completion. I would very respectfully urge that these offers be accepted, and the money tendered to the natives as early as it may be convenient to the Government.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP,
District Commissioner.

The Principal Commissioner, Land Purchase Department,
Auckland.

No. 9. The CHIEF COMMISSIONER to Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP.

To Report on Blocks of Land under offer in his District. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 8th September, 1856.

SIR,—

I have the honor to request that you will furnish me, at your earliest convenience, with a report, for the information of His Excellency the Governor, of the lands under offer to the Government by the natives of your district, describing the position, extent, capabilities, price and probable time that it may take to complete the purchase of each block; together with the surveying strength that may be requisite in order to define the external boundaries and reserves for the natives in each purchase.

The boundaries of each block must be carefully perambulated, as well as the reserves for the natives, and a plan made of the same to be attached to the Deed of Sale before any payment is made to the natives.

The periods at which monies will be required to complete purchases should be distinctly stated. Every exertion should be used during the spring and summer months to acquire such lands as may be approved by the Government for the purposes of colonization.

I have, &c., DONALD MCLEAN,
Chief Commissioner.

H. T. Kemp, Esq., J.P., District Commissioner, Bay of Islands.

No. 10. Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Forwarding Deeds and plan of Taraire and Whalcapalcu. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 8th January, 1857.

SIR,—

I have much pleasure in forwarding herewith the original deeds, accompanied by translations, of the blocks of land known as Te Taraire and Te Whakapaku, in the district of Whangaroa, for which the sum of Five hundred pounds (£500) has been paid to the natives.

Attached also to the deed is the survey made by Mr White, showing not only the extent, but the reserves which have been set apart for the natives. From this, survey it will be observed that the quantity ascertained does not fall very far short of the original rough estimate forwarded when the land was first offered for sale. The position, as well as junction with other blocks which have fallen into the hands of the Government, under scrip exchanges, and with good natural boundaries, will, I trust, recommend the purchase as a favourable one on the part of the Government.

The extent of Crown land in this locality cannot now be far short of ten thousand (10,000) acres.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP, District
Commissioner.

The Chief Commissioner, Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

No. 11. Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Reporting upon offer of Mawhe Block. District Commissioner's Office Bay of Islands' 3rd February. 1857.
SIR,—

I am anxious to bring under the notice of the Government the following particulars in reference to a Block of superior land known as Mawhe or Mawhe Kairangi, in the District of the Bay of Islands, the ownership of which is in the hands of several influential Chiefs, including Tamati Waka, Patuone, Druroa, Hongi, Moses Tawhai, Adam Clarke, Bewa, and many other chiefs, who all have an interest either directly or derivative in the land herein described.

- I think it would be right if I, were first of all to state for the Governor's information that the district of Mawhe was one chosen by George Grey, assisted by officers of the R.E., as a site in every way suitable for an inland settlement and military post, comprising, as it does, some of the finest arable land beautifully situated on the shores of Omapere lake, commanding a central position, and the key to the whole of the interior. It does not, perhaps, contain more than five thousand acres in the whole. It is, moreover, uninhabited by the natives.
- I have the honor to state for His Excellency's information that I entered upon negotiations several months ago," since which I have been endeavoring to bring to light the many claims connected with this land. I think I have so far succeeded that the two points now to be decided are, first, who of the Chiefs should, with the concurrence of the others, undertake its sale, and what amount would be deemed sufficient to enable the principal seller to make such an equal subdivision of the money as would give general satisfaction.

- If this land could be purchased, I believe it would form at once the nucleus of an important-European settlement, and the opinions of the settlers leave but little doubt that it would realise a considerable sum if laid off into small farms.
- Under these circumstances, and bearing in mind that the natives attach great value to the land from its fertility, and from the fact of the Governor of the Colony having applied for it on a former occasion, I would ask leave to be allowed to offer them the sum of Two thousand pounds (£2,000), and, it approved, that the money should be made, available at the Sub-Treasury here.

I would also beg leave to suggest that, in the event of the Chiefs coming to terms, a preliminary survey only should, in this case, take place, prior to the payment of the money, which could be then immediately followed up by a complete survey of the whole.

- I think I can safely recommend this arrangement to the favorable consideration of the Government as one which would tend most of all to promote the interests and prosperity of this part of the Province.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP,
District Commissioner.

The Chief Commissioner,
Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Giving Estimated Area of Scrip Lands in his District. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 11th February, 1857.

SIR,—

I do, myself the honor to enclose for the information of the Government a rough estimate of certain blocks of land which, properly speaking belong to the Crown, having many years ago been exchanged for scrip by the parties who originally purchased from the natives. The extent, you will observe, is very considerable.

- These claims frequently come to notice during negotiations with the natives. I have, therefore, thought it my duty to bring this subject before you, inasmuch as they form a very large part of the Public Domain, and, in some instances, are connected together by the purchases which have recently been made; but more especially as it is to be feared that, since many of the original settlers are not now to be found, a further postponement of the survey by the Government of these blocks may be attended with considerable difficulty and expense.
- If you think the subject of sufficient importance, perhaps you would deem it advisable to bring it under the consideration of His Excellency's Government as early as may be convenient.

I have, &c., H. T. Kemp, District Commissioner.

The Chief Commissioner,

Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

With reference to your letter of the 11th February last, enclosing, for the information of the Government, a rough estimate of certain blocks of land which have been exchanged for scrip by the original purchasers:

I have the honor, by direction of His Excellency the Governor, to inform you that Mr Commissioner Bell's attention has been directed to this very important subject, which he will fully investigate when he visits the Bay of Islands.

Respecting Purchase of the Mawhe Block. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 19th June, 1857.

SIR,—

With reference to your letters, of 3rd February and 26th March last, relative to the acquisition of the Mawhe-Kairangi Block, I have the honor to inform you that the price named by you—viz., Two thousand pounds (£2,000) for a block estimated at five thousand (5,000) acres appears so extravagant that the Government will-not entertain the matter of the purchase unless there is reason to suppose that the demands of the natives will be brought within more reasonable limits.

I have, &c., (For the Chief Commissioner)

Assistant Native Secretary.

Respectiny Offer by Maihi Kawhiti of Land to the Government. Chief Land Purchase Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 15th March, 1858.
SIR,—

Maihi Paraone Kawhiti, and other chiefs of the Bay of Islands, having repeatedly expressed a wish that the Government would accept a block of land at Te Kawa Kawa, in token of their reconciliation, and as a pledge of their loyalty and attachment to Her Majesty the Queen:

I have the honor, by direction of His Excellency the Governor, to request that you will be good enough to obtain the necessary conveyance of the land in question to the Crown (should no objection to your doing so occur to you); first, however, ascertaining all particulars relative to the position, extent, &c., of the land, and reporting thereupon for the information of the Government.

Should you, however, see any objection to the acceptance by the Government of the land offered as a gift, you will have the goodness to report your opinion for the information of His Excellency the Governor.

I have, &c.,
THOS. H. SMITH,
Assistant Native Secretary.

H. T. Kemp, Esq.,

District Commissioner, Bay of Islands.

No. 16. Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER. Mawhe.—Respecting Completion of Survey.

District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 17th March, 1858.
SIR,—

The survey of the Lake Omapere or Mawhe Block having been just completed, I avail myself of an early opportunity of submitting some farther particulars in reference to the acquisition of this block, for the information of His Excellency the Governor, in addition to those already furnished to your office in my report of the 3rd February, 1857, marked "Special."

2. I have the honor to report that the surveyor's estimate of the quantity corresponds with what I then reported—namely, about five thousand (5,000) acres.

I also stated that there were numerous claimants interested in the sale of this land.

The adjustment of these claims, followed by the survey of a few native reserves (presently in occupation) within the block will, I think, convince the natives of a liberal arrangement on the part of the Government, at the same time that it is proposed that at least one-half of the cost of the survey of these reserves should be borne by the Natives, forming, as it were, a deduction from the price which may be paid for the entire block.

3. With reference to the amount required for the purchase, I beg leave respectfully to submit the following points for consideration:

1st. Its position.

2nd. The number of claimants interested.

3rd. And thus desirable to abolish the native title as soon as possible.

On a previous occasion I had the honor of applying for an advance of Two thousand pounds (£2,000) for this and the Okaihau districts; but, as the natives have for the present declined to sell the Okaihau forest, I think that a sum of (£800 to £1,000) Eight hundred to One thousand pounds will be found sufficient to meet all the claims concerned. Enclosed is a requisition for the sum of One thousand pounds (£1,000);

It is proposed by the Natives that the payment should be made as soon as the map is completed by the surveyor, which will be in a few days. Taking the average value of the block as it stands, it is thought by good judges to be worth at least £5000.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP, District
Commissioner.

The Chief Commissioner, Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Reporting negotiations for a Block of 2,000 acres. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 7th May, 1858.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report for the information of His Excellency the Governor that I have entered into negotiations with the natives for the purchase of a small Block of land of about Two thousand acres in extent, which, I think, may be got upon reasonable terms. It is situated between the districts of Waimate and Kawakawa, and forms a parof of the unsold land between Pakaraka on one side, and the Western shores of the Bay on the other.

The whole of this Block is available, comprising chiefly soil of the best description, and well supplied with timber and water, and would, if purchased, be the means of connecting the lands already acquired by private hands from the natives.

It also joins the Kawakawa Block, for which I have been some time in treaty. In the present instance the title is clear and indisputable, and I beg leave to recommend the purchase for His Excellency's approval.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP.

The Chief Commissioner,
Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

No. 18.Mr. COMMISSIONER KEMP to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Reporting on several blocks in his District. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 29th May, 1858.
SIR,—

I have the honor to report for the information of His Excellency's Government, that I have just returned from an expedition during which I visited and examined several Blocks of land which have been offered for sale by the natives, all of them within the immediate neighbourhood of the Bay of Islands. Of the particulars connected with these Blocks, I shall do myself the honor to report in detail by an early opportunity.

- In the course of these negotiations, and of those already entered upon and approved by the Government, my attention has been given to the subject of surveys, much of the work having already been completed by private claimants, whose plans, together with a large proportion of surplus land, fall to the Crown under the operation of the Land Claims Settlement Act, and might therefore be made available for the purposes of the Government, when found desirable:
- With a local knowledge of the district, I think I may suggest for your own consideration and for the approval of the Government, that the simplest form of survey by fixing the principal points, and ascertaining as nearly as possible the area of the land to be sold, would be effectual and binding upon the natives where purchases become connected, and would for the present entirely meet the wishes of the Government in so far as the extinguishment of the native title is concerned.
- The sanction of the Government to a system of survey above described, I am anxious to obtain, as I have every reason to believe that, in this district in particular, it will be found in many respects to be advantageous and economical, especially in cases where surveys have already taken place.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP.

The Chief Commissioner,
Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

Reporting on offer of Land at Kawakawa. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands,, 8th June, 1858.
SIR,—

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter in reference to a piece of land tendered to the Government as a gift by the native Maihi Paraone Te Kuhanga of the Kawakawa, I have the honor to report that I have examined the land in question, which is situated on the south bank of the Kawakawa River, and estimated to contain about seven hundred acres.

As a precedent, I could scarcely recommend the acceptance of this land as a gift, but I might suggest that, as negotiations have been entered into with this chief and his people for the purchase of the whole of the Buapekapeka Block, of which the above forms a part, it might then be very conveniently included, and a small sum allowed by way of compensation. This arrangement would, I believe, meet the wishes of all the parties concerned.

District Commissioner.

Reporting on blocks which have been recently offered for sale. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 28th June, 1858.

SIR,—

Adverting to my letter of the 29th ultimo, I have now the honor to report in detail for the information of His Excellency's Government the Blocks of Land which have been recently offered for sale by the natives, and which I examined in the order in which they stand.

- No. 1. A Block of Land on the South side of the Kawa Kawa, including the district of the Rua Peka Peka, estimated to contain about (10,000) Ten thousand acres, offered for sale by Marsh Brown, Te Kuhanga, and other chiefs, and of which the small block offered by Nini as a gift to the Government forms a part.
- No. 2. A small Block of land called Patunui on the Eastern side of the Mangonui or Tareha's Bay, near the confluence of the Mangonui and Keri Keri rivers, estimated to contain about Three hundred acres (300), offered for sale by the Chief Waikato and others. Survey being carried on under Mr. Whitaker's instructions.
- No 3. A Block called Te Kauri, in the same locality, joining Government Block known as Te Wiroa, estimated to contain about Five hundred acres (500), offered for sale by William Te Hakiro. Survey being carried on also.
- No. 4. A Block on the South side, and joining the Government Block known as Te Taraire, midway between the Bay of Islands and Whangaroa, estimated to contain (3,000 acres) Three thousand Acres, offered for sale by George Kira and others.
- No. 5. A small Block on the North Bank of Keri Keri, opposite proposed site of Township, known as Hikuwai, estimated at about Three hundred (300) acres, offered for sale by Tango, an influential and useful Assessor. Survey being carried on
- No. 6. A small Block, joining site of Township, known as Te Wharau, a few acres only, in a commanding position, offered for sale by the Chief Ruhe and others. Survey completed.

The purchase of the whole or any of the abovementioned Blocks is respectfully recommended for the approval of his Excellency's Government.

To carry on Negotiations for Pukekohe Block. Chief Land Purchase Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 28th June, 1858.

SIR,—

With reference to your letter of the 7th ultimo, relative to a block of land near Pakaraka, I have the honor, by direction of His Excellency the Governor, to request that you will be good enough to carry on the negotiations for the purchase of the block, as its purchase is recommended by you, and its acquisition desirable; first reporting, however, as nearly as possible, the price for which the Natives agree to alienate their title to the land in question, for the information of the Government.

Relative to Survey of external Boundaries. Chief Land Purchase Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 28th June, 1858.

SIR,—

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo, reporting that you had examined several blocks of land offered for sale by the Natives, and am directed by His Excellency the Governor to request that you will have the goodness to furnish as detailed an account of the blocks of land referred to by you as possible, stating the estimated area of each block, its position, availability for agricultural or pastoral purposes, proximity to harbour, and such other particulars as may suggest themselves to you; With reference to your suggestions on the subject of external surveys, I have to observe that the Government is most anxious to adopt the "most economical" system; provided always that such surveys are so clear and distinct that no question can afterwards arise respecting the boundaries.

If the Government were surveying the old land claims as well as the native blocks, your proposal might advantageously be agreed to, because the same person would take up the work from time to time after the principal natural features had been fixed. But at present, and as a general rule, considering that so many surveyors are engaged under separate employers, His Excellency deems it inadvisable to discontinue the plan of accurately surveying the exterior boundaries of each native purchase, except where a previous survey is known to have been furnished.

You will have the goodness to bear fully in mind that every transaction with the natives for the purchase of land should be so clear, distinct, and well understood, that no possibility of a question arising in consequence of insufficient surveys should ever exist. The subsequent evils resulting from undefined boundaries are often much greater than the first expense of an accurate survey.

The Government, therefore, expects that each transaction with the natives of your district shall in every way be so final and conclusive that there shall be no further embarrassment caused by disputes arising which might have been obviated.

A copy of a plan which is being compiled of the old land claims in the Bay of Islands District, showing their relative positions and extent, will shortly be transmitted to you for your information and guidance.

I have, &c.,

DONALD MCLEAN, Chief Commissioner.
H. T. Kemp, Esq., J.P.,

District Commissioner, Bay of Islands.

Mokau Block.—The Survey has been completed. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 1st July, 1858.
SIR,—

I do myself the honor to report, for the information of His Excellency the Governor, that the survey of a block of land known as Mokau has just been completed.

It is one of the blocks already reported on as under negotiation, and is estimated to contain Ten thousand (10,000) acres, chiefly forest, comprising some very fine kauri and other timber. It is situated North West of Waimate, distant ten miles, with an available road.

It stands connected with blocks over which the native title has been extinguished, and is in every other respect a desirable purchase.

The Chief Wi Hau, a well known and useful servant of the Government is the seller; and as he is anxious to assist the Government in establishing a settlement here, I beg to recommend that I may be authorised finally to conclude this purchase.

Declining gift of La?id by Maihi P. Kawiti. Chief Land Purchase Commissioner's Office, Auckland, July 8th, 1858.
SIR,—

With reference, to your letter of the 8th ultimo, relative to Maihi Paraone Kawiti's offer of a piece of land to the Government, I have the honor, by direction of the Governor, to inform you that His Excellency fully concurs in the opinion expressed by you as to the inadvisability of accepting the land in question as a gift, and also in your suggestion that it should be purchased in connection with a larger block of land.

You are therefore authorised to inform Maihi Paraone, if you see fit to do so, that while His Excellency fully appreciates Maihi's friendship, and the motives which have induced him to offer the land, he cannot accept it as a gift from him, or from any other person.

I have, &c.,

£100 to be paid to Wiremu Hau. Chief Land Purchase Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 13th September, 1858.

SIR,—

The Land Claims Commissioner having reported to His Excellency the honorable conduct, and, good example of the Native Chief, Wiremu Hau, in the case of Thomas Joyce's claim, the particulars of which are already known to you, I have the honor to inform you, that His Excellency has been pleased to direct that the unpaid balance of d662 2s. 6d. due upon the land shall be increased to £100 0s. Od., which will be paid through you to Wiremu Hau, in token of His Excellency's approval of his conduct.

You will be good enough to take the necessary receipts, specifying the object for which the money is paid, and the land thereby ceded.

I shall send a requisition to the General Government for the above named sum today, that the case may be disposed of without delay.

I have, &c., DONALD MCLEAN,
Chief Commissioner.

The price has been fixed for Mawhe Block. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 2nd October, 1858.
SIR,—

I have much pleasure in reporting, for the information of His Excellency's Government that the price of the Mawhe Kairangi or Lake Block has been finally fixed at Four hundred and fifty pounds (£450). Its position, the quality of the soil, and connection with other lands over which the native title has been extinguished, make it, I think, a desirable and valuable acquisition to the Government, and the price to be paid as reasonable as might have been expected, taking the number of claimants and other circumstances into consideration, and one which,

I have reason to hope, will meet with His Excellency the Governor's approval. The sum of Two hundred pounds (£200) has already been advanced through your office on account of this purchase, and I beg leave to request that the remainder may soon be furnished from Auckland, or through the Sub-Treasurer at Eussell, from the unappropriated funds now in that Officer's hands.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP,
District Commissioner.

The Chief Commissioner,

Naming the Sum agreed upon for the Mokau Block. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 4th October 1858.
SIR,—

I have the honour to report for the information of the Government that the price for the Mokau Block, referred to in my letter of the 1st of July, and containing by survey 7,225 acres, has been fixed at the sum named in the margin (£240).

The particulars connected with the negotiations for this block have already been transmitted to your office. I now beg to recommend for the Governor's approval the payment of the abovenamed sum, which I think fair and reasonable, and as low as it could be made, taking the ascertained quantity and other favorable points into consideration.

If approved, I shall feel obliged by your forwarding the amount as early as may be convenient.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP,
District Commissioner.

Report of Lands which it is proposed to purchase. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 16th October, 1858.
SIR,—

I do myself the honor to make the following report of the blocks of land it is proposed should be purchased by the Government, during the ensuing summer, in the District of the Bay of Islands.

The outline surveys of the foregoing blocks will probably occupy the whole of the summer months, and during that time negotiations for additional portions may be going on. These, if kept steadily in advance, will furnish, I think, more than sufficient employment for a permanently attached surveyor throughout the year. The delay and uncertainty in the negotiations with the natives is not so great as it was and the terms under which the Government propose to deal with them for their waste lands are now becoming better understood: so that while the pre-emptive right of purchase is exercised only by the Crown, the extinguishment of the native title may go on uninterruptedly for some time to come in this district.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP,
District Commissioner.

SIR,—

In acknowledging the receipt of your letter (No. 29) of the 2nd instant, reporting the arrival of Mr Kempthorne, and naming the blocks on the survey of which he is at present engaged, I have the honor, by direction of His Excellency the Governor, to request that you will have the goodness to give early attention to the survey of the Kawakawa Block, reported upon in your letter (No. 21, par. 1), of the 28th June last, and estimated by you to contain ten thousand acres.

Hauotapiri, Kaiva, Rawa. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, December, December, 1858.
SIR,—

Adverting to my letter of the 2nd October, No. 29, and to yours of the 20th of the same month, No. 225, in reference to the surveys of the Hauotapiri and Kawa Kawa Blocks, I regret to have to report for the information of His Excellency the Governor, that the sellers in the first case, having changed their minds, are not willing to part with that small Block, as will be seen by their letter, a copy of which is herewith enclosed.

- With reference to the negotiations for the Blocks on the North and South banks of the Kawa Kawa, the former known as Pukekohe, the latter as Ruapekapeka, I have the honor to report that the native sellers have from the first considered the sums offered to them, viz., Three hundred pounds (£300) for each block, as too low. At a rough estimate of the quantity, and taking into account the position of the land, the quality of the soil, with the average prices paid for other Blocks, I have thought the sums named to be liberal offers.

- As some difference of opinion existed as to the quantity as well as the quality of the lands offered, I thought it my duty to enter upon a further examination, which I accordingly did, accompanied by the surveyor, Mr. Kempthorne, whose report I now enclose, together with a sketch indicating the Blocks as originally offered, and the further extension of boundaries, at my own suggestion, with a view to a larger sum being offered to the natives, as well as to simplify the surveys.
- I have further to report that the claimants (who are all of one tribe) having agreed to the suggestion made to them, I offered them on the spot the sum of One thousand pounds (£1000), subject to the approval of His Excellency the Governor, for the two Blocks thrown into one, as shown upon the sketch, and to survey their reserves for them; the entire Block averaging from eighteen to twenty thousand acres (18,000 to 20,000 acres).
- This offer, which I thought a liberal one, taking all things into consideration, they have also declined, I therefore now beg leave to submit the case for the consideration of the Government, and to ask whether I may be authorized to offer the Natives a larger sum than that named; and, if so, to what amount? I should be glad to receive the instructions of the Government on this point.

The position of the Block commends it to favorable consideration, and probably it may become of value in connection with a settlement in that neighbourhood. I propose, therefore, to suspend negotiations until I receive the pleasure of the Government thereupon.

I have, &c., H. T. KEMP.

Respecting offer of Land by Maihi P. Kawiti. Chief Land Purchase Commissioner's Office; Auckland, 14th December, 1858.

SIR,—

I have the honor, by direction of His Excellency the Governor, to enclose herewith a copy of a letter from Maihi Paraone Kawiti, relative to some land which he wished to dispose of to the Government, with the observation that if the land is really valuable and extensive the price should be fairly proportionable to its actual value. It is my intention shortly to visit the district of the Bay of Islands for the purpose of arranging with the natives for the acquirement of this as well as of other blocks of land, and to settle any question that may be pending with reference to land purchases in that locality, and you may inform Maihi Paraone Kawiti accordingly.

Forwarding Deed of Conveyance. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 20th Janury, 1859.
SIR,—

I do myself the honor to transmit herewith the original Deed of the Mawhe or Lake Block, executed by the native chiefs on the 8th day of December, 1858. The block, which contains nearly five thousand (5,000) acres, is in many respects available. It is well situated, and connects, to a considerable extent, the lands over which the native title had already been extinguished by the Government and by private persons.

The price originally asked by the natives was, I regret to say, unreasonably high; but finally, after several months' deliberation, with the assistance of Tamati Waka, the sum of Four hundred and fifty pounds (£450) was fixed and paid—an amount less than was offered by George Grey when His Excellency had it in contemplation to form a strong military position on the borders of the lake. I trust that it will be found, when surveyed, to be a desirable location for a small body of settlers, and may, in other respects, realize the wishes and expectations of the General Government, in whose hands, as a Reserve, it may be well recommended.

To purchase land, if possible, in the vicinity of former purchases. Chief Land Purchase Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 7th March, 1859.

SIR,—

In acknowledging receipt of your letter of the 18th ult., No. 46, I am directed by His Excellency the Governor to request that you will be good enough to attend more particularly to the purchase of land in the immediate vicinity of the Bay first, as the purchases referred to in your letter of the above date can be concluded afterwards.

In every instance, the surveys of external boundaries should precede the purchase of any Blocks of land that may be offered for sale by the natives, in order to avoid dispute and misunderstanding relative thereto. Although the Blocks referred to in your letter are not required for immediate use or settlement, it is desirable that the negotiations for their acquisition should be undertaken as soon as possible after the purchase of the Kawa Kawa and adjacent Blocks has been completed.

Reporting purchase of the Kawakawa Block. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 10th June, 1859.
SIR,—

I do myself the honor to report, for the information of His Excellency, the Governor, that as soon as the plan was prepared by the Surveyor, I proceeded on the 29th ult to pay for the Kawa Kawa Block, accompanied by Mr. Clendon, the Resident Magistrate, Tamati Waka, and several of the Native Assessors.

- After several addresses had been made by the Chiefs, as is the customs on these occasions, the Marsh Brown Kawiti stated his unwillingness to receive the sum of Two thousand pounds (£2,000), which had been fixed by the Government as a fair and reasonable payment for the Block.
- I have before reported that this Block was divided into two portions, one on the North bank of the river Kawa Kawa, the other on the South; Marsh Brown's claims being chiefly confined to the Southern portion. The two Blocks in point of value are nearly equal, but not in extent.
- The proceedings were finally brought to a close by the Chiefs Tamati Pukututu, George, Renata, and others, who accepted the sum of (£1,000) One thousand pounds for the North side, which was paid to them and their followers, the Deed of Sale for that portion having been executed on the 2nd instant, The North side comprises the finest part of the land in the entire Block, and is a valuable addition to the Crown Lands in this District.

I trust that these arrangements will meet with the approval of his Excellency the Governor.

Reporting further as to the State of his District. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 10th June, 1861.

SIR,—

I have the honor to supply the following information on the several points called for in your" letter of the 20th ultimo, in reference to land purchases in this district.

The form filled in as first requested has been already forwarded, shewing the quantity of land now in the hands of the Government, and the blocks for which it is now in negotiation with a view to purchase.

To the first clause of your letter, as to whether any difficulties or claims exist, with reference to any particular block, I have the honor to report that a claim has been made by Marsh Browne Kawiti, for a small portion on the North Kawa-kawa Block of about eight hundred acres (800 acres), for which he asks the sum of two hundred pounds (£200). This claim was not made by him until after the purchase was completed and the money, paid. His reason for making this claim is this, that he did not receive, through his representatives present at the sale, a fair share of the payment which was by general consent and arrangement apportioned to Marsh Browne and his immediate followers, for that particular part of the block. This land is not required, for immediate use, and I have therefore felt it to be my duty to refuse, under the circumstances, the payment of so large a sum. I believe that the claim may, in course of time, be met and settled for the sum of forty or fifty pounds.

In reply to the second part of your circular, I beg to report that I am not aware of any claims which arise out of transactions not yet completed, neither are there any outstanding payments to be made to the natives on account of any blocks purchased; and in reference to the last paragraph, I have the pleasure to state that I am not aware of any disputes connected with boundaries of land or reserves within the blocks already purchased or those under negotiation. Bearing in mind the instructions from time to time received as regards the investigation of claims and their final adjustment, I have endeavoured, as nearly as it was possible to do so, to ascertain all, individual as well as general or tribal claims. In some instances much time has been unavoidably taken up, so as to arrive at a satisfactory conclusion and settlement of these claims.

Referring to the blocks purchased throughout the district as they now stand, I do not find any claims or opposition on the part, of the natives, with the exception of the one above mentioned.

On a subject involving so many interests, and a fruitful source of dispute and litigation as between the natives themselves, it became necessary to be guarded and watchful, lest those annoyances should be entailed on the Government or the settlers. I have every reason to hope that this state of things will remain undisturbed so long as agents conversant with the various claims are on the spot prepared to meet any objections that might eventually arise on the part of any unknown native claimants. I desire, at the same time; to be allowed to express an opinion that some modification on the present mode of extinguishing native title would be acceptable to the natives, under which individuals as well as tribes might convey portions of land to persons of the European race, the Government always exercising a check where the parties purchasing are found to be mere speculators rather than bona fide settlers. The question, however, is one deserving such grave consideration that I hesitate to do more than make this incidental reference to a change that might perhaps be beneficial in certain districts to persons of both races, always assuming the Government to be, in such districts, in the full exercise of its power and authority.

On looking through the claims in this district, I cannot find at present any claims or objections on the part of the natives which could not be settled with a little care and management, and none, I think, that would be found to entammel the Government or bring about a collision with the original sellers.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.
The Chief Commissioner, Land Purchase Department,

Auckland.

Purchase of Whangai, 243. Acres; Te Rauri, 35 Acres. Land Purchase Department, Bay of Islands, 10th February, 1864.

SIR,—

I have the honor to transmit herewith two plans named in the margin for the purchase of which the sum of two hundred and fifty (£250) pounds has been paid.

I beg to enclose, for the information of the Government, the copy of a letter in which Mr. Barstow was good enough to favour me with his opinion before the purchase was finally made. In that opinion I beg respectfully to concur, and trust that, the purchase of, these lots will meet with the approval of the Government, as it will be the means of giving additional value to the Kawa Kawa Block, and afford easy access from the harbour whenever it shall be settled upon.

Respecting Value of Whangai Block. Resident Magistrate's Court, Russell, 16th February, 1864.
SIR,—

I am somewhat puzzled to name what I should consider a fair price for Whangai. There are so many accidental circumstances to be taken into consideration, beyond the mere agricultural value of the land. I know that ten shillings an acre was offered them by a settler and declined. Of course the blocks, being already surveyed, enhances its value to the amount of cost of survey; then the whares, fencing, and clearing, in addition to its possessing by far the best landing and road for a large portion of the Kawa Kawa Block; I should estimate that an increased value of at least one shilling an acre would be given to quite 5,000 acres of that block by the Whangai piece belonging to Government, owing to the near contiguity of so much of it to the water-carriage, and a good sum would be saved in road-making; a great deal of future annoyance will be saved in the way of cattle trespass when settlers shall have occupied that part of the country, by obtaining this piece which, from its being covered to some extent with grass, and well sheltered, will certainly tempt animals to it. I should think £200, or £250, would be a low price, if the land could be obtained for that sum.

SIR,—
Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 25th May, 1864.

I am directed by the Hon. Mr. Fox to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th ultimo, enclosing a requisition for the sum of Three thousand eight hundred pounds (£3,800), to be paid to the native chief Maihi P. Kawiti and others, for the Ruapekapeka Block, and to inform you that that amount has been duly forwarded to the Sub-Treasurer, Russell.

I have, &c.,

Ruapekapeka Block.

SIR,—

District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 16th June, 1864.

I do myself the honor to report, for the information of the Government, that the sum of Three thousand eight hundred pounds (£3,800) was paid to the natives for the Ruapekapeka Block, and the deed duly signed by them on the 11th instant at Waioomio, the residence of the chief, Marsh Brown Kawhiti.

Payment made.

I was accompanied on this mission by Mr. R. M. Barstow, who kindly gave me his assistance, and, after the usual formalities and speaking, the division of the money to the principal Hapus was unanimously decided upon, and finally handed to them in the presence of the whole of the natives assembled.

Right of Road secured.

I have the honor to report further that, in concluding this purchase, a right of road has been agreed upon and secured over any part of the block, but more particularly with reference to the coal field, and the construction of a tramway, which in all probability would have to pass through native reserves and other Maori land to the proper landing.

I big also to add that throughout these proceedings Kawhiti gave us his help, and otherwise conducted himself in a manner becoming a chief, whose influence is felt and fully recognised by the largest number of Hapus in the districts north of Auckland.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

Edward Shortland, Esq. Native Secretary.

Purchase of Allotments at Russell.

SIR,—

District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 16th June, 1864.

Having completed the payment for the Ruapekapeka Block, I proceeded, under instructions from His Honor the Superintendent, to negotiate for the purchase of an allotment in the front street of the town of Russell, for which I was authorised by His Honor to pay, if necessary, the sum of Two hundred pounds (£200). I have now the honor to report, for the information of the Government, that the sum of Two pounds ten shillings per foot frontage has been agreed upon with the native sellers, there being in all seventy-nine feet, according to the certified plan of the town (£197 10s.)

I have at the same time agreed to pay the sum of Ten pounds (£10) for an allotment belonging to the Chief Kerei through which the line of street has been laid down on the plan.

£50 offered for a Wahi Tapu.

The sum of Fifty pounds (£50) has also been offered to extinguish the native title to an allotment (being a well known Wahi tapu) joining the Customhouse. The claims on this lot are numerous, and if the sum of fifty pound is accepted it will be fair and reasonable.

The purchase of these lots will be the means of leaving the town free of any native claims, and will in other respects be an advantage to the white community, and, I think, also a great benefit to the natives. Enclosed is requisition for the amount.

SIR,—

District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands. 17th June, 1864.

I beg to report for the information and approval of the Government, that three (3) separate lots of land have been recently offered by the Chief Tango and other native claimants for sale. They are situated within and also join the limits of the present proclaimed Bay of Islands Settlement, and as they have all been surveyed at their own expense, I offered to pay the sum of one hundred and thirty pounds (£130) for the whole upon receiving a proper transfer of the plans for the Government, which, after some discussion, has been agreed upon, reserving a small Kainga out of the larger lot of 468 acres. The timber alone, which is scarce in the neighbourhood, must soon become of great value for fencing and other purposes.

Kahikatea Reserve.

SIR,—

District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 18th June, 1865.

I do myself the honor to report for the information of the Government that the sum of one thousand one hundred and six pound ten shillings (£1,106 10s.) was, on the 13th instant, paid to the native owners, for a portion of the block of land known as the Kahikatea Reserve, containing four hundred and eighty-six acres (486 acres), joining the coal-field at the Kawa Kawa.

For that part of the reserve comprising bush or forest, the sum of, three pounds ten shillings (£3 10s.) per acre has been given; and for the open fern or ti tree the sum of ten shillings (10s.) has been paid, being the sums respectively agreed upon before the survey was commenced.

I have already had the honor of explaining that the land in question has been purchased with the view to the efficient working of the coal-mine, and that the funds for the purchase have been supplied by the Provincial Government.

I have, &c.,

No. 1. Lieut.-Colonel McDONNELL to the Hon. Dr. POLLEN.

Waoku. Auckland, 10th July, 1872.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report, for the information of the Government, that in accordance with instructions I received from Mr. Clarke, the Civil Commissioner, I proceeded from Auckland to the Waimate and from thence to Ottawa, to make inquiries respecting the block of land named Waoku offered for sale to the Government by Hori Puatata, Wiremu Pore, and other chiefs.

I arrived at Ottawa on the 25th June—a settlement on the Taheke, a branch of the Hokianga River. I held a meeting with the Natives; and the following morning I left with five guides, who were to show me over the country. About two miles from the settlement we entered the bush, travelled all day in the rain, and camped at nightfall, wet, tired, and hungry. The weather was of the worst description; and had it not been that we were fortunate enough to meet with and kill a wild cow, the fat of which I made the natives burn for a fire, as there was no wood near that we could get to kindle, I doubt if we could have moved the next day from camp and the exposure, as we had neither blankets nor other covering except what we stood in.

We passed a miserable night: in the morning the natives had decided to return. It would have been useless to proceed if even I had been able; so we returned to the village which we reached on the evening of the following day. I again conversed with the chiefs, and offered to go out again in a few days when the weather moderated, and if they could procure food. This they declined doing, as they were busily engaged in fitting up a large house, intended for the reception of other natives, who were to take part in a "hahunga," or disinterment of bones; but they proposed that I should return in the summer months, when they would go over the block and point out all the boundaries to me. From what I could see and judge of the country, I make the following remarks:—

- It is all forest land, comprising kauri, totara, rimu, matai, and other useful timber.
- The nature of the country is rough and mountainous in some places, and undulating in others.
- The soil is of excellent quality, being a rich chocolate-coloured loam, that would grow any farm produce.
- As to the position and the probable extent.—The land is on the Mangakahia Stream, which runs into the Wairoa River. I should judge the eastern boundary to be four or five miles to the westward of Maunganui, the mountains on the coast. The southern boundary commences about seven miles in a straight line from Ottawa, running inland over the wooded range. The acreage is, as far as I could judge, about 35,000 acres.
- I am inclined to think there will be little or no dispute as to ownership, unless old Parore makes a claim. I spoke to the chief Mohi Tawhai, and with the native member for the North, Wiremu Katene, as to the ownership, and these chiefs seemed to think that; those who have offered the land for sale, have a good claim.
- As I have not been over the land I can say nothing for certain as to the best line of road, or the most convenient seaport or outlet, as it is forest country, surrounded by forest on all sides. Before a reliable - opinion can be given it must be thoroughly explored in fine weather.

  - Its fitness for emigration purposes.—This will in a great measure depend" on the approaches that can be got to it, but, I think a road could be made from Ottawa and the Taheke. From the latter place water carriage is to be had to Hokianga; a road might also be had to it from the Bay of Islands. I expect the natural outlet from it will be by the Wairoa. Should my surmises prove correct, the country might be suitable for Canadians or Nova Scotians, but not for emigrants fresh from the Home country.
- The lowest price mentioned by the natives was 5s. an acre, but this was a mere matter of form. The utmost value I place upon it, and that only if available roads can be made to it, is at the outside 2s. per acre. I believe coal exists, as the natives showed me some said to have been found on the land, a specimen of which I enclose.

Omahuta Block. Auckland,
SIR,—
10th July, 1872.

On my arrival at the Teheke, on the 22nd ultimo, I proceeded with Hone Mohi and others to Hokianga to see the block of land called Omahuta, situated at the head of the Mangamuka River. We were joined at Herd's Point by other owners of the land who had been warned to meet us here; and the next day we went up the river, camped out, and the next morning we went over the block.

I can only give a rough idea of the acreage, and should say it was from 10,000 to 12,000 acres, more or less.

There is some very good rich land in the block, and some very indifferent, about equal proportions.

There is a large quantity of kauri, timber of first-rate quality. I may say that a more magnificent kauri forest I have seldom seen, and much of it is available to the ordinary method of getting it to market.

Kauri gum is to be had in large quantities; the surface of the ground is in many places covered with it.

I can recommend this block to the Government, if only for the excellent timber and quantity of gum obtainable. I estimate the timber at many millions of feet.

The price for which the natives say they will sell is 12s. an acre, but from 2s. 6d. to 3s. will, I think, be taken; private individuals might be inclined to give more.

If I may be allowed to make a suggestion, presuming this land is purchased by the Government, I would place settlers on this country that have been used to work at timber, such as Canadians; or Nova Scotians. They could collect gum and timber a few days after they were located on their land, and so commence work that would not only provide them with the necessaries of life, but provide them with a handsome surplus to improve their respective lots.

The boundaries of the block offered for sale are as under: Commencing at the stream of Tahekeiti, and on to Te Tupapa, Karakarere, Te, Wai-o-Pukekohi, Tuara, Whakapai, Te Hutu, Paia, Katutu, Te Ture, Te Papa, Te Pihatangino, Eatakamaru, Puketawa, Ohawhe, Te Kakauhere, Rahui Kokoromiko, Te Kiripaka, Turangahou, Te Waiaira, joining again to Tahekeiti.

Land purchases in Northern districts. Auckland, 22nd October, 1874.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report, for the information of the Government, that, according to instructions, I proceeded North with Mr. Brisseuden from Auckland to negotiate with him for the purchase of land from the natives.

On arriving North, we succeeded in acquiring several new blocks, and continued the negotiating of those which I believe Mr. Brissenden has already reported as having been partly acquired.

On the 16th ultimo I was unfortunately taken very ill, which prevented my continuing our work. It had been thought absolutely necessary by Mr. Brissenden and myself that he should proceed to Auckland, and to Wellington if necessary, to confer with Donald McLean on subjects relating to the lands we are dealing for.

During his absence, and on the 25th ultimo; I partially recovered, and resumed my duty. The following is a report of what has since been done:—

On the 25th September, I went to see a block named ".Waihoanga," near the Omapere Lake, and purchased it for 1s. per acre. It has since been surveyed, and contains about 3,000 acres.

On the 26th September, I rode to Mangakahia, on my way to Kaihu, on the Wairoa, to meet the chief Parore by a former engagement about a tract of country offered me some months ago. The Man-gakahia natives had assembled to meet me, but I deferred much I had to say until I returned. On the 28th September, I started for Kaihu with several of the Mangakahia chiefs, camped in the forest,, and on the evening of the 29th arrived at our destination. As Parore happened to be at that settlement, we met the same night, and after a few hours' talk I succeeded in arranging for the purchase of "a large block of fine country, nearly all forest. Some reserves are to be allowed, but not of any great-extent. The price I had some difficulty in arranging—2s. 6d., the price of Pekapekarau and other blocks at Mangakahia, being mentioned and asked for. However, as I had hinted to the Mangakahia natives that I intended to request them to reduce this price per acre on my return, I told Parore that I could not give this sum. I showed him the advantage that would be derived when these lands were occupied by Europeans, using arguments of my own for that object. Eventually, the price was fixed at 1s. 3d. an acre; but Wharepapa, of Mangakahia, having succeeded in getting a sort of agency from the owners in his hands, has to be paid £200. I do not doubt being able to effect a very great saving on this before the purchase is completed. I merely mention how this stands now, and which I have agreed to conditionally. The following morning I left Kaihu for Mangakahia, and took the opportunity of having as good a look at the country as circumstances permitted; but I did not feel well enough to do more. We reached Mangakahia on the evening, of the 1st October, and proceeded at once to hold a meeting, which lasted till past midnight, and the following is the result of what I have effected:—

The blocks of land formerly arranged for, Pekapekarau, Wharekahakaha, the survey of which has been completed, and Opoteke, now under survey, which I estimated at 5,000 acres, but which will be now over 12,000, were agreed to be purchased at the rate of 2s. 6d. per acre. The arrangement I have now made with all the principal men, excepting one who will do what I tell him, is that the money they have already received on these blocks, about, I think, £750, is to go at the former rate of 2s. 6d. an acre; but the remaining portion of the land, amounting in round numbers to 13,000 acres, is reduced to from 2s. 6d. to 1s 3d an acre, effecting a saving of about £800 to the country, less £50 I made presents of. I arranged with certain of the influential men about this before I met Parore, otherwise neither himself nor his people would have taken less than 2s. 6d. for their land. "After this had been settled, the boundaries of Parore's block were added largely to by the Mangakahia people, forming the whole into one large block, in which there are to be but few reserves. The area is extremely difficult to estimate, it being mostly forest, but the whole of Tutamoe and Kairara is included. I think that if the boundaries named are adhered to "there will be about 75,000 acres, perhaps more. The soil is for the most part fair, but in many places equal to the Victoria Valley in quality. The forests of kauri are of the best—many trees I passed running from 70 to 90 feet without a branch, and from 5 feet to 7 feet in diameter, and to be got to water without much difficulty, the ground sloping away to creeks that in freshets would float a large vessel, and emptying themselves into the Mangakahia River.

On the 2nd October I left for Ohaeawai, and on the 3rd I rode to Te Taheke, where I procured a boat and pulled to the Hokianga Heads. The next morning I hired a horse and reached Whangape, arriving at Ahipara the following day. A large number of natives were collected here to confer with Mr. Nelson. I handed that officer over a block named "Epakauri," that had been partially negotiated for by Mr Brissenden and myself during a former trip on the coast. Here I arranged for the purchase of a block named "Te Tauroa," estimated to contain about 13,000 or 14,000 acres; price per acre to-be 4d. There is little good land in it.

An extremely good piece of land was then brought forward, that I had vainly endeavoured to get before when negotiating for the Victoria Valley and other blocks. £1 was demanded, and then the price fell to 10s. an acre. This block is named "Orowhana." There is much kauri on it, tall,, straight, and available, and the soil is very good. I have arranged the price at 3s. an acre, and there are some thousands of acres. I returned the following day to Whangape, and reached Herd's Point on the 9th instant, where I met Mr. Brissenden, who had just returned from Auckland, business with the natives detaining him there the following day." I proceeded to Ohaeawai, hearing some chiefs I had written to had arrived there to see me from Whangaroa. On my way I called at Otawa, by the wish of Ngeitu and Ngateue tribes, and purchased a large slice of land adjoining the Waoku; price, 1s. 5d. an acre.

I reached Ohaeawai the same evening, and met the Whangaroa chiefs on Monday, the 12th inst.. I paid them a deposit of £50 on their blocks of land in their district, acreage and price partially arranged for; but I am to meet them at Whangaroa the next time I go North.

The next day, 13th, I purchased a block near the Waitaroto named "Okaka," about 5,000 acres more or less, price to be 1s. 3d.; also another block, acreage not known, price to be fixed in future, but survey is to commence at once.

When my health is restored I shall proceed North again, as there is yet much work to be completed in all the lands I have mentioned about, for there is great jealousy existing, and the greed for money is unbounded, leading the natives to all sorts of tricks and devices, to obtain advances. I have been constantly at work day and night, sometimes working till daylight to accomplish our object, with the exception of the time I was laid up.

I have, &c.,

THOS. MCDONNELL, Land Purchase Commissioner.

H. T. Clarke, Esq., Under Secretary, Native Office.

Auckland, 3rd November, 1874.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report that I have secured by purchase, and paid deposit on account of Government on several blocks of land north of Auckland, a schedule of which I enclose. Nearly all of them are now under survey. I may state that the land is of the general mixed character, as it "necessarily must be in so large an area." I have been as particular as possible to select the best at the lowest price.

Negotiations for Otangaroa and other Blocks. Auckland, 28th November, 1874.
SIR,—

I have the honor to state that I received your telegram in answer to mine of the 16th instant, respecting land negotiations at Whangaroa. I would have followed the advice contained therein had I known for a certainty where Mr. Brissenden was to be found, or had I felt well enough to have undertaken the following of him up, and getting the money I so much required, and for the want of which I had to encounter much difficulty; but the probability would have been that, while employed thus, these blocks of land would have passed into the hands of private persons before I could have been in time to prevent it.

In October last I met some Whangaroa chiefs at Ohaeawai by appointment, and gave them a deposit of fifty pounds (£50) on certain lands. The price was left then to some future time.

Otangaroa and the Patoa Blocks, fertile and well-situated land, were offered to me also; and which I agreed to take. Europeans about Mangonui, hearing I had been negotiating these lands for Government, seem to have desired to possess them, and commenced to bargain for them. Receiving information in Auckland from natives employed by me to guard the interests I am dealing for, I saw the necessity of communicating with the Government and obtaining some money to proceed to Whangaroa with, especially as these two blocks are very valuable, and will become more so.

Upon my arrival at Whangaroa I sent a message to Mr. Clarke, surveyor, to come in; when that gentleman informed me he had been especially cautioned by settlers residing at Mangonui not to attempt the survey of Otangaroa and Patoa Blocks, as the natives had told them the surveyors would be shot, and that bloodshed amongst the natives would ensue, but that, at the very time Mr. Clarke was told this, the same parties were negotiating the land for others.

I had a long talk with the natives, and showed them the stupidity of listening to Europeans who only made a cat's-paw of them for their own interests; but to do justice to the natives, I feel certain they never entertained any of the designs attributed to them, but if they have said anything at all they have been required to say so for a purpose. I have desired Mr. Clarke to proceed, as soon as he has completed the block he is now on, with the survey of Otangaroa and Te Patoa. The principal owners have signed an agreement to sell to the Government as soon as it has passed the Native Land Court.

Not having any money to pay as a deposit on the land, I had considerable difficulty, and did not fix a price. I excused my being without cash as best I could, telling the natives I would bargain for the price per acre after the survey and Land Court is over:

The morning after the above arrangements were concluded, Mr. Simpson, a surveyor, called upon me, and informed me he had been sent from Ahipara, and desired to come on to Whangaroa, and commence the survey of Whangaroa and Te Patoa. I sent him back at once, telling him the land was under negotiation for Government, and that Mr. Clarke had instructions to survey it. I have put Mr. Simpson in the way of obtaining work further North.

I have estimated the acreage of Otangaroa and Te Patoa Blocks at 9,000 acres, but I am assured by Mr. Clarke that there will be a much larger area. The land is of good quality, and on the Patoa there is some very fine timber; the country is easy of access, and well adapted for immigration purposes and for settlement.

I have arranged for the Huia Block, of 4,000 acres, at 1s. 3d. per acre. There is on this land some valuable timber.

The Unuhia Block, of 6,000 acres, for 1s. an acre.

The Waitapu Block, of 2,000 acres, for 2s. 6d. an acre, but which I think I will be able to reduce to 2s. by-and-by.

And the Opuiti Block, of 150 acres, at 2s. 6d. an acre.

The £50 paid away at Ohaeawai is distributed for the four blocks of land named under:—Te Huia Block, 4,000 acres, £10; Unuhia Block, 6,000 acres, £20; Opuiti Block, 2,000 acres, £10; Waitapu Block, 150 acres, £10: total, £50.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS McDONNELL, Land Purchase Commissioner.
H. T. Clarke.

Hokianga Land Purchases. Auckland; 19th December, 1874,
SIR,—

I have the honor to report the purchase in the North, from the 3rd November to date, of the blocks of land a list of which I attach.

I find the natives are holding land firmer than on my former visits, and show considerable disinclination to sell, owing to the opposition offered to the Government by private parties: not that many of the Europeans are real purchasers; they oppose the Government on principle, trusting a day may come when, the present laws being done away with, they may be able to make their own terms with the Maoris.

I have not urged the natives to sell, but, on the contrary, assume a reluctance to purchase.

The lands secured on this last trip are a good average lot, closing in former purchases, and generally well situated.

Lands in the District of Whangarei are of a first-rate quality, but held at prices far beyond what it would be prudent for Government to give; but there are a few blocks near the town of which I expect to have the offer at from 2s. to 3s. per acre: at these-figures they would be reasonable, This, district generally is the best and most flourishing I have seen in the North; but I must here mention that I consider the Upper Wairoa and Mangakahia Districts as thoroughly suitable for special settlements.

There are but few large blocks of land in the North unpurchased. I think about 200,000 acres of eligible land can yet be secured by judicious negotiation: the progress will be slow owing, to the blocks being small.

I have, &c.,

E. T. BRISSENDEN.

Objection to Survey of Otangaroa and Patoa. Auckland, 29th December, 1874.
SIR,—

I beg to inform you that I have learned by correspondence forwarded by Mr. K. M. Williams, that an objection is raised to the survey of Otangaroa and Te' Patoa by the chiefs Hongi Hika and Paora Ururoa, on the grounds that deposits upon these lands were paid to Turenui Naihi, Tamora, and Hohepa te Taha, without their knowledge or approval. I should like to hear from you on this subject, as nothing so tends to render transactions abortive as, attempts to get hold of two or three owners without the consent of the rest. In such a case natives consider that an effort is being made to take an individual advantage of them.

Rumours have also reached me that in sundry purchases reserves are being made by the Natives under agreement that, when all arrangements are completed, they are to dispose of them to private individuals. This would amount to the fact that the pick of the lands would be reserved at first and then pass into the hands of private persons, while all the refuse would become the property of the Government.

I have also a report from the Inspector of Surveys in which he complains that, in consequence of your action, Mr. Stephens has been detained at Mangakahia for fifteen days, for which he, of course, charges; that you informed him that the Wairoa survey could not yet be gone on with; and yet that a few days after you put on another surveyor.

On all these points I shall be glad if you will give me a clear and explanatory statement.

I have, &c.,

D. McLEAN.

SIR,—

I have the honor, to forward you a memorandum report of lands negotiated by me for the General Government from March, 1874, to date, showing price per acre, actual moneys advanced on each block, and area so far as known.

I have also the honor to submit to you a list of 1 blocks for which I am now in treaty with the owners.

The surveys of the blocks have been pushed forward with great-vigour by Percy Smith, Esq., chief assistant of Inspector of Surveys.

At the rate at which the work is now progressing the whole of the blocks will be finished before the end of the summer.

I have, &c.,

BLOCKS under NEGOTIATION.

MANGONUI O WAI, of about 15,000 acres, now under survey by request of owners. This I believe to be the best block of-land in the Hokianga District.

Whangape, 21,000 acres, surveyed and through the Court. Much of the land on the rivers and creeks is open country and open bush land of very 'good quality; about 7,000 acres splendid kauri bush.

Pakiri. The balance of this block, 12,000 acres, I hope to conclude almost immediately. 20,000 acres purchased in March last.

Tihitihi Block, north of Whangarei. Mostly volcanic mixed bush land, estimated at 11,000 acres.

Hokianqa Land Purchase Transactions. Auckland, 13th January, 1875.

SIR,—

Having been requested by the Donald McLean to send in an account of the different blocks of land North that I have been dealing for, I have the honor to forward the enclosed list of lands, with the advances that have been made upon them, which, I think, will be found to be correct.

With respect to the disputes about Otangaroa and the Patoa Blocks, I have the honor to state the following:—

On my arrival at Whangaroa, Mr. Clark, the surveyor, informed me he had been cautioned by Mr. Kelly not to survey Otangaroa and Patoa, as the natives had told him that any one surveying these lands would be shot; but Mr. Clark told me that such could not be the case, as Mr. Kelly was negotiating the same lands, for private parties. Before I left Whangaroa, a Mr. Simpson called upon me to say he had been sent by Mr. Kelly to survey these lands, and he showed me letters that he said were from Mr. Kelly to the natives. I feel myself convinced that no opposition would have been offered to the survey unless the natives had thought, or had been led to suppose, they would get a better price than that offered by the Government.

I requested Mr. Simpson to return, and not attempt to survey the lands in question; and I left Whangaroa under the impression that the surveys for the Government would not be interfered with.

There are other blocks of land beside those mentioned by me that are being negotiated for by Mr. Brissenden and Charles Nelson, concerning a few of which I have had something to do, but I have on this paper confined myself to those blocks in which I was directly concerned.

I have, &c.,

THOS. MCDONNELL,
Land Purchase Officer.

Major Green, General Government Agent.

For remarks, see paper attached to this list of lands marked A.

A.—PEKAPEKARAU, WHAEEKAHAKAHA, and OPOUTEKE.

THE 2s. 6d. per acre for these lands belong to the first arrangement agreed to; and the money advanced, with a trifling addition, is to be expended at that rate; but the remaining acres are to be at the rate of 1s. 3d. per acre.

One (Rev.—Baker's claim), comprised in two blocks, has been arranged for the sum of £160; I had much difficulty in settling this long-vexed and old Native land claim. I had to make presents to individuals, but these are included in the sum I have mentioned. One contains some very fine well-watered land, suitable for settlement.

Tutamoe and Kairara Blocks contain and include the blocks Taimahue and Totarapoka. The two last mentioned blocks have also been reduced in price, from 2s. and 2s. 6d. per acre to 1s. 3d. per acre; but the money given in advance on these two blocks (£40) is to be expended on the land, at the old rate of 2s. and 2s. 6d. per acre. With this trifling exception, the price for the whole is arranged for 1s. 3d. per acre. The land is now being surveyed.

THOS. MCDONNELL, Land Purchase Agent.

No. 8a. Sir D. McLEAN to the DISTRICT OFFICER, Bay of Islands.

Memorandum for District Officer, Bay of Islands. 20th January, 1875.

A QUESTION of disputed title exists with regard to two blocks of land near Whangaroa, called Otangaroa and Te Patoa; the rival claimants being respectively the Ngapuhi, Hongi Hika's tribe, and the Ngatipo, Wiremu Maihi's [unclear: tibe]. Messrs. Brissenden and McDonnell entered into negotiations for the purchase of these lands, and orders were given for the survey, which, however, was not carried out. You will find in H.A.L.A., 1873 (see 21 et seq.) That you should have made inquiry into the title before the survey could take place; but from the brief time during which you have held the position of District Officer, it was not to be expected that you could have attended to this duty in this particular case. In future, however, in all instances where Natives are about to bring their lands under investigation before the Native Land Court, or intend to dispose of them to the Government, you will be required to make a full preliminary inquiry, so as to be able to state whether the survey can be proceeded with without affecting the peace of the district.

"The Native Lands Act, 1873," so clearly lays down the duties of District Officers, that I am only to direct your notice to its provisions, and to request you to give them your particular attention.

I have also to point out to you the necessity of your making yourself acquainted with all land transactions in the district, and also with the surplus lands that have reverted to the Crown, so as to protect the interests of the public in the event of an attempt being made to reclaim the latter, to redispense of them either to the Government or to private individuals, or to deal with them in any other manner.

DONALD MCLEAN.

W. Webster, Esq., Bay of Islands.

No. 8b.Lieut.-Colonel McDONNELL to Lieut. Colonel ST. JOHN.

Auckland, February, 1875.
SIR,—

I have the honor to beg that, you will lay this letter before the Hon. the Native Minister, for his information and consideration.

I have been for sometime past negotiating lands North, at Ahipara, Mangakahia, and elsewhere. I have made considerable purchases. In all transactions I have been careful to avoid cause for dissatisfaction; and the system I have pursued has, in many instances, been the means of healings old disagreements.

I have arranged the Mangakahia lands with every hope of being able, to complete them with a considerable saving of money—about £2,000—but this has to be ratified by other natives.

If my negotiations are left to me to finish, this money will be saved; but I fear that, if they are handed over for others to conclude, the former agreement of 2s. 6d. per acre will have to be carried out in place of the present understanding: this will effect all lands in that neighbourhood.

During my last visit to Ahipara, I bought a very fine block of land, next to the Victoria Valley purchase, for 3s. an acre, called Orowahana. There is a very barren piece of land adjoining, called Epakauri, that has also been bought for the Government at 4d. an acre. As these two blocks join each other, the Natives intend to increase the acreage of the good block by taking in a good slice of the worthless country.

I therefore suggest that I be permitted to finish the purchase of this block, as well as the lands I have negotiated for at Mangakahia, including the Tutamde and Kairara forest of timber. I know all the Native owners, and the proper boundaries to be observed. Many of the lands alluded to above have been surveyed for many months past, and would Have been out of hand now but for delays of the Native Land Court.

I have, &c.,

THOS. McDONNELL.

Colonel St. John, Private Secretary, Native Office.

Maunganui Survey opposed. Maketu, 18th March, 1875.

SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that the Government have received a letter from Parore complaining of the survey of the Maunganui Block. The Government do not wish the survey of any land to be proceeded with in the face of such opposition as there appears to be in this case.

You will, therefore, on receipt of this letter, without delay instruct the surveyors to withdraw from the block, and will, until the dispute is satisfactorily settled among the natives, suspend the negotiations for the purchase of the same.

I have, &c., D. McLEAN.

Land Purchase Transactions Herd's Point, 24th June, 1875.

SIR,—

I have the honor to forward you a report of my transactions as Land Purchase Agent for the General Government for the year ending this 24th June.

I also enclose a report from Percy Smith, Esq., on the quality of the several blocks surveyed under his supervision which may be of use to the Government.

I have, &c., E. T. BRISSENDEN.

The Hon. D. McLean,

Wellington.

Enclosure 5.

I have considered it advisable to leave the price of the above-mentioned blocks an open question until it is convenient for the District Officer to accompany me, when I have promised the Native owners to visit the ground and there conclude the matter in the presence of most of the Natives interested, though it is understood the land is not to average over 2s. per acre.

In going over the district map with Percy Smith, we have been able to estimate the area, and think there will be over 100,000 acres.

I think the blocks here mentioned of considerable importance, inasmuch as the land is above the average quality, and they close up present spaces, which would give large unbroken tracts of country to the Government.

The expense of survey would be very small in most cases, as two or three sides of each block are bounded by Government land.

MY DEAR MR. BRISSENDEN,—

In accordance with your request I enclose you herewith a rough description of the blocks now under negotiation by you.

In some few cases I have been obliged to trust to information derived from the surveyors, but generally speaking the information is from my own observations. Trusting that it may be of service to you,

Waipoua Block, about 41,000 Acres.—Two-thirds forest; the soil generally excellent, a continuation of the volcanic soil of the Maunganui Block. Part of this block is a good deal broken, but some level and extensive flats are found on the plateau along the eastern boundary. Contains a good deal of kauri along the Waipoua and other streams.

Waimamaku Block, about 15,000 Acres.—Soil good; nearly all forest, but broken. The Waimamaku Valley would carry some twenty or twenty-five families of settlers, where the land is level and of easy access from the coast. A little but not much kauri on this block.

No. 11. Mr. J. W. PREECE, Land Purchase Officer, to the Hon. the NATIVE MINISTER.

Hokianga—Land Purchases. Auckland, 3rd July, 1875.
SIR,—

I have the honor to report that I returned, from Hokianga on the 1st instant The Court has finished its sitting, and all the blocks which were surveyed have passed through, excepting the Waipoua and Maunganui, which will be heard shortly. There were passed through at the Hokianga Court twenty-four blocks of land, containing in all about, 67,000 acres, the titles to the whole of which have been completed, and all the deeds signed, with the exception of the Uhiroa and Puhata Blocks, eighteen signatures to which have yet to be obtained, and the Waimamaku Block the interests of two dissentients in which have yet to be defined. These, however, may be said, to be as good as finished.

With regard to the Uhiroa and Puhata Blocks, fifty-nine out of seventy-seven have signed, the others being absent. I advised Mr. Brissenden to pay those present one half of the balance of the purchase money, reserving the other half for the signatures of the other eighteen. The balance in hand is far more than the share of those absent, but, we thought it advisable to keep as much as possible, so as to make it the interest of those who have signed to assemble the absentees. We have arranged to meet the owners at Mangonui, on the 21st July, where they undertake to have the absentees present. I do not believe that every one will be present on the day named, and I would respectfully request to be informed whether, in the event of any being absent, I should take a Resident Magistrate or Judge of the Court with me to obtain their signatures. Those whom I expect to be absent are two old men who live at Muriwhenua, North Cape, and are too feeble to come to Mangonui. My reason for again alluding to this matter is, that I am not certain whether in Mr. Clarke's reply to my telegram it is intended that I should get the signatures of the absentees in the presence of a Judge or not. The telegram says, "Get their signatures from time to time as you are able." Section 60 of the Act is very explicit on the point that the Judge (not Resident Magistrate) must explain to each individual, and I should not feel justified in acting contrary to it without definite instructions, as the question of title may be affected thereby. I leave here for Mangonui on the 19th instant so there will be time to let me have instructions, before then.

I have not sent in a return of any purchases, as they are all included in Mr. Brissenden's, return, he having paid the purchase moneys; but I have been assisting him in all the, blocks, as well as those particularly mentioned in my instructions.

With regard to the purchases generally, I feel that I would not be doing right, after all that has been said in the Provincial Council and elsewhere in reference to these Northern transactions, did I not state what from my own observation I find to be the facts. I may say I entered on the task of assisting in the completion of these matters fully expecting to meet with considerable difficulty and dissatisfaction among the natives. However, I am pleased to be able to say that I never yet concluded the negotiations for the purchase of any lands with more satisfaction than I have felt in the closing of these purchases, or with less difficulty; and it the more remarkable inasmuch as the lands were not in one block, but in some fifty, comprising altogether, about 300,000 acres, owned; by different sets of natives. In the whole of these blocks of land which have passed and are Completed, there was not a single instance where the natives failed to carry out the original agreement as to price, or where they attempted to repudiate the various deposits paid on the lands. To my mind there can be no better proof than this fact of the straightforwardness of these purchases; and moreover, there was in the whole of these transactions but one instance where the Court did not confirm the title, of the persons to whom the deposits had been paid, and in that case (the Omahuta block), although the Native, Wi Tana Papahia, to whom a portion of the money had been paid, failed to satisfy the Court of his claim, yet from all I have heard the land would never have been allowed to have been surveyed had he not got the deposit which he did. The successful claimants in the Court were the natives to whom the other portion of the deposit had been paid, and after defeating Wi Tana in Court they shared the balance of the purchase money with, him, or rather gave him a portion of it.

In reference to the other statement that the natives had been paid in orders on storekeepers and publicans, it is entirely without foundation, for the Natives in each case admitted, without any hesitation, to having received in cash the various deposits, as they were called to their recollection. There is no doubt that the natives have in several of the blocks considerably curtailed the extent from what was originally intended, and that in some cases they have been very dishonest among themselves in the division of the money, and that there may be dissatisfaction among some few individuals as to the share of the money; but that is a matter it is impossible for any one to remedy but themselves. The only course we could adopt was, to pay the money before all the parties, and let them decide who should take it, and thereby leave the responsibility of the division with them, for, as the interests are not equal, the agent could not take upon himself to make a division.

With regard to Waipoua and Maunganui, I may say these matters are as good as settled, and only await the sitting of the Court to conclude them. I have seen both parties and have arranged with them to, have a Court held early in August. Parore at first wished to delay, the matter until the summer, but I Persuaded him to agree, as it could cause no inconvenience to him, the Court being held near to his own place, and the other parties are desirous of getting the matter settled; besides which, I think it desirable in every way that it should be closed as soon as practicable

In order to obviate the inconvenience of having a sitting of the Court in the wet weather I have arranged to have the Court held at a place where there, will be ample house accommodation for as many natives as will be there. It will be necessary to supply the natives with some provisions, as the Court will be held away from the kainga, and they have lost a large quantity of food with the recent floods. The cost of this will not be great, as the Court will not last much more than a week.

With reference to the supplies given to the natives at Hokianga, Mr. Brissenden paid the accounts, and I have certified them.

Both the Roroa and Parore's people have requested me to ask that Mr. Monro hear the Maunganui and Waipoua cases. The Court will be held in Judge Symond's district; yet I think he would be glad to have the assistance of another Judge, as the question is one of great importance, and the title to some extent complicated, although the parties are all willing to abide by the decision of the Court. I shall be in Auckland until the 19th, when I leave for Mangonui.

I have, &c., J. W. PREECE.

The Hon. Donald McLean,
K.C.M.G. Native Minister, Wellington.

No. 12 Mr. J. W. PREECE, Auckland, to the Hon. the NATIVE MINISTER.

Land Purchase Report. Auckland, 1st June, 1876.
SIR,—

I have the honor to report, for your information, the progress made in the land purchases within the district under my charge, namely, that to the north of Auckland, since the 1st of July last.

The lands handed to me to complete the purchase of (namely, Mr. Brissenden's incomplete transaction) were fifty-two blocks, estimated to contain in the aggregate 377,529 acres; of these blocks thirty-six are now surveyed, and contain 261,629 acres, leaving sixteen blocks yet unsurveyed, estimated to contain 115,900 acres. Of these latter there are now, seven blocks being surveyed, and will shortly be completed. The survey of the other nine blocks is delayed in consequence of disputes among the owners, most of which, however, I hope to settle as soon as an opportunity offers of meeting the different disputants together. During the first few months, after taking over these matters, I was unable to show any apparent progress in the completion of any of the transactions, owing in a great measure to the fact of there having been only one sitting of the Native Lands Court to the North of Auckland—namely, at Ahipara, in November, and at that sitting the claims were all adjourned without any progress having been made; the time, however, was profitably occupied in getting matters in train for the Courts, and in furthering negotiations as much as I could.

During the month of January I concluded the purchase of the Waimamaku Block, containing 27,200 acres. Some of the owners of this block had refused to sell at the time the title was investigated, in June previously; but eventually came to terms.

On the occasion, of the sitting of the Native Lands Court at Kaihu, in. January, I was enabled to complete the purchase of the following blocks, namely, Opouteke, Kairara Pekapekarau, Waerekaha-kaha, One, Waipoua, and Maunganui, containing in the aggregate 155,400 acres. No Courts have been held since that date, or I should have been able to have completed the purchase of over 50,000 acres more out of the 77,400 acres, the surveys of which are completed, and only await the holding of Courts to complete the title to them. The delay will however, enable me to have a larger area ready for investigation of title when the Courts do sit, although it causes my present list of completed transactions to be of a less area than it otherwise would have been.

During the months of March and April I paid several visits to the Whangarei District, and put matters in train there preparatory to getting the blocks in that district brought before the, Court. While there I purchased a small block held under Crown grant containing 882 acres, and named Ngatahuna. There are only three blocks in that district, the negotiations for which are all in a forward state, namely, the Kioreroa, Te Tihitihi, and Opuhete Blocks.

During the present month I have completed the purchase of the Papuroua Block, containing 1,220 acres, and so far completed the purchase of the Taungako as to have a deed fully executed by all the surviving owners. Two persons have yet to be appointed by the Court to succeed to the interests of two deceased owners, and a Court is to be held on the 4th July for the purpose. The area of this last-mentioned block is 2,115 acres.

By the foregoing it will be seen that, out of the 377,529 acres comprising transactions incomplete in July last, there have been completed since the 1st of January, 183,820 acres, in addition to which is the Ngatahuna Block, which is not comprised in the former area, being a recently offered block, the area of which is 882 acres, thus making a total of 184,702 acres, at a cost, exclusive of surveys and incidental expenses, of £12,815 6s. 6d., being a fraction over 1s. 4½d. per acre all round; deeds of conveyance for which have been fully signed and completed, and with, two exceptions, registered.

Of the 193,709 acres, the purchase of which is yet incomplete, there will be about 100,000 acres surveyed and ready for the investigation of title within the next two months, immediately after which the titles can be completed unless any unforeseen difficulties arise, which will reduce the list of transactions now on hand to a comparatively small area.

I have in the foregoing only given a bare statement of the progress of the negotiations for the completion of the titles to the blocks now under purchase.

The Inspector of Surveys reported fully last year as to the quality of the lands, so that it is unnecessary for me to go into the subject, as he is possessed of more detailed information on the subject than I am. However, from what I have seen, I am of opinion that these purchases will form a very valuable estate

I have, &c., J. W. PREECE.

Native Minister, Wellington.

Whangarei—To Purchase Land for Nova Scotian Settlement. Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 7th November, 1853.

SIR,—

By command of His Excellency the Governor, I have the honor to request that you will immediately proceed to Whangarei to negotiate purchase of as extensive a block of land as possible, including a location fit for the Highlanders, recently arrived in the Colony, but you are not to complete the purchase until it has received the approval of the Surveyor-General, with respect to the price paid, the reserves made, and other particulars.

I beg leave to add, for your information, that a clause will be inserted in the deed of purchase reserving for native purposes ten per cent of the future proceeds which may be realised from the sale of the land.

Whangarei—Report of Land Negotiations in that District. Native Secretary's Office, Auckland; 12th December, 1853.

SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that I proceeded to Whangarei, in compliance with the directions contained in your letter of the 7th ultimo, and to report the result of my negotiations for the information of His Excellency the Governor.

Having first ascertained the nature of the native claims in that district to be clearly defined (the Parawhau, or original tribe of Whangarei, occupying and claiming the southern bank, and the Ngapuhi the northern bank of the Whangarei, but both parties being connected with, and, in a great measure, controlled by Tirarau, the chief of the Wairoa River in Kaipara) I lost no time in repairing thither to gain his consent to the object, of my mission, which I obtained in general terms over any tract of country for which I could make arrangements with the more immediate owners, excepting alone a block between the Whangarei and the Wairoa, which Tirarau and Manihera, the resident owners, have determined to retain for themselves, on the ground that this alone remained, they having sold the rest of their land to Mr. Busby, of the Bay of Islands, which lands, they stated, were at the disposal of the Government.

Although at that time I was not aware whether this block (marked No. 1 in the annexed plan) included a site for the Highlanders, but, bearing in mind His Excellency's directions to acquire as much land as possible, I negotiated with part of the owners and obtained their consent to the sale of a block called after a river running through the centre of it—the Mangawhai—abutting on Mr. Busby's claim on the North, and the surplus of W. S. Grahame's claim on; the Otamatea on the West, thus having a frontage to the East and West Coasts on two sides and the River of Whangarei on the North, which, including the above mentioned claims, will not fall short of 200,000 acres. To have proceeded too hastily with the purchase of such a large tract of country might have led to difficulty afterwards, I therefore wrote to the remaining claimants, whom I had not seen, who reside at the Otamatea, requesting them to hold a meeting preparatory to my going to them at a future time; and I also requested a party of the Highlanders who had arrived to explore this tract of country and ascertain whether it met their wants, while I myself, in the meantime, proceeded with the negotiations for the block marked No. 2 on the annexed plan, which the Highlanders had expressed their wish to obtain as a settlement, failing my ability to acquire a more desirable location.

Obstacles incurred.

The principal men among the owners of this block are William Pohe, Stephen Hari, and Whare, all adherents of John Heke, during the war in the North, together with others who had left the proximity of the Europeans for the inland districts after the war. The antipathy which these men professed for the Europeans's cattle, their scruples about sacred places, and extravagant ideas of the value of their land, being witness to the frequent transfers of property between the settlers at Whangarei, caused me at first to have but faint hopes of success; and it was a considerable time before I could gain their consent to the sale of this block of Fourteen thousand acres (14,000 acres) in the immediate vicinity of the settlers already located there. My next care was to perambulate the boundaries, and I had nearly settled every point at issue, the price asked being Seven hundred pounds (£700), when messengers arrived from Kaikohi, bearing two letters from Hariett, widow of John Heke, using all her influence to prevent them selling any land whatever.

After several days discussion, I at last persuaded the natives to be directed by their own good sense, and not be led away by the Kaikohi people, and our negotiations stood again on the same footing.

I was most anxious to comply with that part of my instructions which related to the location for the Highlanders, and as the party who had left me had not returned, I concluded that they had not found a locality on the other block first mentioned, which was suitable to their wants, and I accordingly so far entertained the proposal of the purchase of the 14,000 aces, as to request the chiefs to follow me to Auckland, to learn the decision of the Government on their offer.

Since my return to Auckland this morning, I have seen the party of Highlanders who have explored the land comprised within the Mangawhai Block, and have expressed their wish to locate the present immigrants in the valley of the Ruakaka, which is situated in Mr. Busby's claim, in preference to the 14,000 acres offered by Pohe, &c., and I would have arranged the extent of the reserve for the natives living on the Mangawhai Block, and the amount of the payment, which will bear no proportion to the price asked for the land on the North side of the river, had I sooner been made aware of the ultimate choice of the Highlanders, as I apprehend no difficulty in the matter, a settlement in that locality being favourably received by all the natives with whom I conversed on the subject; the only stipulation being that portions sufficient for the few natives residing on the land be reserved for their use. The arrangement of these questions will occasion my paying another visit to the spot, which I might have avoided had the Highlanders sooner made me aware of their ultimate choice.

I have, &c.,

Interpreter.

Whangarei—Purchase of Land recommended. Surveyor-General's Office, 14th December, 1853.
SIR,—

I have the honor to report that I have ascertained from Mr. Johnson that the Natives are willing to sell about 240,000 acres of land at Whangarei for the sum of £600, and that the body of Highlanders desire a part of it for location. I have the honor to suggest that Mr. Johnson be at once despatched to that locality with the sum of money required, and that, in order to render him independent of the delays occasioned in the small sailing vessels trading on the coast, that he be authorized to hire two additional men and a whaleboat.

Whangarei—Respecting Land Purchases at Mangawhai and Whangarei. Pakiri, 31st December, 1853.

SIR—

I have the honor to address you, for the information of His Excellency the Governor, on the subject of the block marked No. 1, or Mangawhai, in my last report on the negotiations for the purchase of land in the district of Whangarei, and on which I am now engaged by the further directions I received from His Excellency Sir George Grey, and regret to inform you that the extinction of the native claims are fraught with more difficulty, and the price required will be much greater, than I had anticipated at the date of my last report.

Since that time the Ngati Whatua tribe of Auckland have been on a visit to Kaipara, for the purpose of dividing the payment of Hikurangi, and the selling of this district has been entrusted to them by the Kaipara natives, and they have, during my absence in Auckland, divided the block of Two hundred and forty thousand (240,000) acres, alluded to in my last report, in four separate blocks, and have entrusted the disposal of the same to different parties. I have, however, at last succeeded in inducing them to join two of these blocks together for sale, containing about (60,000) Sixty thousand acres, but before closing the purchase in conformity with my original instructions, I beg to submit the amount of payment stipulated, and the description of the land (in which there are no reserves required) for the approval of the Surveyor-General, the sum of One thousand pounds (£1,000) now demanded being so much more than I estimated would be required when I last had the honor of communicating with that officer. I would further add that I have used every exertion to reduce the price, but the claimants are so numerous, 100 of whom are here assembled, belonging to the tribes and chiefs named in the margin, Tribe or Hapu—Te Uri o Hau, Paikea, William Stephenson, Makoare Hawaiki, Ngaitahuhu Tribe, Arama Karaka, Pereneko, Wetere Pou, Puriri, Te Rauriki Tribe, Matiu, Pairama, Tamati, Ngati Mauku Tribe, Paratena Taupuhi, Matiki Kuha, Te Awaiti, Ngati Kauae Tribe, Te Korone, Hemara, Te Wai Aruhe Tribe, Manuku, Te Whe, Te Uri Kohu, Tribe, Te Awa, Pehimana, Te Taiona, Te Uri o Katea Tribe, Te Uranga, Te Kiri, Parihoru, Ngati Kai Whare Tribe Himeona, Waitoitoe, Ngati Kaba Tribe, Hohaia, Te Uri Pake Tribe, Kerepe, Ngati Wai Maori, Te Awe.

that I do not think the land will be obtained for less money at a future time. The Chief Tirarau claimed One hundred pounds on the sale of the block originally proposed, on account of a battle fought by the Nga Puhi at the Ikaranganui, but as this place is not included in the boundaries of the land as offered at present, and the other claimants and owners of the land denying his right to a man, I have thought it expedient not to entertain this claim, but to let the discussion of it rest on the purchase of the Ikaranganui, one of the two remaining portions of the four partitions of the 240,000 before mentioned, and on which the battle-field, from which the claim arises, is situated. This other block has been entrusted for disposal to Kauwau, Tinana, Keene and others, at Auckland, and is situated immediately behind Mangawhai. Should His Excellency be pleased to direct the completion of this purchase, a further sum of Six hundred pounds will be required, in addition to the Four hundred pounds (£400) which I have here available for this purchase. Upon return of the messenger who conveys this letter, if the Government should approve of the payment of the whole amount or the £400, which I have here, I will at once proceed to complete the purchase by definitely marking the boundaries and obtaining the signatures to the deed of sale on the spot.

I have, &c.,

Whangarei—Purchase of Land in this District. Whangarei, 6th January, 1854.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report to you, for the information of His Excellency, that I have this day completed the negotiations for the purchase of a further block of Sixty thousand (60,000) acres in this district for the sum of Six hundred pounds (£600) and two (2) horses, and beg to submit the same for the consideration of the Government.

Boundaries.

This block commences at the Wakatarariki, the northern boundary of the block submitted for consideration in my report of the 31st December last, and extends along the coast to the south shore of the Harbour Whangarei and with an average breadth in land of ten miles, and includes both the valleys of the Ruakaka and Waipu Rivers applied for by the recently-arrived Highland immigrants. The whole of this block is well wooded and watered, and leads to further available tracts of country on the west coast of this island.

The difficulty I had to contend with in this block was the confining the natives into a reasonable reserve in the valley of the Ruakaka, as they insisted on keeping the most valuable tract back for themselves, to which I could not consent, for Mr. McLeod, one of the leading men of the Highlanders, having arrived, and our inspecting the valley and district together, he quite agreed with me that, unless the natives could be confined to a limited reserve, the valley could not be made available as their settlement. After much discussion, however, the natives acceded to my idea of the quantity they required for their use, and a reserve was finally agreed upon of one mile frontage to the Ruakaka, and running back to the hills in parallel lines. The sellers of this block are not the same parties who formerly received a payment on account of this land by Mr. Busby, but are principally men who in the present peaceful times have returned to occupy the lands of their forefathers, Mr. Busby's purchase having been rather made from the great chiefs possessing a feudal right over the land than by the extinguishment of the rights of the inheritors of the soil.

Mr. Busby's Claims.

In the absence of any instructions to recognize Mr. Busby's claims I would not have entered into the discussion of them with the natives had such a course not been forced upon me by the production of letters from Mr. Busby urging the natives not to allow me to obtrude upon his land. I am happy to state that these letters had no effect upon the natives. As soon as I told them that the Government were prepared to satisfy their claims, if they gave up their land, they were perfectly satisfied.

To give a permanency to these negotiations, pending the decision of His Excellency, I left the sum of Two hundred pounds (£200) in the hands of the natives, taking from them a deed of conveyance of the land to the Crown as a security, but with the distinct understanding in the event of His Excellency the Governor not approving of the purchase, that the money be returned—a course which, while it binds the Natives in the meantime to their bargain, does not in any way compromise the Government; and which course I trust will meet with your sanction.

The principal owners of this block are enumerated in the deed enclosed herewith, which is executed by the three principal chiefs.

I have, &c., JOHN GRANT JOHNSON,
Interpreter.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary, &c., &c.,

Forwarding Deed of purchase, and Reporting on Mangawhai, Waipu, and Ruakaka. Whangarei, 20th March, 1854
SIR—

I have the honor to enclose the Deeds of conveyance from the Aborigines to the Crown, of the three purchases named in the margin, which will be now finally completed, if His Excellency the officer administering the Government should be pleased to approve of the measures which I beg to propose for arranging the obstructions which still attend them. It will be observed that I have included in the receipts attached to the Deed of the Mangawhai, the additional sum of Sixty pounds (£60), the outlay of which I reported in my letter of the 3rd instant. It became necessary to settle this demand of a chief named Paratene Taupuhi, who disputed a part of the boundary, after all the details had been arranged by a Committee of the Chiefs, and had nearly prevailed on them to break off the negotiations; but on consideration of the said sum of Sixty pounds, he gave a range of valuable kauri timber, part of which was included in the original boundary agreed upon, and part in addition of about 1,000 acres in extent, the particular portion alluded to being shown in the enclosed sketch of these purchases.

I had the honor to bring under your notice in my preliminary report of the 31st December last, the claim of the Chief Tirarau, for the sum of One hundred pounds (£100), over this block, as I then stated, for a battle fought between the Ngapuhi and Ngatiwhatua tribes at Ikaranganui, but which claim could not be sustained, as that place was not included in the present purchase; and I now regret to state that Tirarau urges the same claim, on account of a canoe upsetting on the bar of the Mangawhai river, in which a relative of his was drowned; a chief named Hikaotote, a brother of Parore.

The Ngatiwhatua tribes, the owners of Mangawhai, remonstrated with apparent justice, that as this catastrophe was occasioned by the sea, they would not submit to their land being taxed with it, and absolutely refused to sell their land subject to the condition of this payment, and I hoped that Tirarau would have relinquished this unreasonable demand; but, on the contrary, on my arrival at Whangarei he came over from the Wairoa to see me, and urged his claim with great firmness, threatening to burn the house of any settler who might go to the land, unless his claim is satisfied. From the well known character of this chief, I have no doubt but that he would attempt to put his threat into execution; and I would therefore bring this claim to His Excellency's favourable consideration, more on the ground of its involving the question of the peace of the country, than because of its equity. Notwithstanding this exaction on the part of Tirarau, which proceeds more from a species of native pride than from avarice, he is a chief well disposed towards the Government and the Europeans generally, and incongruous however as these circumstance may appear, he has taken the lead of the party in favour of selling their lands to the Government, and has offered a valuable tract of country for sale, extending into the centre of one of the finest districts in the colony, and which will be the means, I hope, of its eventually being all purchased; his influence is paramount in whichever way it is directed in this part of the island, and his good offices being obtained in our favour will materially assist the more firm establishment of the authority of the Government in these newly acquired districts, where the natives are not in such an advanced state of civilization, or so attached to the Government, as in many other parts of the colony.

I would next proceed to report upon the settlement of the two purchases named from the rivers which intersect them, the Ruakaka and the Waipu, which comprise a portion of the enormous extent of country claimed by Mr. Busby, and inhabited by that party of the aborigines who opposed the Government in the war in the North. The attempts of Mr. Busby to frustrate my operations, together with the efforts of a society which exists among the natives, at the head of whom is the widow of John Heke, for the purpose of preventing the sale of land to the Europeans, caused me much trouble and anxiety, and, as it may not be uninteresting, I beg to enclose a copy of a circular letter of the said society at Kaikohe addressed to the chiefs of Whangarei, which, by the native mind is considered a very talented exhortation, and which met with great applause when read at the several meetings of the claimants; and, had I adopted the usual and safer method of assembling all the claimants before making my payment, the influence of the before mentioned agencies would have been apt to have terminated in preventing the sale of the land; but, bearing in mind the strong desire which His Excellency had expressed to have lands obtained for the settlers, I felt assured that the Government would approve of my obtaining this tract of country, even at some further outlay, than of my relinquishing the attempt from the apparent difficulties which appeared to surround it; and, actuated by this principle, I accepted the offers of the chiefs who first came forward to sell the Ruakaka, and paid to them the sum of One hundred pounds (£100) for their claims, reserving the sum of Two hundred and fifty pounds (£250) to satisfy the other parties with whom I had not yet come to terms. This decisive step showed the opposition that, when the real owners of land are disposed to sell to the Government, it is not to be intimidated by the clamour of disaffected factions exercising very little, if any, ownership at all over the lands sought to be purchased; and, with the assistance of the chiefs Mate and Parihoru, whom, in anticipation of these attempts to frustrate my object, I had prevailed on to accompany me to Whangarei from Mahurangi and Kaipara, I was enabled finally to overcome these obstacles and bring this purchase to a conclusion, on the conditions that a certain portion of the block reserved by the natives at the Ruakaka be purchased by the Government for the sum of Seventy pounds (£70), that portion being the private property of the chief Mate, who resides at Kaipara, and which he does not choose to leave for the use of the Ruakaka natives; and as, being a new purchase, I propose to make it the subject of a separate communication.

With reference to the Waipu I adopted a similar course, and having first ascertained by a careful enquiry that the chief Te Wiremu and party were the principal owners, I paid to them an instalment of Two hundred pounds (£200), they on their part undertaking to satisfy the claims of the chiefs

Tirarau and George King Tahua. Two other parties of claimants next appeared, and, their claims having been investigated and admitted to be just by the other parties, I paid to them a sum of One hundred pounds (£100), reserving the remaining Fifty pounds (£50) to meet any unforeseen difficulties which might arise.

On the 17th instant a general meeting of all the claimants connected with this block was held at Otaika, in Whangarei, and, although the payments which I had made to the various claimants met the approval of this meeting, the chiefs Tirarau and George King Tahua refused the share allotted to them by Te Wiremu's party, and are not contented with the Fifty pounds (£50) at my disposal, but demand a further sum of Fifty pounds (£50), and also a chief named Pirihi urges a further sum of Ten pounds (£10) on account of relatives massacred on the ground. I do not think the nature of their claims, which are liens on the ground on account of their relations who have been killed on it by the Ngatiwhatua, entitle them to more than the Fifty pounds (£50) which I have appropriated to this purpose; but they are powerful chiefs and measure the value of their claim by their power to enforce its payment, and, looking to the future peace and prosperity of this part of the country, as well as the influence which these chiefs are able to exert over the future further acquisition of land, I do not believe that the expenditure of these sums of money will ultimately prove a loss to the Crown; and I have the most solemn assurances from the chiefs at the meeting at Otaika, that, if the demands are complied with, the undisputed possession of the land will be obtained for ever. Taking this tract of country or 22 miles frontage to the sea, and extending back from 6 to 10 miles inland, at a very moderate calculation to contain 100,000 acres, the amount already advanced, as per enclosed schedule, together with the sum required to meet the outstanding claims and new purchases, to satisfy the claimants, will not quite increase the average cost of these three blocks to the sum of Five pence (5d.) per acre.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON,
Sub-Commissioner for purchase of Native Lands.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary, &c.

Enclosure 1.

Tautoro, February, 1854, Office, of Korongohi and Kuao.
O CHIEFS OF WHANGAREI,—

Let your deliberations be guided by wisdom, and do not let your thoughts be averse to our word. The reason we so address you is because we have fought together (against the Europeans) for the land, which was the reason of the message we sent by the Maremare. Let the hill of Manaia stand for ever. Let the hill at Whara remain untouched for ever: vessels are broken, money is lost, but the land does not fade away. If we were wishing this land for ourselves, you might be displeased with us, but we wish you to keep it for a hearth for your own fires. It is the possession of our land which makes us esteemed. Whether a child, a woman, or a man, if the land goes into the possession of the Europeans, we shall not be so regarded; one man may be esteemed, and another may not. If the land is not given away, even the lowest among us can till his ground, and obtain tobacco and clothes, and all the other articles of the Europeans; but there is nothing that can be obtained from them without payment, nothing at all. Perhaps to the chiefs they may give something. What else have we to depend upon? Therefore we say—hold fast the land,—bye-and-bye we shall find what value it is, as we have been told by the Europeans who formerly lived amongst us. All the sea birds return to the dry land to hatch their young under the cover of their wings. It was never intended that they should be brought forth on the sea—not at all. Likewise the vessels, they return to the shore, and obtain their freight, potatoes, and corn, and pumpkins: thus this description of canoe obtains its cargo. Therefore we say the land is more of importance than us: it is above us, and we are its children. Pohe thinks otherwise,—these sentiments are wrong in his idea. Therefore we say to you, do not be angry with Sydney: these opinions are the grounds of his conduct, good or bad—hold the land, hold it fast; therefore he says—

No. 7. Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Has purchased the Takahiwae Block. Land Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, August 2nd, 1854.
SIR,—

With reference to the 5th clause of your letter of instructions, dated the 18th of May, on the subject of native, reserves, I have the honor to inform you that I have purchased a tract of Fifteen hundred acres, having a frontage to a creek called the Takahiwae, in order that the land occupied by the natives at that place might be separated by that creek from the Government land.

Independently of these considerations, the water frontage to the creek affords a communication to the back country, without which it would not have been taken up by the settlers eventually.

The amount which I have paid is Seventy-five pounds (£75), and the Deed is enclosed herewith; and I have the honor to request that I may be relieved to that amount of the public moneys in my charge.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT. JOHNSON, District Commissioner.

Donald McLean, Esq.,

Land Commissioner.

Has paid Balance of Purchase Money of Mangawhai and Waipu. District Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, 2nd August, 1854.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report for your information that I have now paid to the natives the additional sums required to complete the purchases of Mangawhai and Waipu Blocks, recommended in my letter to the Colonial Secretary, dated 20th March, 1854, and approved by His Excellency the officer administering the Government, amounting to the sum of Two hundred and twenty pounds (£220). The receipt of Sixty pounds (£60), which was paid for an extension of the original boundaries is included in the deed of Mangawhai from Ngatrwhatua; and was forwarded by me to the Colonial Secretary under cover on the 20th March last. The sum of Ten pounds (£10), for extinguishing the claims of Te Pirihi on a portion of Waipu named Te Paritu, was paid by me at Auckland to a relative of his named Eru Toenga, and the document of the surrender of the said claims is filed in your office.

I now beg to enclose the deed of final extinction of the claims of the chiefs and their followers who are named in the margin, over Mangawhai and Waipu, for the sum of Two hundred pounds. Fifty pounds was issued to me at the time of the former payment in March last, and the remaining One hundred and fifty pounds from the amount of Two hundred and seventy pounds above alluded to.

Tirarau, Parore, Taurau, George King Tahua, Te Manihera, Toko, Karawai.

This document will complete the vouchers for the whole of the sums issued to me on account of Mangawhai, Waipu, and the Ruakaka, and I have accordingly to request a release from the charge of these sums of money.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, District Commissioner.

Donald McLean, Esq., J.P.,

Land Commissioner, Auckland.

North side, Whangarei—Natives have offered land for sale on the North side of the harbor. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 18th September, 1854.

SIR,—

Certain natives of Whangarei have offered lands for sale to the Government, situated on the North side of the harbor.

An undefined grant for four hundred and fourteen acres (414 acres) has been issued to Gilbert Mair, Esq. (and is now held by Messrs. Brown & Campbell) for the same locality, which grant includes boundaries containing an area of about Three thousand acres (3,000 acres), and the holders of the grant are reported to claim in the whole a tract estimated at Seven thousand acres (7,000 acres) in extent, in virtue of this grant for 414 acres.

This claim embraces a large portion of the most valuable water frontage of the harbor, and many natives own different spots in and also adjoining to the said land, which lands they are willing to dispose of to the Crown; and I beg therefore to suggest that it would be very conducive to the interests of the settlers, and just to the natives, if the limits were fixed of the land to which assignees of the original grantee are entitled; and beg therefore to suggest the propriety of this case being brought under the provisions of the Crown Titles Ordinance, previous to my entering into negotiations for the purchase of that part of the country.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, District Land Commissioner.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary,
&c., &c.

No. 10. Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON to the Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Has placed himself under direction of the Chief Commissioner. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 17th October, 1854.

SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that in compliance with your letter of the 26th April last, I placed myself under direction of Mr. Commissioner McLean, and shortly afterwards was directed by that officer to conduct the purchase of land in a district comprising the portion of this island to the north of the Waitemata river, and to establish myself in some central position for that purpose. I accordingly undertook this duty, and made several purchases in the neighborhoods of Mahurangi, Kaipara and Whangarei, and reported that Whangarei was the most central place for me to reside while conducting the land purchases in the northern district of this Province.

Untoward and unforeseen events having occurred at Taranaki requiring the Principal Commissioner's absence in the South, I was requested by him to leave the Northern district, to which I had been confined for nearly twelve months, and employ myself in completing certain negotiations commenced in the Waikato district; and I have now returned from an attempt to perform that service, which I regret to state has not been attended with success. The various complications of the land question in the Waikato country, and the excited state of a portion of the aborigines there, which circumstances have prevented my achieving the object of my visit, are explained in a report which I have addressed to Mr. Commissioner McLean; and I would beg most respectfully to state for the information of His Excellency the officer administering the Government that the occasional visit of officers of this department to a district will not be attended with great results, and that if tracts of country are desired by the Government in the "Waikato, a Commissioner will have to reside at least for some time amongst the Natives in that locality, to arrange their conflicting claims and disputes, and by patient attention to the adjustment of their real and imaginary grievances, dispel their erroneous ideas of the result of European colonization, and conciliate the adverse party, whose difference with the parties disposed to alienate their lands to the Crown is gradually assuming the aspect of a bitter quarrel, which, unless carefully watched, may terminate like that which took place at Taranaki so fatally. I would beg leave further to suggest that the arrangement most conducive to the vigorous administration of the Land Purchase Department would be that contemplated originally by Mr. Commissioner McLean, that the district to the South of Auckland be assigned as a field for the operations of one of the officers of this Department in the same manner as the Northern district of this Province has been assigned to myself, with an understanding that during the absence of Mr. Commissioner McLean from the seat of Government that either one or other of the officers conducting the purchases in the Northern or Southern district of the Province remain at the seat of Government till his return. Calculating on the permanency of the arrangements made regarding my duties by Mr. Commissioner McLean, I have made engagements to meet certain parties of Natives at Whangarei in October, at the Wairoa in December, and at Mahurangi in January next, to receive and investigate their offers of lands for sale, and the conflicting claims connected therewith; and in the last-mentioned locality to pay the remaining instalments for the blocks lately acquired; and I have now the honor to request that I may be informed of the pleasure of his Excellency the officer administering the Government, whether I am to consider myself as stationed at Whangarei, or whether I am to remain at Auckland, and proceed from time to time to the different parts of the Province as occasion may require.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON.

Tho Hon. the Colonial Secretary, Auckland.

To acquire certain information respecting Titles to Land. Land Purchase Department, Whangarei, 12th November, 1854.

SIR,—

I think it would be very desirable to ascertain as nearly as you can the following particulars in reference to the native claims within the district which has already been assigned to you.

Information of this kind seems to be so desirable not only for the present use of the Government, but for the future well-being of the Natives, that I would recommend it to your earnest attention, feeling assured that you will from time to time be able to note down such data as will be included under the following heads:—

- 1st. The original and derivative rights of conquest.
- 2nd. The rights of occupancy by permission of owners.
- 3rd. How these rights originated.
- 4th. The division of boundaries between the different tribes inhabiting the country between the North Cape and the district of Auckland.

Information of this kind cannot fail to be of real service to yourself, and I need not add that it would be very acceptable to the Government, and to the Department, with which you are now intimately connected.

Reporting offer of the Maunga Tapere Block. District Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, 12th November, 1854.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report that I arrived at this place on the 1st instant, and have held a meeting of the Natives at Maraekura, the residence of the Te Tirarau, in the Wairoa river, at which it was arranged to offer the Maunga Tapere block for sale to the Government, containing from Eighteen thousand to Twenty thousand (18,000 to 20,000) acres for the sum of Two thousand pounds (£2,000), the Chief Tirarau being guaranteed a pre-emptive right of purchase of One thousand (1,000) acres at the rate of Ten shillings (10s.) per acre.

I intend to make a sketch survey of the place to-morrow, and expect by an early date to be able to transmit to you a full report recommending the completion of the arrangements by the Government.

I have, &c.

No. 13. Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Natives wish to Purchase 400 Acres in the Waipu Block. District Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, 20th March, 1854.

SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that certain Natives of the Tawera tribe have made application to me to be allowed to select Four hundred acres of land in the Waipu Block, which they are willing to pay for at the usual fixed rate of Ten shillings per acre.

I am not aware of the precise arrangements which the Government have entered into with the emigrants from Nova Scotia relative to the reservation of the Waipu for their future location; but if the compliance with this request can be made, it would be a practical lesson to the Natives of this district that they can acquire, by right of purchase from the Government, ample lands for their use with a Crown title in exchange for their own unsatisfactory tenure; and I am convinced that if this fact was once clearly demonstrated, they would all avail themselves of it, and in order to procure the necessary amount of money, they would part with a great portion of their common lands.

The Tawera are a fugitive tribe, driven away originally from the Bay of Plenty, and living by sufferance in several parts of this island. They have no land of their own, and feel the domination of the Ngapuhi over them—which is the reason of their wishing to procure land from the Crown with a view to securing their independence.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, District Commissioner.

Donald McLean, Esq.,

Principal Land Commissioner, Auckland.

No. 14 Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Reporting offer by the. Natives of the Maunga Tapere Block. District Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, 20th November, 1854.

SIR,—

I have the honor to submit for the consideration of His Excellency the officer administering the Government the offer of the Ngapuhi Chiefs named in the margin to sell a block of land Having frontage to the main harbour of Whangarei, and containing about Eighteen thousand five hundred acres (18,500) acres, for the sum of One thousand five hundred pounds (1,500/.).

A further condition of the sale is that a right be guaranteed to the Chief Tirarau of the first selection, under the present Land Regulations, by purchase at Ten shillings (10s.) per acre, of One thousand acres of any part of the block, the selection to be of a figure conformable to that, prescribed under the existing law, so that the public interest may not suffer by a monopoly of any peculiar local advantages.

I beg to enclose a sketch survey of the block, on the scale of one mile to the inch, including a complete delineation of the natural features of the country. In the neighbourhood of the volcanic hills of Maunga Tapere, Whatitiri, and Maunu, the timber is light, and the soil of the most fertile nature, and the hill of Tikorangi, at the water side, being of lime-stone formation, is very choice land. The frontage to the harbour is also well suited for the site of a town or village. The intervening space between the available land on the shores, of the harbour and the inland volcanic region is composed of sterile ranges which may eventually be converted into sheep pasture, but are at present of little value. I would, however, urge you to obtain the approval of His Excellency to the completion of this purchase without delay, as the acquisition of the land would be highly advantageous to the public, both from its geographic position and intrinsic value—as well as from the moral effect which would be produced on the native mind by the example of an influential chief like Tirarau, in conjunction with several others who in the late war in the North' fought against us about the sovereignty over the country, now disposing to the Crown for European colonization, a tract situated in the midst of one of their most valuable and cherished localities. The land in question is situated on the most available line of road between Whangarei and the Wairia—being accessible both from the East and West Coast—and very little expense would complete from the waters of the Kaipara to Whangarei, a cart road which has been already finished for half the distance by the private enterprise of the Messrs. Walton.

The title of the settlers to this land is undisputed, it being the family hereditary possession of the Chief Tirarau and the late Iwitahi father of Te Manihera. The other Chief, Kepa Tau, is the man in actual possession and occupation at Otaika on the Whangarei. The only native reserve is a landing place near the mouth of the Otaika river called Motukiwi, about an acre in extent, the scene of a hostile encounter, which we considered prudent to leave put of the purchase for the present for fear of bringing the relatives of the people killed there to make claims on the block—but it can be purchased at a future time, and the proceeds devoted to the satisfying the relatives of the slain.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, District Commissioner.

Donald McLean, Esq.,

Principal Land Commissioner, Auckland.

Maunga Tapere.—Authorizing the Purchase of that Block. Land Purchase Office, Auckland, 9th January, 1855.

I have the honor to enclose herewith, for your information and guidance, the copy of a letter addressed to" this Office by the Honorable the Colonial Secretary, in reply to yours of the 20th of November last, having reference to the purchase of a block of land at Whangarei, comprising about Eighteen thousand acres, for the sum of Fifteen hundred pounds.

You will be gratified to learn that your recommendation has been approved of, and the purchase required to be completed with as little delay as possible.

In addition to the instructions laid down in the Colonial Secretary's letter of this day's date, I have only to add that the sum of Fifteen hundred pounds has been drawn and placed to your credit in the Union Bank of Australia; and in reference to its transmission to Whangarei, it has been considered advisable to wait for advice from yourself, since we have every reason to believe that your official duties have called you up to the district of Mahurangi.

I have, &c.,

DONALD MCLEAN.

J. G. Johnson, Esq.,

District Commissioner,

Whangarei.

Maunga Tapere.—To Purchase the Block of Land offered for sale at Whangarei. Colonial Secretary's Office, Auckland, 9th January, 1855.

SIR,—

In reference to the letter dated 20th November last, from Mr. District Commissioner Johnson, reporting the offer of a block of land at Whangarei-by the Natives to the Government of 18,000 acres for the sum of One thousand five hundred pounds (£1,500), and on the condition that the Chief Tirarau have the first selection of One thousand acres' at Ten shillings per acre (the selection to be of a figure conformable to that prescribed by law), I am directed by His Excellency the officer administering the Government to convey to you his approval of the immediate purchase of this land on the terms specified.

The only way of fulfilling the condition regarding the selection referred to, which should be made before the block is opened to the public, is to treat the existing regulations as not applicable to the Native seller, and to allow him at once to make a selection in the manner prescribed by the 15th clause of Sir G. Grey's Land Regulations and to grant; the land at Ten shillings' per acre.

His Excellency desires me to request you to make the necessary communication to Mr. Johnson, as soon as possible, for his information and guidance.

I have, &c,

ANDREW SINCLAIR, Colonial Secretary.

Mr. Commissioner McLean.

SIR,—

The external boundaries of the land at the North side of the harbour of Whangarei, granted to Gilbert Mair, having been set out and defined, I have now been enabled to complete the purchase of the adjoining block, as recommended in my letter of the 26th March last, and I have now the honor to enclose the Native Deed to the Crown. The matter was satisfactorily adjusted yesterday at a general meeting of the parties concerned.

Maunga Karamea.—Relative to Purchase of that Block. District Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, 24th August, 1855.

SIR,—

I Have the honor to inform you that I have-received a letter from the Chief Tirarau, stating his willingness to give up a sufficient quantity of land, as I requested, to enable me to recommend the payment of a sum of Two thousand seven hundred pounds, for the Maunga Karamea. Block.

I have also seen the individual owners of the land in question; and they have agreed to the propositions made by Tirarau, on the understanding that certain reserves for their use are to be repurchased for them from the Government, at the rate of Ten shillings (10s.) per acre.

The great difficulty of procuring native labour has prevented me from surveying these reserves at once, in order that the Government might be informed of the precise conditions of the purchase.

The entire block is estimated at Thirty thousand (30,000) acres; and it rests with you to determine whether it would be expedient to wait for my report of the contents of the portions to which a pre-emptive right of purchase will be required, or to send the money at once (as the native chiefs are very impatient), and trust, to my prudence in concluding the most favourable arrangement for procuring as large a portion of the available, land as possible for the European settlers as I can, without overlooking the welfare and the requirements of the native race.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, Commissioner for Purchase of Native Land.

Donald McLean, Esq.

Principal Commissioner, &c.,

Rangiora, Whangarei, 5th September, 1855,
SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that the natives named in the margin wish to dispose of a small block of land containing, by the enclosed survey, One hundred and fifty-seven acres three roods and thirty-six perches (157a. 3r. 36p.) to the Government, for the sum of Forty pounds (£40). A condition of this purchase, that the chief Maketu be allowed a pre-emptive right of purchasing Four acres out of the block at the rate of Ten shillings (10s.) per acre.

Should the completion of this purchase be approved, the amount can be paid out of the funds in my hands for extinguishing native claims.

Maunga Tapere.—Recommending Purchase of Frontage, District Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, 10th September, 1855.
SIR,—

You will perceive, on reference to the survey of the Maunga Tapere Block, at Whangarei, that a small strip of land along the bank of the Otaika river, containing some cultivations, has been excluded from the purchase by the natives.

The back country to the Otaika river is of such a nature that it is almost useless without this frontage, which it always was the intention of the chief Tirarau should be given into the Block, but to conciliate the natives living on the cultivations, the cession was postponed for a time. During the recent negotiations for the Maunga Karamea Block, I made it part of the agreement for that block that the land in question should be given up for the sum of one hundred pounds (£100), and I have now the honor to request that I may be furnished with authority to expend that sum in the liquidation of this claim. A very good reason for making this purchase is, that so long as the natives have cultivations on the same side of the Otaika stream as the settlers who locate on the Maunga Tapere Block, the cattle of the latter will be trespassing on the crops of the natives, and it is advisable on that account to separate the one from the other by good natural boundaries if possible.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, District Commissioner.

The Chief Commissioner,

Land Purchase Department.

Maunga Karamea.—Respecting Reserves in the Block. District Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, 10th September, 1855.

SIR,—

With reference to my letter of the 24th-ultimo, reporting the state of the negotiations for the Maunga Karamea Block, I have the honor to inform you, that I have arranged with the natives on the Block, and that three reserves will be repurchased by the natives, containing, as far as I am able to judge without survey, at Mangapai, eight hundred acres (800 acres); at Mahakitahi, twenty acres (20 acres); and at Tangihua, four hundred acres (400 acres). These are all bona fide for the use of the people residing thereon, who wish the deeds to be made out for them as tenants in common.

Maketu, Te Pirihi, Te Koni Koni, Te Reweti, Ngakapa, Ripeka.

Enclosed is a sketch of the block, showing the position of these Native reserves, which, with the exception of the 20-acre piece, would not from their intrinsic worth be purchased by Europeans, but are valued by the natives, wahi, tapus, &c., so that, the public rather profit by the transaction than otherwise.

No. 24. Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Wharcora.—Reporting offer of a Block of 10,000 Acres. District Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, September, 1855

SIR,—

I have the honor to submit for the approval of His Excellency the Governor the offer of the native chiefs named below to sell a block of land situated at the head of the North branch of the Harbour of Whangarei, and estimated to contain about Ten thousand acres, for the sum of Seven hundred and fifty pounds (£750).

W. Eru Pohe, Whare, Hine Waru, Te Manihers, Hirini Tiperu.

I had the honor to recommend the purchase of this block to the Government so far back as 1853, but the opposition raised by a portion of the native population at that time to the purchase of land was so great, that the sale could not be effected without the risk of a collision between those who were in favour of, and those who were against, disposing of their joint property to the Crown.

I am happy to state that the natives of this district now begin to see the benefit of European settlers locating amongst them, notwithstanding the disputes which will sometimes arise between individuals, and that the most violent opponents which I formerly had to contend with are now coming forward to join in the sale.

The Whareora Block (the name by which this tract of land is known) is rather broken and hilly, but is valuable from its being immediately adjoining the principal settlement in this harbour, and the price has been reduced in consequence to a rate which I have calculated will be fair towards the Natives, and remunerative to the public. The European settlement at the Awatawhiti, which is only separated by a small stream from the Whareora Block, is the oldest settlement in the place. The whole extent of it is only about two thousand five hundred acres, which have been subdivided into some twenty farms, which are being rapidly improved and brought under cultivation, but the settlers have no run for their cattle, neither have they fencing or firewood on their own block in sufficient quantity, and frequent petty disputes are occasioned by their crossing the creek and trespassing on the Native land to relieve their want in these respects; but should His Excellency authorize the completion of this purchase, they will have more room, and these causes of disputes with the Natives will be put an end to.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, Commissioner for Purchase of Native Lands, Whangarei.

Maunga Karamea.—Forwarding Deed of Conveyance. District Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, 10th October, 1855.

Sir,—

I have the honor to enclose the Deed of Conveyance from the Natives to the Crown of the Maunga Karamea, upon which I have paid the sum of Two thousand pounds (£2,000). The boundaries have now been satisfactorily defined and set out, and I have to request that the remaining Seven hundred pounds may be sent to me per steamer "Wonga Wonga" at the next opportunity, as Tirarau will not consent to divide the money until the whole amount is received. With reference to my letter of the 10th ultimo, on the subject of the portions over which the Natives would require preemptive right of purchase in this block, I have the honor to inform you that the Tangihua reserve has been abandoned altogether, and that the Mangapai is to be reduced to something like Four hundred acres (400 acres). The hundred pounds (£100) for the cultivations on the banks of Otaika River will also be required, about which I also wrote on the 10th ultimo. The price for this block was so large that I felt it my duty to gain this concession from the Natives, in conjunction with other points, as explained in my report to Mr. Commissioner McLean of the 30th May last, and circumstances have compelled me to include it in one transaction with the Maunga Karamea, purchase, and consequently it must be regarded as part of an arrangement which the Government are bound to carry out. Under this view of the case I beg to send to you a cheque for One hundred pounds to enable you to procure the Eight hundred pounds which I require without the delay of procuring an advance in the usual way.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANTJOHNSON, District Land Commissioner.

*Ruarangi.—Forwarding Deed of Conveyance.*District Land Commissioner's Office, Wangarei, 10th October, 1855.

SIR,—

I beg to enclose the Deed of the Ruarangi purchase, in the district of Whangarei, with a translation annexed. A little explanation is necessary in this case to prevent confusion in the accounts.

The amount authorized for this purchase was Seven hundred pounds, with which amount I was furnished by Mr. Commissioner McLean. Three hundred and fifty pounds (£350) of this amount was paid to the Natives of Whangarei, and One hundred and seventy-five pounds (£175) to the Ngatiwhatua in Auckland. The remaining Hundred and seventy-five pounds, I kept in my possession, to pay to the Ngatiwhatua of Kaipara when I went there, intending to obtain all their signatures to the Deed collectively for the Seven hundred pounds (£700). In the meantime-Matikikuha (I believe the name was) went to Auckland, and received the One hundred and seventy-five pounds (£175) for the Ngatiwhatua of Kaipara from Mr. Commissioner McLean, so that deed or receipt from him must not be brought separately to account; but appended to the enclosed Deed, which acknowledges a receipt of Seven hundred pounds, while Five hundred and twenty-five (£525) is all that has been actually paid by me; and I must, be charged with the One hundred and seventy-five (£175) in my possession which was advanced by Mr. Commissioner McLean at Auckland, in lieu of the similar sum which I hold, intended to be paid by myself.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, Commissioner for the Purchase of Land.

*Respecting Land offered by Kin and More.*District Land Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, 20th october, 1855.

SIR,—

In reply to your letter of the 4th ultimo, intimating that the Chiefs Mate, Te Kiri, and Te More, have offered to dispose of their land at Whangarei, Pakiri, and other places, and requesting that I would direct my attention to an investigation of the extent and validity of those claims, in order that an early adjustment of them may be effected, I have the honor to inform you that the Chief Mate came to Whangarei a short time since, and that, in compliance with your request, I have examined the claims of himself and His followers, and beg to enclose a plan of the same as well as the surrounding district, based on Trigonometrical observations, which I took with a view of laying down the features of the country with some degree of accuracy.

The portion offered for sale by the Chief Mate is coloured yellow, and the Government blocks by which it is surrounded, red. The land itself is of only average quality, but the situation is important as it opens an outlet to the Government blocks already acquired. The Ruarangi and the Maunga karamea, estimated to contain Sixty-two thousand acres are rather wanting in this respect. I should estimate the contents of the land offered for sale by Mate at from Eight to ten thousand acres (8,000 to 10,000), and on account of its important position I offered to recommend to the Government its purchase for the sum of One thousand pounds (£1,000) This was done previous to the recent instructions on financial matters issued by His Excellency Colonel Gore Browne, but any embarrassment which this matter might have occasioned has been avoided, for Mate treated this liberal offer with great contempt, and, I regret to say, went home highly dissatisfied, Having, as he affirms, been led to understand in town, that the Government were ready to advance him several thousand pounds, contingent on my being able to certify that his claims were valid This unforeseen termination of these negotiations will no doubt prevent Kiri and More offering there lands at present. I have written to inform Mate that as he rejected my offer, I consider myself no longer bound to make the purchase.

To Postpone the Payment of £700 for Maunga Karamea. Land Purchase Department, Auckland, 1st November, 1855.
SIR,—

In reference to your application for the sum of Seven hundred pounds (£700) to complete the payment of the Maunga Karamea Block, I beg to state for your information that in Consequence of the repeated applications to the Government of several influential persons of Ngatiwhatua tribe residing at Orakei, it has been deemed advisable to postpone the payment of that amount until an opportunity shall have been offered to those Natives for visiting Whangarei, and settling their differences with Tirarau. Believing that this would be the prudent course to adopt under the circumstances, the transmission of the money has been in consequence delayed until further advices are received from you on the subject.

Circular.—To furnish, a Report of Land Purchases in his District. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 18th March, 1856.

SIR,—

I am directed by His Excellency the Governor to request that you will furnish to this office with the least possible delay, a statement of the lands that have been purchased by you from the Natives in your district, showing the estimated number of acres in each purchase, the price paid, and whether in one or more instalments.

You will also be good enough to send in an account, showing the disbursements made by you up to the end of this month, either for the purchase or for contingent expenses incurred in connection therewith, the balance in your hands, and whether there are any existing liabilities in the shape of promises to the Natives to purchase certain lauds from them, which have not yet been fulfilled; and if so, by whom such promises were made. You will also furnish, without delay, any deeds or other documents connected with the transfer of land in your district, in order that they may be recovered in the Colonial Secretary's Office.

In transmitting these documents, His Excellency further directs that you should furnish a general report of the state of the Natives in your district, their willingness or otherwise to dispose of land, stating the quantity and quality of such land, and the average price per acre, at which you think it can be obtained, with all such other information in reference to the feeling of the Natives towards the British Government as your local experience and general knowledge of your district may suggest.

Report on the State of Land Purchases in his District. District Commissioner's Office, Motupapa, Whangarei, 3rd April, 1856.

SIR,—

In compliance with your letter of the 18th ultimo, do myself the honor to furnish the information requested by His Excellency the Governor, relative to the state of the Land Purchases, and of the Natives generally, in this district.

By the enclosed statement No. 1, the estimated extent of the lands which I have acquired for the Government, is Two hundred and thirty thousand acres, at a cost of Nine thousand nine hundred and ten pounds (£9,910); of this quantity, about Ninety-five thousand acres have not yet been opened for sale, but the preliminary surveys of most of the blocks are now nearly completed by the General Government, and several blocks are in the course of being cut up for disposal by the Waste Lands Board.

I have also to transmit the two returns required, showing all the disbursements which have been made by me, together with the contingent expenses incurred for the service of the Department in connection with Land Purchases. I would here remark that any payments I may make on account of contingent expenses, are only temporarily advanced by me out of funds in my hands for the purchase of land, and that the accounts under these two heads are kept distinct and separate. There are no liabilities existing in this district in the shape of promises to the Natives to purchase certain lands from them, as I have almost invariably acted upon the principle of first submitting every purchase for the approval of the Governor before making any promises or payments, and the Natives understand well that such is the case, and although they may wish to sell the lands about which I was negotiating previous to the instructions issued on that head by His Excellency, they do not consider the Government bound to carry them out. All the deeds and documents connected with the transfer, of lands which I have purchased, are lodged in your office at Auckland for transmission for final record in the Colonial Secretary's Office.

In the different localities of this district, viz., Mahurangi, Whangarei, and Kaipara, the state of the Native population, as compared with other parts of the Colony, I consider to be satisfactory at Mahurangi; their numbers are few, not perhaps more numerous than the European settlers there, between whom and them a very friendly spirit exists; they sold nearly all their lands, and are located on two ample reserves with denned boundaries which have been set aside for their use.

The portion of the Whangarei district to the south and west of the harbour, in which the recent purchases are situated, is inhabited by several Tribes who are well disposed to the Europeans, and to the Government being under the authority of the Chief Tirarau, who has proved himself through out a staunch friend to the white race and of the Government of this Colony, Though nearly related to the John Heke, it will be remembered that Auckland was saved from an invasion of the insurgent. Natives from the Bay of Islands in 1843, by his refusing them a passage through his territory, and this Chief's conduct has been consistent ever since. On my first arrival in this district, I committed myself to the policy of supporting this Chief in his authority over the tribes, and the results are that he has been a principal party to the disposal of about a hundred and fifty thousand acres to the Crown, which can now be occupied by settlers, without a single claim being raised to any part of it by the Natives.

The northern side of Whangarei is not subject to Tirarau, the Natives in that portion of the district are scattered in small parties, and are not under the immediate command of any important Chief; they may be said to be peaceably inclined, but, having no controlling power over them, are guided in their disposition towards the Government by the attitude of the Chiefs in the Bay of Islands; they are in the habit of taking the law into their own hands when they have any grievances against the Europeans, and have been hitherto kept a little in awe by the occasional visits of one of Her Majesty's Sloops of War to this harbour, when any petty outrage had occurred, and a repetition of occasional visits of Her Majesty's vessels would have a beneficial effect for some time to come. These tribes have, however, offered considerable tracts of land for sale, a Schedule of which I have the honor to enclose.

In connection with this subject, I might remark that the greater number of these petty outrages to which I have alluded are committed on account of the cattle of the Europeans trespassing upon the Native lands, eating their crops, and treading over the Native sacred places or burial grounds; and as the Natives are disinclined to fence in their cultivations properly, and the Europeans are unable to keep their cattle on their own land, this evil is likely to increase. Many cases are referred to me, and settled by arbitration; but in my absence the Natives do not, hesitate to carry off calves by force in satisfaction of their demands. Notwithstanding a friendly feeling which they cherish towards the settlers, they are not at all inclined to submit to the English laws, except when decisions are given in their favour, although the increasing number of the settlers in many places would render a constituted authority, to whose decisions both races would submit, a desirable and necessary object. Drunkenness, which threatened to become an enormous evil, is not so prevalent as it was, but the sale of firearms and ammunition is secretly carried on to a greater extent than ever, and they all show a great desire to be well armed. A Resident Magistrate is much desired by the European inhabitants of Whangarei, and although such a functionary could not expect to control the Natives much at first, an observance of the submission of the Europeans to the laws, and of the superior manner in which we settle our disputes, would have a very beneficial effect upon the Aboriginal population, and by degrees they might be persuaded to resort to the English Courts, and abide by their judgments.

A considerable quantity of land between Whangarei and the Bay of Islands belongs to the Crown, in virtue of old Land Claims which were exchanged with the Government for scrip. The Natives have come from distant places and located themselves on these lands, but after reserves have been set apart for them, and any previously unextinguished claims settled, the residue will be at the disposal of the Government.

The tribes inhabiting the Kaipara, Oruawharo, and Otamatea, are a branch of the Ngatiwhatua who reside near Auckland, and are decidedly favourably inclined to the British Government. They have repeatedly offered large tracts of land for sale, situated on the rivers which empty themselves into the sea through the estuary of the Kaipara, but their country is very inaccessible, and my instructions being only to acquire such lands as can be made immediately available, I intended to carry on my purchasing on the East Coast between Whangarei and the Bay of Islands, previous to proceeding to the West side of the Island.

The tribes on the Kaipara are rather unsettled at present, the timber trade being principally confined to the Wairoa branch of the Kaipara, which formerly belonged to them, but was taken by the Ngapuhi under Tirarau, who still resides there. They do not partake of the lucrative trade carried on at that place, and show an inclination to attempt to recover it by force, although it has been in the possession of the Ngapuhi's for the last thirty-five years. I am not at present prepared with detailed reports of the various lands which have been offered for sale, as the complicated nature of the claims of tribes and individuals requires much patient investigation before a conclusion can be arrived at, but from former experience and a knowledge of the general desire of the Natives at large to effect further sales, I should estimate that a sum of not less than Four thousand pounds would be required to carry on the purchases in these districts during the ensuing year. The average price that the land can be acquired at would be about 1s. 6d. per acre, varying according to quality, position, number of aimants, and other considerations, from 5d. to 3s. 6d. per aere.

I have; &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON. Commissioner for the purchase of Native Land.

Enclosing Surveys of Lands which are to be re-purchased by the Natives. Wellington, 8th May, 1856. SIR,—

I have the honor to enclose two surveys of land over which the Natives have been guaranteed a right of purchase at the rate of Ten shillings (10s.) per acre, situated in the Maunga Karamea Block at Whangarei; and also to request that you will be kind enough to receive the purchase money at Auckland, when tendered by the applicants or their authorised agent.

The Mangapai Reserve contains Three-hundred and eighty-six (386) acres; and the price will accordingly amount to One hundred and ninety-three pounds (£193). The grant has been arranged to be issued in the joint names of Hemi Pea, Eruera Toenga, and Paora Keri, sons of the late Chief Motutara.

The Mahakitahi Reserve contains One hundred and thirty (130) acres, and the price will amount to Sixty-five pounds (£65); and the Natives request the Deed of Grant for this section to be made out in the joint names of Tirarau and Te Ahiterenga.

The Maunga Karamea Block can now be safely handed over to the Province; the external survey having been completed, with the exception of the place called Kaiahopukia, Kahuera, and Paraoanui; all of which are situated on the Western boundary, and have been laid claim to by the Ngatimauku, a portion of whom reside with the Te Uri-o-Hau tribe.

I much regret that these places are claimed by the Natives, as it is the first case in which any of the purchases in the Whangarei District have been disputed; but the present state of the block has arisen from a native quarrel over which I had no control, originating about land in another part of the District, and which, by a combination of circumstances, frustrated the arrangements which I had made for the perfect settlement of the Maunga Karamea purchase

With reference to the letter which I. had the honor to address to you last September, relative to a desire on the part of the Natives named in the margin

Note.—Ngakapa, Te Puihi, Matutou, Te Reweti, Te Kau, Tukuka, Te Kiretiu, Ripepe. to dispose of a small piece of land on the shores of the South side of the harbour of Whangarei, containing by survey One hundred and sixty-two acres, for the sum of Forty pounds, with a pre-emptive right on their part of re-purchasing Forty acres of the same at the upset price of Ten shillings per acre, but which His Excellency the Governor was pleased to order to remain in abeyance until the next meeting of the General Assembly, and that event having now elapsed, I would beg to bring to your notice that the said Natives have reiterated their request to me to obtain a compliance of their wishes.

The matter is a small one, involving no loss to the Crown, and I would suggest that by permitting transactions of this nature to a limited extent, they would prepare the Native mind for receiving Crown Grants by individuals, if such should be the intention of the Government at a future time.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, District Commissioner.

As to Purchase of Land at Ngunguru. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 25th September, 1856.
SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that Te Hemara, of Matakana, has called at this Office respecting the disposal of a block of land, which was offered for sale some time since by Te Manihera and the Ngunguru Natives.

As these parties appear to be particularly desirous of disposing of this land to the Government, I have to request that you will be good enough, at your earliest convenience, to ascertain the extent, position, and availability of the block, as well as the terms upon which it may be purchased from them so that there may be no unnecessary delay in complying with their wishes.

The Natives have been referred to you for the arrangement of this question.

I have, &c.,

DONALD MCLEAN, Chief Commissioner.

J. G. Johnson, Esq.,

District Commissioner,

Whangarei.

P.S.—Before entering upon the final settlement of any purchase, it will of course be necessary, first, to report your negotiations to the Government.

Circular.—As to Landing Places and Ferries. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 7th February, 1857.
SIR,—

I have the honor to request that you will avail yourself of every opportunity that may offer itself for negotiating the purchase of eligible landing places and ferry-sites in your district, and reporting the same to me, in order that steps may be taken for their acquisition for the use of the Government.

If possible, however, such sites should be acquired in connection with extensive tracts of land bordering on such rivers or places as may be required for facilitating traffic and affording public accommodation to travellers.

I have, &c.,

The NATIVE SECRETARY to His Excellency the GOVERNOR.

General Report. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, March 20th, 1857.
SIR,—

I have the honor to report for your Excellency's information, some particulars connected with my late visit to the Whangarei and Kaipara districts.

The district of Whangarei, situated between Auckland and the Bay of Islands, contiguous also to the valleys of the Kaipara, the Wairoa and the Hokianga, lies in a most desirable position for a settlement. The main estuary forms a safe harbour, navigable for vessels of a large tonnage, for a distance of fifteen or sixteen miles. The country on each side presents a fine site, a Broken and a hilly aspect, the curiously formed Manaia rocks rising boldly in irregular columns from the water at the northern side of the entrance, giving a wild and romantic character to the scenery, which is very much heightened by the contrast with the tame and monotonous appearance of the low sandy country around the town site of Marsden, at the South-eastern entrance of the harbour.

Numerous small rivers and creeks, navigable for canoes and boats, empty themselves into the main estuary; on the banks of these streams are some native villages, and on the Crown lands, a few well selected farmsteads are springing up. The soil is chiefly of a rich volcanic description, intersected with belts of timber, alternating with flats of open country; here and there are occasional patches of poor white clay soil, which have been dug over for kauri gum; such however is the influence of a genial climate upon even the poorest of New Zealand soil, that, with skilful culture, it can be rendered wonderfully productive.

The extent of land already acquired from the natives in this district, may be estimated at Two hundred and sixty-eight thousand (268,000) acres.

Lands for which negotiations are now pending, Fifty-eight thousand two hundred and ten (58,210) acres.

In addition to the districts in the immediate vicinity of the harbour of Whangarei, the Government is now treating for the purchase from the natives of extensive tracts upon the Kaipara and Wairoa rivers; from which places some valuable cargoes of kauri spars have been exported for the British navy. These districts, intersected with fine navigable rivers, which swarm, for thirty miles upwards from their mouths, with mullet and other fish, and capable of maintaining a large and flourishing population, and still carry magnificent forests of kauri timber, easy of access, which have never yet been touched with the axe, and which might be worked with great advantage, both to the European colonists, and also to the native proprietors, who from long experience are very expert in dragging out the spars and preparing them for export.

The settlers of Whangarei are of a highly respectable class; and already thriving, though it is only within the last few years that they have established themselves there.

At Waipu, about twelve miles from the South head of Whangarei, a body of emigrants from Cape Breton, North America, have formed a settlement, and in the short space of twelve or fifteen months, have converted the primitive wastes and forests into comfortable homes and farmsteads; without any other aid than that of the axe and hoe, they have cleared and brought under cultivation much more than sufficient land to raise crops for their own subsistence; and, from their hardihood and previous skill in contending with the heavy, forest and capricious climate of North America, there is every reason to expect that in a country like New Zealand, which they regard as comparative paradise, they will contribute greatly to the material advancement of this Province. Thousands of their countrymen would follow these first pioneers from Cape Breton, Nova Scotia, and other parts of British North America, if inducements were held out to them to do so. These inducements need not be of any extravagant character. All that they ask is that we should give them land in localities suited to their requirements, allowing them the usual privilege to which other immigrants are entitled, by way of remission in land for their passage money; and a credit for five or seven years for such additional quantity as it may be advisable to assign to them under a pre-emptive right of purchase.

By these means, the Government would insure a steady flow of immigration to the Province of well-trained, hardy, and experienced bushmen and sailors, whose loyalty and devotion to British authority, joined with their clanish spirit and unanimity of action, would be found most important elements in the formation and early settlement of a new country situated like New Zealand. Such colonists, moreover, derive a peculiar value from the manner in which they transplant themselves to these shores, bringing along with them their religious and educational establishments, already in operation. No chance collection of men, but an active and organized community, possessing many of the characteristics of the early pioneers of colonization in North America. Nor ought this opportunity to be overlooked by either the General or Provincial Governments, lest the stream should be diverted to other colonies, the Cape of Good Hope for instance, which is fully sensible of its value, while a liberal administration of the waste lands, valueless and unproductive without capital and labour, might secure for New Zealand a population which would so materially contribute towards the wealth, the stability, and progress, not only of any one province in particular, but also of the Colony at large.

A glance at the map of the Northern Peninsula of New Zealand will shew your Excellency the peculiar advantages which it presents for English colonization. In addition to the main harbours of the Eastern Coast, Auckland, Whangarei, the Bay of Islands, and Whangaroa, likely to be so important in case of the establishment of the Panama line of steamers, are numerous well-sheltered coves and smaller anchorages, while the Kaipara and Hokianga, on the Western side, if more dangerous, from the bars across their mouths and the stormy character of the coast upon which they open, yet lead up into navigable streams, which must form a hardy and skilful race of seamen, invaluable to our insular position in the Southern hemisphere.

Means should now be adopted to resuscitate and promote upon a permanent basis the colonization of this portion of the Northern Island, so materially valuable, and historically so interesting as the seat of the earliest European settlement of New Zealand. To effect this it will be necessary to adopt liberal and comprehensive measures, contemporaneously with the extinction of the Native title to the extensive districts of waste land that as yet remain unpurchased in this peninsula.

The first step which I would recommend would be the resumption by the Crown of all the lands which have been already alienated by the Natives to different individuals, and which have been subsequently exchanged by those individuals for Government scrip. There should be no delay in taking possession of these lands, while some of the other Natives who sold them are yet alive, and can point out to a surveyor their locality and limits. From what I have observed among the Northern tribes, they are most anxious that this should be done; and they are almost all of them particularly honorable in pointing out the exact boundaries of what they have sold. Two intelligent surveyors and parties acting in concert with the Land Purchase Commissioners, could in twelve months determine with sufficient accuracy the extent of those lands, which should be declared open for sale and selection, whenever the boundaries are defined.

The next step, and one which is now in successful progress, is to acquire larger tracts of land by purchase from the Natives, out of which blocks, ranging in extent from one hundred to two thousand acres, should be reconveyed under Crown grant to the principal chiefs, upon the extinction of the tribal title, such blocks consisting not only of cultivable but also of forest land, in order to secure to them a continued revenue, proportionable to their rank.

In order to do away with present or future dissatisfaction on the part of the Native sellers at the price they received for, their lands, as compared with the value it acquires when in the hands of Government—unable, as yet, to comprehend the reasons that influence comparative values—it would be most desirable to expend a certain definite proportion (and that no inconsiderable one) of the moneys realized by the waste land sales on roads and other improvements, exclusively within those districts from which they have accrued, and from, time to time to publish the balance-sheets of such expenditure in the Maori Messenger.

No correct return of Native population of this Northern peninsula has yet been taken; this should, be done without delay, and the territorial limits of the four leading tribes—the Aupouri, the Rarawa, the Ngapuhi, and the Ngatiwhatua—should be ascertained, and, as nearly as possible, defined. Estimating the present population at eight thousand souls, it would not be difficult to ascertain the names of the principal Chiefs whose co-operation would be essential for carrying out the views of Government, and who should, in return for their exertions (when efficiently rendered) to preserve the peace of their respective districts, be rewarded with marks of approbation, and fixed annuities for their services.

These chiefs should be designated Assessors, and have commissions issued to them defining as nearly as possible the nature of their duties; they should also be invited to take part with the settlers in framing bye-laws for adjusting cases of trespass, disputes, and other local cases; they should also be invested with powers of jurisdiction analogous to those possessed by the English Courts of Petty Session. It is quite evident that the English law cannot be strictly carried out without the agency of the natives; it is therefore obvious that they should be invited to take part in the administration of justice, in order that executive authority, instead of diplomatic bargaining, may attend the decisions of the District Magistrates, who are at present placed in a most anomalous position, when attempting to enforce against the Maoris that law to which all British subjects are amenable, and, if this result can be more certainly effected by calling in the aid of the chiefs, it appears as most reasonable, just and expedient means of effecting so desirable an object.

I am quite aware that time, patience, and perseverance, mutual forbearance, and reciprocity of good offices are required to reconcile the natives to our forms of Government, but I am, nevertheless, fully confident that if they are once made to feel that the aim and object of the Government is to promote impartially, the permanent advancement of both races of Her Majesty's subjects, irrespective of any temporary expedient for gaining some particular object, they will soon adapt themselves with zeal and loyalty to such changes as their natural acuteness of observation may prove to them as in reality conducive to such a consummation.

If your Excellency, and your Excellency's Government, concur in the general views which I have cursorily sketched out in this communication, I will afford further and more explicit information on the detailed means of carrying them into practice, as I should rejoice to see our relations with the native population, in at least one portion of this Province, placed on so firm a footing as to preclude all probability of future rupture between the races. Nor, from the high standing, and commanding influence of tribes inhabiting it, could I suggest a district where this could be done with greater prospect of success than that to which I have been referring.

The natives of all other portions of the Colony would look on with imitative zeal and interest, while the Government would have the satisfaction of having laid a firm foundation upon which a more extended fabric of settlement and civilization throughout the Islands might be gradually erected.

I have &c.,

Donald McLean, Native Secretary.

To His Excellency the Governor.

No. 37. Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Parua.—The Survey of this Block has been interrupted. Parua, Whangarei, 7th April, 1857. SIR,—

I have the honor to report for your information that on the completion of the survey of the blocks at the head of the Whangarei river, I made arrangements with the Natives for Mr. Sinclair to survey the block in Parua Bay.

The survey was accordingly commenced on the 25th ultimo, and was being actively proceeded with, till the morning of Friday last, when a Native came suddenly before daylight, while the party were asleep in their tent, and pulled up the pegs, and with a drawn sword in his hand ordered them to quit the ground.

I had remained a week at Parua, on the commencement of the survey, to see that all was going on right, and had just returned to Otaika when this happened.

The Native who has behaved in this way is Haimona Te Hakiro, an old chief, related by marriage to Mohi Tawhai, of Hokianga. He has always strongly opposed the sale of land, but I was led to believe by the other Natives that he had relinquished his opposition in this instance.

The Natives deny his hereditary right to any land at Whangarei; but however that may be, both Hakiro and his father before him, a Native of Pataua, have periodically resorted to Whangarei to plant and fish, which I consider to be quite a bona fide claim; and I see no other course open than to wait until Hakiro allows the survey to proceed; and I have told the Natives, that, although Hakiro is only one man, still we cannot force him to sell his claim against his consent, and that it rests with them to obtain it before I can allow the surveyor to proceed with the Parua Block.

Hakiro is the father of the young man whom Tirarau and George King spoke with at Cafler's, when you conferred with them on the subject of the Parua Block during your recent visit to Whangarei, and who was charged with a message from those chiefs to his father to cease his opposition, and it has quite surprised all the Natives, as well as myself, that this old man should continue his opposition, which we thought now would be at an end.

Every Native in this district is displeased with the conduct of Hakiro, and will most probably endeavour to turn him out of the country. This I will prevent them doing if I can, as it would be both unjust and improper for them to do so.

Pending the settlement of this difficulty, I have instructed Mr. Sinclair to proceed with the survey of the Tamaterau Block, situated between the Tawera Settlement and the Parahaki Block, already reported. This block includes the peninsula opposite Limestone Island.

Ngaitorowhare have settled their dispute with Tirarau, having conceded to that chief the boundary he contended for on the point opposite Limestone Island, which is so suitable for a township.

John Grant Johnson, Commissioner N.L.P.

To complete purchase of Kaurihohore, Parahaki, and Whareora Blocks. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, May 9th, 1857.

SIR,—

With reference to your report of the 25th March last, notifying that the survey of certain blocks in your district has been completed, and that it now rests with the Government to decide what price should be paid to the Natives for each of these blocks.

I have the honor to inform you that, assuming the quantities stated by you to be exclusive of Native reserves, and of land agreed to be resold to the Natives, you are authorized to complete the purchases at prices not exceeding the sums named by yourself, viz.—

To enable you to carry out these instructions, the sum of One thousand pounds has been forwarded to the Sub-Treasurer at Whangarei, subject to your requisition from time to time, to whom you should account at your earliest convenience for the expenditure of the sums advanced by him to you, and furnish him with a copy and translation of the Deed of Sale in each instance, in support of your accounts.

Should any unforeseen delay arise subsequently to your receiving the purchase money, you will be good enough again to deposit it with the Sub-Treasurer, in whose custody it should remain until required by you for immediate payment.

You should take an early opportunity of notifying to the Natives the decision of the Government as to the price to be paid to them for the above blocks, and to inform them that the money is ready for their acceptance for each of the blocks when they are prepared to execute a Deed of Conveyance to Her Majesty in the usual form.

I have, &c.,

District Commissioner,

Parua.—Approving his proceedings respecting opposition to survey. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland,
May 14th, 1857.

SIR,—

With reference to a letter of the 7th ultimo, reporting that a chief named Haimona Te Hakiro had opposed the survey of the Parua Block, and had ordered the survey party off the ground, and that, in consequence of his disputing the sale, you had requested Mr. Sinclair to discontinue the survey.

I have the honor to inform you that the course taken by you in this case has been approved by His Excellency the Governor.

Commissioner. J. G. Johnson, Esq., J.P.,

Parua.—Has made a Survey of part of this Block. Whangarei, 26th May, 1857.

SIR,—

With reference to my letter of the 7th of April last, reporting that I had been compelled to suspend the survey of the Parua Block, on account of the opposition of a Native Chief, and that I had directed Mr. Sinclair to proceed with other work.

I have now the honor to inform you that, although the attempt to obtain a large block has been for the present unsuccessful, by dealing with it in separate portions, the acquisition of, the whole will eventually take place; and that, through the influence of George King Tahua, I have been enabled to make a survey of the part of the Parua Block having frontage to Whangarei Harbour.

It contains One thousand three hundred and seventy-two acres, according to the enclosed plan.

George King Tahua and Te Hakiro, the Chief-who lately obstructed the survey, now offer it to the Government, and as it is an exceedingly valuable piece of land, and very much, desired by intending settlers, I would strongly recommend you to obtain the necessary authority for its purchase, for a sum not exceeding One hundred and fifty pounds.

This portion of the large block at Parua having been given up by the Natives to George King Tahua to satisfy his claim, the question will be more easily dealt with, and I have no doubt of being able to obtain the rest of the block from the Natives of Ngunguru and Pataua, who are now, holding back, lest King and Tirarau should appropriate too large a share to themselves in event of their making a sale in conjunction with those chiefs.

I have, &c.,

John Grant Johnson.

P.S.—The expense of this survey has been only £7 14s. (the cost of the Native labourers employed), having been done by myself, while Mr. Sinclair was engaged in doing the Tamaterau Block.

SIR,—

I have the honor by direction of His Excellency to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th May in reference to the Ohiwa Block at Whangarei, negotiations for Which cannot at present be continued at a price so much beyond that of ordinary rural, land in the District.

The eligibility moreover of the land for the site of a Township is disputed, nor does it seem advisable to buy it while leaving the extreme point of the Peninsula in native hands. Under these circumstances, therefore, I have to inform you that His Excellency's Government cannot sanction the purchase as recommended by you.

Whangarei—Transmitting plans of Land Purchases. Land Office, Auckland, 17th August, 1857

SIR,—

I have the honor to transmit herewith Plans, on the scale of ten chains to the inch, of lands which have lately been acquired from the Natives in the District of Whangarei. The block called Kaurihohore is situated at the head of the Whangarei river, and comprises:—

Kaurihohore, 4,826 acres.

Parahaki, 4,630 acres.

The Parihaki Block is situated on the North branch of the Whangarei river, between the Awaroa and Mair's claim. Contents, 4,630 acres.

Whareora, 4,920 acres.

The Whareora Block adjoins the Parahaki block, and is situated between the Whangarei and Ngunguru rivers, and contains 4,920 acres.

I have plotted a separate portion of the plan of the Kaurihohore Block, called Paranui, which, I understand, is to be re purchased by the Natives, on a scale of four chains to the inch.

A block of land reserved by the Natives, containing 458 acres, has been carefully defined, and is shown on the plan of the Parahaki Block.

Enclosed are descriptions of the above-mentioned blocks.

Kaiawa.—A further Sum of £50 authorized for this Block. Chief Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 25th September, 1857.

SIR,—

Referring to your report of the 7th April, and 26th May, 1857, respecting the purchase of a small but valuable block of land at Parua, estimated to contain (1,372) Thirteen hundred and seventy-two acres, and for which you applied for and received authority to pay (£150) One hundred and fifty pounds, which amount I am since given to understand the Native owners will not accept, Hori King, the principal claimant, demanding Three hundred pounds (£300.)

The Natives are evidently aware of the importance of this position, situated as it is in the centre of 100,000 acres of Crown territory, and it is evident from what Tirarau informs me that a further, concession of Fifty pounds (£50) will be necessary to ensure a speedy and satisfactory completion of the purchase; under all the circumstances of the case, and considering the urgent necessity for acquiring this block without delay, His Excellency has directed me to cause a further advance of Fifty pounds (£50) to be made for this purchase, and you will be good enough to confer with Tirarau and have a conveyance of land in question made without further delay. The failure of the negotiation with Hori Tahua should have been reported to me at an earlier period. I have caused, a sum of Fifty pounds (£50) to make up the Two hundred pounds (£200) to be paid into your account at the Bank this day.

Parua.—Respecting Payment for this Block. Whangarei, 30th September, 1857. SIR,—

With reference to your letter of the 25th instant, on the, subject of the Kaiawa Block at Parua, intimating that an additional amount of Fifty pounds had been granted for the same, also directing me to confer with Tirarau and have a conveyance of the land made without further delay, I have the honor to inform you that Maunsell, Tirarau's nephew, was the bearer of this letter, demanding at the same time the £200, the price of the land.

I was sorry that I felt it my duty not to comply with his request, Tirarau having passed over to the Wairoa, Maunsell being in no way connected with the land, and none of the other parties concerned being, present to execute the deed. I do not see how I could have acted otherwise under the circumstances of the case which I would lay before you with a view of obtaining your further instructions at your earliest convenience.

This block is a peninsula in Parua Bay, adjoining the Manaia Block and the Native lands, and belongs to Pohe's tribe, and is also partly claimed by an old Chief named Horuona who resides near it. On the extreme point of the peninsula is an old pa which was taken by the Ngatiruanui in former times, on which occasion some ancestors of Tahua and Tirarau were killed. On this account George King Tahua setup a claim to the point, about 200 acres in extent; and in order to make his claim sufficiently large for the Government to purchase the land, obtained from the other claimants an extension of the boundaries to 1,372 acres, upon the condition that the real owners were to receive a portion of the payment, which I promised them should be faithfully carried out. Tahua was then authorized by the other claimants to negotiate the sale. These other claimants do not belong to the tribes of Tirarau and Hori King Tahua; and they have warned me that, if these conditions are not complied with, they will resist the occupation of the land although it should be sold by Tahua; and the only way I have of ensuring the fulfilment of the conditions on which the land was given up is, by taking care that the signatures of the other claimants are obtained to the deed before paying the money, by which means Tahua will be compelled to share the payment with them, or else they will not sign the deed; and I do not feel justified in paying the money over to Tahua or Tirarau alone, and leaving them to settle this question, without your special instructions to that effect.

I was not aware, until the receipt of your letter, that Tirarau had been moving in the matter, as I had frequent interviews with Tahua on the subject, who was prepared to accede to my wishes; and his writing to you for £300 was more a matter of form than anything else, he having requested me not to report, that the negotiation for £150 had failed, as he did not expect to get more; but Tirarau, having made up his mind to demand £200, changed the state of affairs, and it was necessary to give that sum, or he would not have permitted the land to be sold for less.

Parua.—Reporting that he has paid for this Block. Otaika, Whangarei, 19th November, 1857.

SIR,—

With reference to the subject of the purchase of the Kaiawa Block of One thousand three hundred and seventy-two acres, and the payment of the money to the Chief Tirarau, about which I had the honor to address you on the 30th September last, I have to report that I had a long conference with that Chief on the 6th instant; and as he promises to procure the signatures of the other claimants to the Deed, and pay them a share of the money for the land, I handed him over the money, taking, in the meantime, a Deed of Conveyance from him, which I have the honor to enclose herewith.

I had observed lately that the opposition of Pohe's party to Tirarau's receiving the money had much diminished; and I told Edward Pohe a few days since that Tirarau had been paid, at which he did not express any marked dissatisfaction.

It would have been more agreeable to me to have received your instructions officially notified before taking this step; but Tirarau was so impatient of any delay, and so bent on an immediate compliance with his wishes, and, I being apprehensive of his quarrelling with the other claimants who had opposed him, and still further complicating the question, that I felt satisfied the course I took was the best for the public welfare.

I told him that I was awaiting the further instructions of the Government on this matter, and he agreed that the money was to remain untouched in his possession until the final decision of the Government is obtained and communicated through me to him.

General Return of all transactions relating to Land Purchases from June, 1856, to December, 1857. District Land Commissioner's Office, Whangarei, 11th February, 1858.

SIR,—

I have the honor to enclose a Return of all transactions in which I have been engaged, connected with the purchase of land in the Whangarei District, since the 30th June, 1856, as requested in your letter of the 7th December, 1857.

Some of the blocks, the purchase of which has been completed, will be observed to be of smaller extent than those at present under negotiation. I would therefore remark for your information, that it having been left by yourself to my discretion to judge which particular lands of those approved to be purchased by the Government should be first proceeded with, I decided on acquiring those immediately adjoining the already located districts, having frontage to Whangarei Harbour, or connected with it by roads already opened up by the settlers, and thus available for immediate colonization. Such lands are invariably more difficult to acquire from the Natives than the back country, and, if remaining in their hands, a value is progressively added to them by the improvements of the contiguous lands in the possession of European settlers. A disposition to sell them having opportunely manifested itself by the Natives, I embraced the opportunity at once, in preference to purchasing lands of greater extent in the interior, which I felt assured the owners would be willing to dispose of after the lands on the coast had been bought.

These anticipations have now been completely realized, and there is no doubt but that the purchases of all the blocks under negotiation will be speedily settled as soon as the district surveyor determines their extent.

I have, &c.,

John Grant Johnson, District Land Commissioner.

Donald McLean, Esq.,

Chief Commissioner, Auckland.

Kaiawa.—To effect settlement of Native claims. Chief Land Purchase Commissioner's Office, Auckland, March 15th, 1858.

SIR,—

I have the honor, by direction of His Excellency the Governor, to request that you will use your endeavours to effect a complete settlement of the claims of the Natives to the Kaiwa Block, recently purchased by you in order that it may be handed over to the Province with the least possible delay, as emigrants from Nova Scotia are now waiting to settle upon it.

I have, &c.,

Thos. H. Smith, Assistant Native Secretary.

District Commissioner, Whangarei.

Kaiawa.—Relative to Claim preferred by Hata Kingi. Whangarei, 22nd March, 1858.

SIR,—

With reference to the letter of Hata Kingi, which has been referred to me for my report, I have the honor to state that it refers to the Kaiawa Block, the money for which was paid to Tirarau, on the recommendation of the Chief Commissioner, who has confidence in the integrity of that Chief.

I would, however, observe that Tirarau is one of the most difficult Chiefs to deal with of any in the country; and every negotiation with him must be conducted in the most guarded and cautious manner, as when he once takes up a point he will not swerve from it on any consideration. And, in the present instance, the reason I paid the money was that he considered it had been promised to him by Mr. McLean (without reference to me) and he had stated this before all the Natives, and had also made up his mind to the disposal of it. Had it been withheld at my instance, he would have considered his dignity lowered,—he would not only have stopped the sale of the 1,372 acres, but also that of 10,000 acres adjoining it, the survey of which is now nearly completed, and perhaps put a veto on the sale of all the land in the district.

The money for Kaiawa has not been divided yet amongst the claimants, and Tirarau has neither told me or them what he intends to do with it. They are all submitting to this without a remonstrance, with the exception of Haimona Hakiro and his three sons, the eldest of whom is the writer of the enclosed letter. I consider their-claim to Twenty-five pounds of the £200 to be an equitable adjustment.

My own opinion is, that possession might be taken of the land, by Europeans, without any interruption on the part of the Natives, for their fear of Tirarau would prevent their taking any active measures; but, while this state of things exists, I cannot certify that the Native Title is extinguished.

Symptoms of discontent among the Natives with the conduct of Tirarau in various other matters besides this are becoming apparent; and I would recommend that, in any future dealings with him, the system of the money being divided amongst the claimants by the District Commissioner be adopted, as it has been in all the dealings I have had with other Natives, to the general satisfaction of all parties concerned.

I am informed that Tirarau proceeds shortly to Auckland to see the Chief Commissioner, when that gentleman or his deputy may be able to come to some satisfactory arrangement with him on the Parua question.

I have, &c.,

John Grant Johnson, District Commissioner.

Thos. H. Smith, Esq.,

Assistant Native Secretary, Auckland.

Kaiawa.—The Natives have ceased to oppose the Sale of this Block. Whangarei, 17th May, 1858.
SIR,—

With reference to your letter of the 15th March last, requesting, by the direction of His Excellency the Governor, that I would use my best endeavours to effect a complete settlement of the claims of the Natives to the Kaiawa Block, I have the honor to inform you that the principal obstacle to the final settlement of this question has been overcome—the representatives (represented by Hata Kingi, whose claims I reported upon in my letter, dated 22nd March, 1858) having withdrawn their opposition to Tirarau, in compliance with my solicitations to that effect.

Another party, also living in Parua Bay, named the Ngati Tu—whose cause William Edward Pohe advocated—have signified their willingness to be satisfied, whether Tirarau divides the payment of the land with them or not.

A third party, however, including the Edward William Pohe himself, still clamour that a share of the money in the possession of Tirarau be paid to them. The claims of this last party are, in my opinion, very vague and uncertain, arising from the hereditary right advanced by an old man. named Hine Waru, derived through some undefined ancestry belonging to the former—but now extinct—tribe of Ngati Tahuu, who inhabited this district at one time, but which appears to apply equally to almost every spot of land in this part of the country.

If it was a matter to be determined by me; I would be inclined to regard a claim of this nature as not valid; but the point never having been, to my knowledge, defined by the Government as to what, in their opinion, constitutes a valid claim on the part of a Native to land—or, if it has been determined, no instructions have ever been given on the subject for my guidance, and the usages of the aborigines themselves being so completely at variance in parallel cases that no rule of action can be formed from them,—the only course appears to be, either to satisfy every claim brought, forward with a payment, or procure its withdrawal on the part of the claimants; which latter method, in the present instance, seems to be the only way to obtain the object desired, as any attempt to induce Tirarau to divide the money in opposition to his pre-arranged plans would be quite unavailing.

Having thus fully laid before you the present aspect of this complicated case, you will, no doubt, be enabled to judge whether the Native Title can be proclaimed to have been extinguished at once, and the land thrown open to the settlement of the Nova Scotian immigrants, or whether it will be necessary to await the relinquishment of this outstanding claim—or, in my opinion, pretended claim—on the part of the Natives.

I have, &c.,

John Grant Johnson, District Commissioner.

Donald McLean, Esq.,
Chief Commissioner.

Kaiaiva.—Eru Pohe has withdrawn his opposition to its occupation. Whangarei, 29th May, 1858.
SIR,—

With reference to my letter of the 17th instant, on the subject of the adjustment of the Native claims to the Kaiawa Block, I have the honor to inform you that I have seen the Edward Pohe, and reasoned with him on the matter, and that the result is, that he now will consent to the occupation of the Block by the Europeans, although he still expects to receive a portion of the money from Tirarau. The question would now appear to be entirely a Native one between themselves, and I do not see any reason why the land should be any longer withheld from settlement on account of Native opposition.

I have, &c.,

John Grant Johnson, District Land Commissioner.

Donald McLean, Esq.,

No. 55 MEMORANDUM by the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Kaiawa.—Approving of Mr. Commissioner Johnson's arrangements.

Recommended that Mr. District Commissioner Johnson should be informed that the arrangements he has made with the Natives for the withdrawal of their opposition to the sale of the Kaiawa Block are very satisfactory.

The claim adduced by Pohe, as being derived from one of his ancestors, whose rights or occupancy according to Maori custom cannot be substantiated, is so vague and unsatisfactory that it appears no compensation should be made to Pohe, inasmuch as that Chief failed to produce any evidence of his having a valid right of ownership over the land, after a careful investigation which I made when he was last in Town. In fact the impression left on my mind by Pohe was that he was endeavouring to extort money from Te Tirarau or the Government for a claim, the justice of which he could not substantiate. A right of ownership within 20 or 30 years should be proved by Pohe to enable him to make any claim.

Under all the circumstances of the case, I recommend that this Block, which is so much desired by the Nova Scotia settlers, should be proclaimed in the usual manner.

Donald McLean, Chief Commissioner.

Waikeriauera.—Reporting Payment of £500 for this Block. Whangarei, 19th August, 1859.

SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you, for the information of His Excellency the Governor, that after my arrival at Pakiri, on the 4th instant, for the purpose of paying the sum of Five hundred pounds (£500) to Te Kiri and others for the purchase of Waikeriawera, a messenger was immediately despatched to Kaipara for Arama Karaka to come and participate in the payment for that land, and as after the lapse of ten days, neither the messenger nor Arama Karaka made his appearance, Te Kiri, Te Urunga, Hori Te More, and the other Natives became so impatient, that I was compelled to pay over the money to them (they having promised to satisfy any claim which Arama Karaka has on the land), or run the risk of breaking off the arrangement altogether for an indefinite period, and on Monday the 15th the deed was executed and the money paid over to Te Kiri and Te Urunga.

An instalment of One hundred pounds (£100) on account of an advance of Two hundred and fifty-one pounds one shilling (£251 1s.) which has been made to Te Kiri by the Government to complete the purchase of a vessel, was handed to me, together with Twenty pounds (£20) from Hori Te More on account of Fifty pounds (£50) which has been advanced to him on the Mangawhara Block, after which I proceeded on my way to Whangarei. On my arrival at Mangawhai in the evening I was informed that Makoare and Timoti, two Kaipara chiefs, were drowned, which was the cause of the messenger and Arama Karaka being detained at Kaipara.

The deed of cession, together with the description of boundaries, is enclosed herewith. I have no apprehension that Arama Karaka will raise any objection to my having paid the money to Te Kiri under the circumstances above stated. Yet it may be advisable that the Proclamation of the block be deferred for a short period, until I have an opportunity of explaining to him personally the reasons which induced me to pay over the money to Te Kiri in his absence.

I have, &c.,

John Rogan, District Commissioner.

Whangarei.—Respecting Te Kiri's interference with John Suckley. Native Land Purchase Department, 27th

August, 1859.
SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that John Suckley, a purchaser of an allotment of land at Omaha, within the Pakiri Block, reports that his occupation of the same has been interfered with by certain Natives not named.

As the interference referred to is probably the act of the Te Kiri, who, as you are aware, claims a reserve at Omaha, I am directed by the Governor to request that you will proceed without delay to Omaha, in order to communicate with that Chief, and to enquire into and report on this case for His Excellency's information.

You will also be good enough to ascertain the grounds of the claim preferred by Te Kiri, and, if they appear reasonable, upon what terms he may be willing to treat for the satisfaction thereof, at the same time using your influence to induce him to abstain from further interference, and await an appeal to the Governor, founded upon facts not previously brought to his Excellency's notice. I have enclosed the former papers relating to the question for your information.

Whangarei.—Respecting offer by Natives of a Block inland of Kaurihohore. Auckland, 30th September, 1859.
SIR,—

With reference to your letter of 1st August last, requesting me to proceed to Whangarei for the purpose of making enquiries into the offer of land referred to in Sir Osborne Gibbes' letter to His Excellency the Governor, I have the honor to acquaint you, for His Excellency's information, that at a meeting of the principal Native claimants to the land situated inland of Kaurihohore Block, it was agreed by the parties to dispose of some land in that locality, which was formerly offered on the 23rd and 27th of August. After my return from Pataua and Ngunguru, I received your letter requesting me to proceed forthwith to Pakiri, and I had, therefore, no time to examine the ground. I am informed by Mr. Bedliugton that the probable extent of this offer is 10,000 or 12,000 acres, in which there is a good proportion of volcanic land, and submit that I may be authorized to employ that gentleman in perambulating and surveying the boundaries of the land, as he is well acquainted with the Natives, has an extensive knowledge of the country, and is a first-class surveyor.

Whangarei.—Assisting Superintendent in purchase of lands. Whangarei, 2nd May, 1864.
SIR,—

In accordance with your instructions to me to assist his Honor the Superintendent of Auckland, on his visit to this District, in effecting any purchase of land, I have the honor to inform you that I waited on his Honor on his arrival on the 16th ultimo, and was enabled to obtain for him from the principal Chiefs a promise to cede to the Government the necessary land for the road when laid out between Whangarei and Otaika River.

His Honor also subsequently requested me to endeavour to purchase the whole of the land through which the foregoing road passes, between Whangarei and the Otaika River, an area of Four to Five thousand acres. This I have taken steps to do, but from there being several claimants from different Tribes, will not be able to complete it for some time.

I attended on his Honor to give him any assistance in my power while here, and accompanied him on the 20th ultimo on his overland trip to within twenty miles of the Bay of Islands, to point out the different lines of route.

Whangarei.—Respecting Purchase of Whanui and Taiharuru Blocks. Whangarei, 2nd May, 1864.
SIR,—

I have the honor to request that you will be good enough to submit for the consideration of the Hon. the Colonial Secretary, in the event of his approval of my proposed purchase of the Whanui and Taiharuru Blocks of land:

That the money should be sent to the care of H. Aubrey, Esq., R.M., Whangarei Heads, as I am now proceeding to make the necessary subdivision in the land, to regulate the payment to the different claimants, as I am anxious not to keep the Natives idling about waiting for their money longer than is necessary.

Also, if Mr. Surveyor Sinclair, who surveyed the Whanui and Taiharuru Blocks, is still in Auckland, that he be instructed with as little delay as is possible to furnish me with blank form of deed, with reduced plan of those blocks and the lands reserved by the Natives; also a memorandum of the boundaries.

Whangarei.—Whanui and Taiharuru Blocks purchased. Whangarei, 2nd May, 1864.

SIR,—

In accordance with your letter of the 15th January last, authorizing me to negotiate the purchase of the Whanui and Taiharuru Blocks for any sum not exceeding Two thousand pounds, I have now the honor to inform you that I succeeded last week in assembling the whole of the Natives interested in those blocks of land. After a short discussion, which, if prolonged, I saw would only lead to further complications and Total failure in my object, I made them a distinct offer of Two shillings per acre (£1,800) for the total acreage of the two blocks, viz., 17,849 acres. My offer was unanimously agreed to by the whole of the Natives present. On account of a disputed boundary, which, trifling in itself, I feared might lead to trouble, I subsequently promised a further payment of Fifty pounds, making a total amount of £1,850. Trusting that the arrangement I have made will meet with your approbation, I have now the honor to enclose a Requisition for your approval.

Whangarei.—Offer for Sale of Te Haukanapanapa. Whangarei, 30th July, 1864.

SIR,—

I have the honor to hand you herewith a letter which I wrote for Mohi Te Peke (a Native of Ngunguru), at his dictation.

It conveys his assent to sell a piece of land called Te Haukanapanapa, situated on the road between Whangarei and Ngunguru, about four miles from the former. It is bounded on one side by the Kaurihohore Block; is of excellent quality, and will lead to several other large and valuable blocks in its neighbourhood which will be offered for sale to the Government. Its extent I am unable to state; but this point is immaterial, as this purchase made will settle the long-existing disputes and rival claims between the Whangarei and Ngunguru Natives on all the lands in its neighbourhood.

I beg most respectfully to suggest that I may be allowed to negotiate with the Natives for its purchase, and make the necessary survey.

In accordance with his wish I have surveyed the best line of road from Whangarei to the Otaika River, and have also arranged with the Natives about the price per acre to be paid (viz., 10s.), and also obtained a small piece of land at site of bridge.

Whangarei.—Land offered at Wananake. Auckland, 27th August, 1864.

SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that the Ngatiwai tribe have offered to me for sale to the Government a large block of land situated between Wananake, on the South, and Mimiwhangata, on the North, and extending inland to the Wairua River. The area I compute at 30,000 acres or more.

The owners of this block met at Whangarei, and, after a few days discussion with the Natives there, owners of the adjacent land, agreed to the boundaries of their several claims.

The block is adjacent to the Hikurangi Block of Government land, and, though hilly on the coast line, is level and of good available quality inland. The northern end runs up nearly to the Ruapekapeka Block lately purchased.

I now beg that I may be authorized to survey and negotiate the purchase of this block.

The fourth is the small island near to the land occupied by Mr. Aubrey, about half an acre in extent.

Whangarei.—Claims in Matapouri Block arranged. Whangarei, 20th September, 1864.
SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you, in reference to the old land claims at Matapouri, that I have at length succeeded in coming to an arrangement with the Natives, subject to the approval of the Government.

The difficulty in coming to a settlement of this claim was the opposition made by the Tutukaka Natives to the south boundary, which they have now withdrawn, on my promising them a small compensation in money.

The survey of the Matapouri Block is complete, with the exception of the south boundary, which I propose completing at the first opportunity; the area of this land will be between 4,000 and 5,000 acres to be ceded to the Government.

The sum the Natives have consented to receive, in full compensation for their claims, is One hundred and twenty pounds (£120).

I now beg to submit this arrangement and the payment to the claimants of the above sum for your approval.

SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that I have completed the survey of the "Mangari" Block, offered for sale to the Government in January last by Hori Kingi.

I also beg to submit, for your consideration and approval, the payment to him and the other owners of this land the sum of £330, as a final and complete settlement of their claims on this block of land, which contains 2,800 acres; about two-thirds of which are poor, hilly, open, clay land; and one-third, on the banks of the Mangari and Waipiu Rivers, of good quality. The price asked is at the rate of 2s. 4d. an acre, a price. I consider low when the daily increasing competition from private purchasers is taken into consideration.

I also beg most respectfully to call to your attention that it is adjacent to Government land (the Ruatangata Block), to which the present block would give a defined river boundary, in place of the present undefined line

Whangarei.—Land Purchases during 1864. Auckland, 27th December, 1864.

SIR,—

In compliance with your request, I beg to hand you a list of purchases of Native lands made by me during this year:—

And I beg to remark seriatim on them as follows:—

The Pataua Block, surveyed by desire of the Old Land Claims' Commissioner, is the private property of Mr Thorne, of Sydney; is undisputed by the Natives, to whom I paid a sum of £120.

The Wananaki Block, situated on a small river of that name on the coast, is an old land claim of Captain Salmon's, who received Scrip some years ago from the Government in exchange; will be a valuable site for a township when the adjacent country, now offered for sale, is purchased from the Natives. There is no dispute that I am aware of on this block, but the Whanauwera Tribe, who are living on a portion of it, are anxious to purchase the portion occupied by them.

The Whanui Block, situated near the Whangarei River, is undisputed by the Natives.

The Waikare Block is situated on the Coast; when purchased, I considered it to be one of the fairest and most indisputable sales; but on the return of Hirini Tipene from England, some months after the sale was completed, he set up a claim to a portion named Tikitikitohe. His claim I never heard of before, nor did his father, whom I asked to accompany me when I paid the money, set up any claim on behalf of his son. I have been trying to make the Natives, who received the money, settle with Hirini, but in vain. His claim, consequently, still exists. He has, I believe, written to the Government on the subject.

The Hokopua Block is a small piece of land in the Ngunguru River, a portion of Mr. Busby's claim.

The Matapouri Block is an old land claim on the coast, for which Scrip was given some years ago by the Government. I settled the Native claims on it for a sum of £120, and do not now think that there are any Native disputes or claims upon it.

Islands in the Whangarei River; is a recent purchase, and no claims exist on them, Whangarei and Otaika Road was purchased at the request of the Superintendent of Auckland to connect the line of proposed road between Whangarei and Auckland via Mangapai, Waipu and Mahurangi, to Auckland.

Waikaraka Road is the present track running from the Whangarei River to the Settlers' Cultivation, through the Native reserves

These are the whole of the purchases made by me this year; and I may add that I had not only to conduct the negotiations for purchase, but also to make the surveys myself unassisted.

The blocks of land now under offer from the Native owners are—

The Mangari Block

The Wairua Block

The Wairua (Coast Block)

The South Wananake Block

And an undefined block lying between the Wairua River on the south, and the Ruapekapeka Block on the north, including, I believe, the proposed Bay of Islands road.

The Mangari Block.—The survey of this is now completed, and the area calculated at 2,800 acres. A sum of £330 is demanded by the Native owners as purchase money for it.

The Wairua Block.—The survey of this block is now completed, but not yet mapped. I roughly estimate the area at 3,500 acres.

The Wairua Coast Block is a large block of land of about 40,000 acres, situated between Wananake south, and extending northwards to within a short distance of Whangaruru Harbour, and inland to the Wairua River.

South Wananake Block is a block from recent extension of the boundaries of about 20,000 acres, commencing south on the boundaries of the Matapouri Block, and bounded northwards by the Wananake River.

A block (boundaries not yet clearly defined) is also now verbally offered for sale. It commences on the north and west bank of the Wairua River, and extends north to the Ruapekapeka Block.

The sketch accompanying clearly points out the blocks of land purchased, as also those now under offer from the Native owners.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM N. SEARANCKE, District Commissioner.

Whangarei.—Purchase of Mangari Block completed. Auckland, 7th February, 1865.

SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that, by instructions from the Chief Judge New Zealand Land Court, I proceeded to Whangarei, and on the 21st ultimo made and completed the purchase of the Mangari Block of land from the aboriginal owners for the sum of £330, which sum I received from His Honor the Superintendent of Auckland, who now holds my receipt for it.

I now request that I may be informed to whom I am to hand the deed of purchase covering receipt for £330 from the Native sellers (also plan), so that I may be relieved from my liability to the Provincial Government.

I have, &c.,

WILLIAM N. SEARANCKE.

The Hon. the Native Minister, Wellington.

Whangarei Land Purchases. Civil Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 21st June, 1875.

SIR,—

Before this is received in your office, I shall hope to have completed the payment of the Tangihua and Purua Blocks, in the district of Whangarei.

I have already so fully reported, for the information of the Hon. the Native Minister, the steps taken to obtain a cession of the various contiguous Blocks described, I shall now only do myself the honor of saying that, the negotiations having commenced prior to my being relieved of this duty, it was arranged with my successor, and with the Native Minister's concurrence, that the final completion should also be left in my hands. I have the pleasure to state that this has now been done to the satisfaction of the native sellers, and I trust that the arrangements made throughout will also meet with the approval of the Government.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, Civil Commissioner.

The Under Secretary, Native Department,

*Kaipara.—Scott's Claim to Land disputed.*Protector's Office, Auckland, 14th January, 1842.

SIR,—

In reference to the letter referred to me, under blank cover of the 11th inst., respecting land disputed between Mr. Scott and the Natives of Kaipara, I do myself the honor to inform you that the land in question is not included in the purchase made by the Government, nor (according to the statements of the Natives) has any compensation been made for the land, besides an earnest given them by Mr. White, about the year 1839, and a promise that a full payment should be made at a future time. This payment the Natives declare they have not yet received, and consequently feel themselves at liberty to part with some of the timber to Captain Smale.

Is negotiating for the purchase of the Kaipara Flats. Mahurangi, 30th March, 1854.
SIR,—

I have the honor to state for the information of His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government, that I have returned from Whangarei, and am engaged in negotiating with the Natives, for the purchase of a tract of country, known as the "Kaipara Flats," and situated to the westward of this place. Having fully reported upon the purchases lately effected in the Whangarei District, in my letter of the 20th instant, I deemed it more conducive to the public service to proceed with the purchase of land in the Mahurangi district, complaints having been made by the Natives that the settlers were pushing beyond the boundaries of the Government Block, and upon the land offered for sale. The Chief Mate has preceded me to Auckland, and it would be very desirable if the arrangements suggested in my report of the 20th instant, relative to the Native Reserve at the Ruakaka be approved by His Excellency, that the sum of Seventy pounds (£70), which would then be eligible for that Chief, be paid to him without awaiting my arrival.

The claimants to the Kaipara Flats are now assembled together, and appear intent on selling; but even my temporary absence for a few days might result in the postponement of the purchase of this part of the country, which I learn from the District Surveyor is much required by intending settlers.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, Sub-Commissioner for the Purchase of Native Land.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

No. 4. The CHIEF COMMISSIONER to Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON.

General.—Instructions as to purchase of Native Lands. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 18th May, 1854.

SIR,—

The increasing demand for land by the European inhabitants of this Province renders it necessary that measures should be at once adopted to acquire additional tracts of country from the Natives.

- 1st. Your residence for so many years in the Northern portion of this Island, and the knowledge you possess of the different tribes inhabiting it, suggest that you are peculiarly qualified to undertake negotiations for the purchase of land in the Northern part of the Auckland Province.
- 2nd. The District, therefore, which I propose for the present to assign to you for carrying on these duties, comprises the whole of the country lying North of the portage between the Waitemata and Kaipara. I have every confidence that you will use your utmost exertion to acquire from the Natives the whole of their lands within this District, which are not essential for their own welfare, and that are more immediately required for the purposes of colonization.
- 3rd. Having thus conveyed to you in general terms the urgent necessity for acquiring land, you must use your own discretion as to the particular tracts of country which you should first endeavour to purchase; but it is important, before entering on fresh negotiations, that you should pay the instalments due to the Natives for the purchases you have been conducting at Whangarei; for this purpose, a sum of Two hundred and twenty pounds (£220) is placed at your disposal.
- 4th. It is essential that you should take an early opportunity to visit the Kaipara District, to arrange a dispute between the Ngapuhi and Uriohau tribes, respecting some land claimed by Mr. O'Brien, as the dispute is likely, if not speedily adjusted, to interfere with the important trade carried on in that river.
- 5th. I need not point out to you the necessity of encouraging the Natives to act with greater fidelity in their land transactions than they have been recently in the habit of doing; and I trust that by a careful, steady, and systematic arrangement of their claims, with a clear understanding respecting the external boundaries of the lands they dispose of, and the blocks they retain for their own use, that many of the impositions they have been practising will be abandoned.

Wherever practicable, it would be most advisable that the reserves for the Natives should be situated within natural boundaries, such as rivers, creeks, hills, ranges, or other conspicuous features of the country.

- 6th. The Natives should be advised of the advantages of re-purchasing properties for themselves out of the Crown Lands, under the Regulations of the 4th March, 1853, as nothing will more effectually improve their condition, than substituting their present precarious and unsatisfactory tenure for a permanent holding under the Crown, which also extends to them an interest in the political institutions of the Colony from being qualified to vote at elections.
- 7th. When you have established yourself in some central position in your District, I shall write you more fully as to any change in the system which should in future be adopted for acquiring land from the Natives, and I shall be glad to hear frequently from you, and to receive any suggestions on this subject which your local experience may enable you to give.
- 8th. In any treaty with the Natives for the cession of their lands, it is most desirable that they should fully comprehend its nature, and the boundaries should be inserted with the greatest possible care, and in general they should be read aloud three times in the presence of the Natives, whose assent should be unanimously given before appending their signatures to the transfer. Two copies of the description of deeds that I have been in the habit of using are herewith enclosed for your guidance; and, as far as the circumstances are applicable to your District, this form of deed should be adopted, but you are not to insert any clause for additional percentage being paid to the Natives until definite instructions are issued to you on this subject.

In order to facilitate the arrangements for the acquisition of land from the Natives, it is my intention to submit for the consideration of His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government a statement of the necessary expenditure and department that may be required for this purpose, but as the local requirements of each District must be in many instances dissimilar, and subject to contingencies which cannot be at present anticipated, you will be kind enough to give the earliest information of what you consider are the particular requirements of this department in the Northern District.

I have, &c.,

DONALD MCLEAN, Land Commissioner.

John Grant Johnson, Esq., J.P.,

Sub-Commissioner for the purchase of lands from the Natives.

No. 5. Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Reporting Offer of the Ahuroa and Kourawhero Blocks. Mahurangi, 10th June, 1854.

SIR,—

I have the honor to forward to you, for the consideration of His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government, the offer of the Natives named in the margin

NOTE.—Kourawhero.—Te Kiwi, Te Urunga, Te More, Kawea, Te Koru, Rahui, Panapa, Te Rawhiti, Poihipi Mekekati, Ramari, Te Poari Totara, Hori Kingi, Parihoru, Arama Karaka, Hone Waiti, Wiremu Apo, Te Roa, Parahi.

(whom I believe to be the sole owners), to sell the district named the Kaipara Flats, and estimated to contain about Thirty two thousand acres, for the sum of Twelve hundred pounds (£1,200); Nine hundred pounds (£900) of which to be paid to them on execution of the deed of conveyance, and the remaining Three hundred pounds (£300) on the 1st day of January, 1855.

Portions of this block have been much sought after by intending settlers; and independently of its intrinsic value, there exist several cogent reasons for concluding this purchase.

AHUROA.—Hori Kingi, Piri Paraone, Te Hemara, Haupapa, Tohetai, Kawherahi, Toehau, Hiria, Heni, Hemara Tamaiti, Herewini, Makare.

The original Mahurangi sale was made in the 1841, by the Ngatipaoa and Ngapuhi, whom the right of conquest placed in possession of the land, and the descendants of the Kawerau and Ngaitahu, who are the roots of the soil, were not directly treated with at all, and were at that time too obscure, and persecuted by their more powerful neighbours, to urge their own cause. Subsequently, however they united and located on their land which had been sold to the Queen, Hemara taking possession of a part of Mahurangi, and Parihoru, in a similar way, a portion of Matakana. Notwithstanding that ample reserves, and also a small money payment, have been lately granted to satisfy these men, they still waited the opportunity of obtaining some further payment for the lands of their tribe.

The back boundary of the Mahurangi having been overstepped by the Europeans, and several selections and surveys under the new Land Regulations having been made, infringing on land claimed by these Natives, has at length afforded them the opportunity they sought for; and had I not brought about the offer which is the subject of this letter, considerable embarrassment might have arisen to the purchasers of land from the Crown, and I am of opinion that if these arrangements be carried out, which I beg leave to request to urge upon the favorable notice of His Excellency, that the remainder of the Native land in this district will be purchased at a less rate, and that all ill-feeling with the Natives resulting from the former purchase will be forgotten.

I have not yet had time to make a sketch survey of this block, but I am well acquainted with the locality; and with a view of illustrating what I have said, I enclose for your guidance a small map of the Mahurangi and Kaipara districts, shewing the portion already the property of the Crown, and that offered for sale, by which you will perceive that a portion of the Native land lies between the two proposed purchases. And I would suggest that a right of road through it be stipulated for, so that the track of the Northern road may be unobstructed as far as the Northern end of the Mahurangi.

The Natives are anxious that the instalment also of Nine hundred pounds (£900) should be paid at this place; and as it is my intention to make another excursion for the purpose of making a running survey of this block also, on the usual scale of one mile to an inch, no time will be lost in my performing that duty.

I received word that all is quiet on the Wairoa. Taramoeroa is still at Hokianga, and Tirarau is perfectly satisfied about the arrangements relative to the land at Whangarei, and has told me that I need not hurry on his account.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, Sub-Commissioner for the Purchase of Native Land.

Donald McLean, Esq., J.P.,

Commissioner for the Purchase of Native Land.

No. 6. Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Reporting on the quality, &c, of the Kourawhero Block. Township, Mahurangi, 17th June, 1854.

SIR,—

With reference to my letter of the 10th instant, covering the proposals of certain Natives therein mentioned, to sell a block in this District to the Government; for the sum of Twelve hundred pounds (£1,200), I have the honor to inform you that there is embodied in that offer, under one head, two adjoining tracts of land known as the Kourawhero and the Ahuroa. The former is estimated at Nineteen thousand acres, and the latter at Twelve thousand acres, for the sums of Eight hundred pounds (£800) and Four hundred pounds (£400) respectively; and, as you will perceive by reference to the margin of my communication of the 10th instant, belonging to the parties therein named under the above-mentioned separate heads.

I have also to report for your information that I have returned from exploring the Kourawhero or Kaipara Flat, and have embodied the result of my observations of this part of the country, hitherto untraversed by Europeans, in the accompanying sketch, on the scale of one mile to an inch. I think that the Government will have every reason to be satisfied with this Block, and as every information on a new tract of country is grateful to new settlers, I would trespass on your time for a few moments by recounting a short narrative of my journey.

On the 13th instant I pitched my camp on the back line of the old Mahurangi purchase, about two miles westward of the mill, and on the fork between the two rivers, which is the spot marked by the Natives as the boundary of the Government land. I thence proceeded westward through a plain about two miles wide, consisting of undulating open land, well adapted for sheep walks. After proceeding for about a mile, an opening in the hills is visible to the South-west through which the small stream of Kourawhero flows. This valley is from a half-mile to a mile in width, and is composed of alluvial lands of the richest description. About four miles further inland the main valley terminates in an amphitheatre surrounded by hills, containing several thousand acres of the richest fiats, interspersed with belts of the most valuable timber. I penetrated to the extreme North-west angle of this valley, and ascended an open hill, from which I was enabled to take the compass bearings of the North and West boundary of the block. From this point, stretching away in a South-easterly direction, another valley could be seen, which appeared to join the Western portion of the Ahuroa; and from the fact that I was unable to see the termination of this valley from the elevated situation I occupied, I should say it was of very considerable extent. Throughout every part of this country the ranges are covered with the heaviest timber, mostly kauri, and when once opened out by the proposed Northern road, many capabilities which are not at present apparent, will be developed by the energy of the settlers.

I returned to this place on the 16th instant, where I am waiting to hear the result of my communications of the 3rd and 10th instant, to yourself. The party of Natives whom I arranged with to transport me on the Kaipara being in town, it would be equally convenient for me to summon the rest of the Natives to Auckland, and have the instalments paid at that place, as I do not know but what I may be necessitated to repair thither and take a fresh start to the North, either by sea, or down the waters of the Kiapara.

The Ahuroa is bounded by a very inaccessible range on this side, and is very heavily timbered. The available land will be found in the back or western end of it, but I am afraid it will not be accessible from the east side, as the ranges all run North and South. On this account, the price demanded has only been one half that of the other blocks.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, District Land Commissioner.

Donald McLean, Esq.,

Land Commissioner.

Kourawhero.—To effect the Purchase of this Block. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 19th June, 1854.
SIR,—

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant, in reference to the sale by the Natives of the district known as the Kaipara Flats, and estimated to contain 32,000 acres for a sum of Twelve hundred pounds (£1,200), Nine hundred pounds (£900) of which you wish to pay to the claimants at once.

I fully concur in the reasons adduced by you for making this purchase, and I have the pleasure of transmitting to you His Excellency's authority for making this purchase, together with the funds necessary for paying the first instalment.

The right of road through the Native land you allude to should be stipulated for by yourself in whichever way you consider most conducive to the interests of the public.

No. 8. Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Kourawhero.—Has Purchased the Kaipara Flats for £900. Mahurangi, 22nd June, 1854.
SIR,—

I had the honor to receive your letter of the 19th instant, transmitting the necessary authority for the purchase of the Kaipara Flats, and advising the transmission of the sum of Nine hundred pounds (£900) which I required for that object.

The amount I have paid this day to the claimants here assembled, and beg to forward herewith the Deed of Conveyance from the Natives to the Crown. The Ahuroa, Kourawhero, and Kaipara Flats being all contiguous, I have included the whole in one transaction and in one Deed.

In carrying through these negotiations, I have endeavoured strenuously to extend the payments over a time, and to induce the Natives to re-purchase from the Crown any land they may wish to retain in the blocks for themselves; both measures being, I conceive, when acted upon judiciously, a great improvement on the system of purchasing land from the Natives which has been hitherto adopted. Both these measures are, however, strongly opposed by the Natives in this District, because they are new to them.

You are already aware of the extent to which the term of payment has been carried; and on reference to the Deed you will perceive a promise that the Native Chief Te Kiri Kaiparaoa stipulates for the right of purchase of Forty acres (40 acres) in this block at Ten shillings (10s.) per acre under the new Regulations; and he has further authorized me to deduct the amount required out of the instalment payable in January, 1855.

This, I am aware, is irregular; but, as the principle sought to be carried out is a very important one to be introduced in this District, where the sellers of land are so fond of making reserves, which are very inconvenient to the settlers, when they can do so without paying for them, I beg to request you to obtain an advance of the sum required to purchase the said Forty acres out of moneys in the hands of the Government applicable to Native purposes, and have this arrangement completed, which the parties concerned are favourably inclined to by this new project, for which purpose a similar opportunity might not readily again present itself.

I have &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, District Commissioner.

Kouraichero.—Te Kiri Kaiparaoa is entitled to purchase 40 acres in this block. Land Commissioner's Office, 16th October, 1854.
SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that a selection of 40 acres has been made under the new land regulations on behalf of a chief named Te Kiri Kaiparaoa, in the Kourawhero Block, lately purchased at Mahurangi.

The land in question is a sacred place, which the seller desired to re-purchase, and was allowed the privilege of doing so by a clause inserted in the deed of sale to the Crown, guaranteeing him priority of selection.

It would be very desirable that a Government surveyor do survey, and put the Native applicant in possession of his purchase, and I have accordingly to request that you will be pleased to give the necessary instructions to that effect.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, Land Commissioner.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary.

Tokatoka.—Recommending purchase of this Block. Omanu, Wairoa River, Kaipara, 18th December, 1854.
SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that, adjoining to, and to the south of, Wakahara is situated Tokatoka, about which a dispute had arisen between Tirarau and Manukau, and which, for the peace of the district, demanded immediate adjustment, as well as being the position required by the Resident Magistrate and Sub-Collector of Customs at this port, with whom I have had a correspondence on the subject, a copy of which I beg to enclose for your information. Under these circumstances, I am induced to recommend your obtaining the sanction of His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government to the purchase of the Tokatoka Block, containing Four thousand acres (4,000 acres), for the sum of Three hundred pounds (£300); One hundred pounds (£100) of which has been already paid at Auckland, and the remaining Two hundred pounds (£200) can be paid to the Chief named in the margin, who has been deputed to receive the money by the rest of the claimants, except Twenty pounds (£20) of the amount, which has been agreed to be given to Parore for his claims. This sum may be sent to him, to the care of H. Atkyns, Esq., Mangawhare, who, I have no doubt, will be kind enough to pay him the money, and see the Deed signed, as the old chief is too proud to receive it at the hands of another Native. Enclosed is a sketch of the proposed purchase, and the Deed detailing the boundaries, which was executed at the time of the payment of the first instalment of One hundred pounds, is lodged in your office at Auckland.

Paraone Te Rangi, of Kaipara.

I have, &c.,

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, District Land Commissioner.

Enclosure 1.F.D. FENTON, Esq., R.M., to Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON.

Kaipara, December 1st, 1854.

SIR,—

I do myself the honor to call your attention to the urgent necessity which exists for the immediate completion of the purchase of the Tokatoka Block of land on this river. Apart from the urgent political reasons which exist for the immediate acquisition of this property by the British Government, the natural advantages of position, and the peculiar physical character of the Wairoa River; render this locality the only one available for the Government officers of this district. It is situated midway between the districts of country at present occupied by merchants and visited by ships, is equi-distant from, and will form a good neutral territory between the Ngapuhi and Ngatiwhatua tribes, recently at war, and possesses the only natural landing place for many miles in each direction. I fear that the price demanded by the Natives will be large, as they are well aware of the importance of the place, but I trust that no insurmountable difficulties will be found to the acquisition of this territory. Let me, however, remind you that the expense of making a landing place for the Custom-house will in all probability far exceed the difference in price between the Tokatoka Block and any other of similar extent, and I would urge you, if not incompatible with the instructions received by you from the Government, to complete the acquisition of this territory whenever you visit this river for the purpose of arranging Mr. O'Brien's claim.

I have, &c.,

SIR,—

I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 1st instant, and having examined the localities in the river, I fully concur in the view you have taken of the importance of the acquisition of the Tokatoka Block, and having, as you are aware, with your assistance, happily been successful in reconciling the animosities of the contending tribes, I entered into an arrangement for the completion of the purchase of the block in question, so soon as the sanction of his Excellency the Officer Administering the Government is obtained for the payment of the final amount agreed upon between the Natives and myself of Two hundred pounds (£200).

No. 11.Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Reporting Reconciliation of the Hostile Tribes at Kaipara. Omanu, Wairoa River, Kaipara, 18th December, 1854.

SIR,—

In reference to my report on the Native disputes in the Kaipara, dated 20th July last, I am happy to inform you that I have carried out my intention expressed therein, and that, at a general meeting of the contending parties, which was held at Mangawhare last week, a complete reconciliation between the hostile tribes was effected, and the feud which threatened to disturb the very important and necessary trade of these rivers may now, I think, be safely considered to be set at rest. As I endeavoured to explain in my former report, the claims of Mr. O'Brien to the lands of Wakahara has been the cause of bringing the tribes of Hokianga with those of the Kaipara to issue with the Natives of the Wairoa under Parore and Tirarau.

At this meeting the right of Taramoeroa over the Wakahara was fully admitted by Parore and Tirarau, and having been instructed to complete the purchase made by Mr. O'Brien of Wakahara, which now, through being the cause of contention among the Natives, had become a matter of necessity, I managed to extinguish the whole of the Native claims on the same for the sum of One hundred and seventy pounds (£170).

The money was, by Tirarau's consent, placed before Taramoeroa, who immediately handed it over to Tirarau and Parore. These two chiefs having seen this mark of respect publicly shown to them as the former conquerors of the land in question, felt their pride satisfied, and formally placed the whole amount again before Taramoeroa, by whom it was divided among the real owners of the soil.

On examining the ground contained in the claim of Mr. O'Brien as admitted by the Natives, and corresponding to the boundaries given in the original deed, I found the contents to be still less than I supposed at the date of my last report. The purchase comprises a frontage of a mile and a quarter to the Wairoa river, and bounded on either side by the creeks named Waikaka and Horaka, and runs back to a stream called Ranawe, a tributary of the Mangonui river, which is a large tributary stream of the Wairoa, and may be about four miles inland from the Wairoa river. These estimates of the extent would produce Three thousand acres (3,000 acres), and the payments proved to have been made by Mr. O'Brien of Two hundred and seventy-five pounds eighteen shillings, as reported by the Surveyor-General, added to the subsequent payment of One hundred and seventy pounds (£170) made by the Government, would amount to the sum of Four hundred and forty-five pounds eighteen shillings (£445 18s.) as the total cost of the block. I beg to transmit to you herewith the conveyance from the Natives to the Crown, and also a sketch of the purchase, and hope that the measures I have taken will meet with the approval of His Excellency the Officer Administering the Government.

JOHN GRANT JOHNSON, District Land Commissioner.

Enclosing Deed for 500 Acres purchased from Manukau. Omanu, Wairoa River, Kaipara, 18th December, 1854.

SIR,—

I have the honor to enclose a deed from the Native Chief Manukau of the Uriohau tribe to the Crown, giving up a piece of land guaranteed to contain Five hundred acres which I have purchased for the sum of Fifty pounds.

The circumstance which led to this purchase was, that Manukau offered a large block on the rivers Wairoa and Otamatea, the merits of which I was unable to investigate through the various stages necessary before purchase, on account of a press of more urgent business in another locality, and from the difficulty I have experienced in making an equitable bargain with this Chief. I could not make him any advance on account; but, as he was anxious for cash, and having a strong voice in affairs here, I thought the most advisable plan was to make a purchase for a definite portion in the manner which has been done; so that, in the event of my not being able to agree with Manukau about the large block, no disadvantage will accrue to the public interest.

Tokatoka.—Transmitting Deed of the Block. Land Purchase Department, Auckland, 19th April, 1855.
SIR,—

I do myself the honor to enclose for His Excellency's information the original Deed with receipt endorsed thereon, together with translation, for a block of land on the Kaipara, known as the "Toka Toka," by which it will be seen that the final instalment of Two hundred pounds (£200) has been paid to the Natives, making in the whole the sum of Three hundred pounds (£300) for this block, estimated to contain about Four thousand (4,000) acres. It will be remembered as the site chosen for a Custom House, and is likely to become of value. The sum of Twenty pounds (£20) has been placed to the credit of Mr. Johnson, as the portion due to the Chief Parore, and will be either handed to that Chief by Mr. Johnson himself, or forwarded to the care of Hastings Atkyns, Esq., who has undertaken to see it delivered. In the meantime, I know of no objection to the block being surveyed and laid open for selection.

Respecting advance of £20 to Parore on account of Tokatoka. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 26th June, 1856.
SIR,—

I have the honor to request that you will furnish me with information upon the following point:—Mr. Johnson, in the purchase of the Tokatoka Block, at Kaipara, made an arrangement with the consent of the selling party, that a sum of Twenty pounds should be paid to the Chief Parore for his claim upon that block, which amount it is evident from his report to me on the subject, Mr. Johnson intended to have deducted from the final payment of Two hundred pounds (£200) for the Tokatoka Block.

It appears that this final payment was made by you in Auckland on the 13th February, 1855, but there is nothing to show that the sum of Twenty pounds (£20) paid to Parore, was refunded by the recipient of the final payment. Parore has given a separate receipt for Twenty pounds (£20) on the 10th September, 1855, and Paraone and the other parties to whom you made the payment on the 13th February, 1855, give a receipt in full for Two hundred pounds (£200). The point, therefore, on which I now request information from you is whether the Twenty pounds (£20) was deducted by or repaid to you out of the final Two hundred pounds (£200) for Tokatoka, whether that sum was paid in full to the Natives, or whether it should be entered in my accounts as a separate payment over and above the amount originally fixed as the price of the block.

I have, &c.,

DONALD MCLEAN, Chief Commissioner.

Tokatoka.—Explaining receipt for £20 advanced to Parore on account of Black. District Commissioner's Office, Bay of Islands, 4th July, 1856.

SIR,—

In reply to your letter of the 26th in reference to the payment for the Tokatoka Block, I have the honor to state that the arrangement made by Mr. Commissioner Johnson and finally carried out by myself, stood thus:—The deed drawn out (I believe by Mr. Johnson), fixed the entire sum at Two hundred pounds (£200) out of which Twenty pounds was reserved and placed by me in the Union Bank, to the credit of either Mr. Hastings Atkins, of Kaipara, or Mr. Johnson, at the request of the latter, on behalf of Parore, One hundred and eighty pounds having been handed over to Paraone and his party, and receipts given in full for the amount originally agreed upon.

If Parore had not signed the deed, it was no doubt intended by Mr. Johnson that the receipt given by that chief for the Twenty pounds (£20) should be appended to the original document, making but one entire and complete arrangement.

I think that this explanation, as nearly as I can remember, will furnish the information requested, and will enable you to make the entry under one heading, which was evidently Mr. Johnson's intention when the arrangement was made by him for the purchase.

I have, &c.,

H. T. KEMP, District Commissioner.

Land Purchase Department, Auckland.

The CHIEF COMMISSIONER to Mr. COMMISSIONER JOHNSON.

Respecting land purchased from Te Uri-o-Hau.[unclear: Waikiekie] Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 3rd November, 1856.

SIR,—

Enclosed, I send open for your perusal, two letters, one to Tirarau, and another to Parore, which you will have the goodness to see delivered at your earliest convenience.

These letters detail the nature of the arrangements entered into with Te Uriohau tribe since Tirarau and Parore left Auckland.

You will observe that Te Uriohau tribe have disposed of the whole of the land claimed by them between the Tauraroa and Manganui rivers, extending to the back boundary of the block purchased by you from Te Manihera at Ruarangi.

The price paid to the Natives has been £400, the block being estimated at 12,000 acres; should it exceed this quantity, they are to be paid at the rate of £30 for every 1000 acres in excess of the above estimate, or to refund £30 for every thousand acres under the estimate of 12,000 acres. The disputed land in Maungakaramaea is not included in this purchase; the Natives declined to accept £100, which I offered in order to remove all future difficulties in connection with that transaction; it appeared to me that they felt apprehensive that Tirarau would make it a cause of quarrel with them if they accepted any payment on land sold by him and bordering so close on the Tangihua range, therefore it is perhaps as well that the matter should stand over, leaving Tirarau to adjust it himself. I have to request that you will use your influence with Tirarau to prevent his bringing any armed party to cut down spars on the territory now in dispute between him and Paikea, as it is reported that he intends bringing 400 of his allies to work a forest in the vicinity of Parore's present residence, which might, if the Uriohau also resort to similar steps, result in dangerous consequences, affecting the tranquility of that part of the Island.

I have, &c.,

DONALD MCLEAN, Chief Commissioner,

John Grant Johnson, Esq., J.P.,
District Commissioner, Whangarei.

Kaipara.—To negotiate for Purchase of Land. Land Commissioner's Office, Auckland, 31st January, 1857.
SIR,—

I have the honor to request that you will proceed to Kaipara at your earliest possible convenience, for the purpose of entering upon negotiations with the Natives of that District for the purchase of an extensive block of land which they are desirous of selling to the Government.

As it appears, from what information I have received on the subject, that the land in question is comparatively valueless as a whole, though containing some plains capable of being converted into agricultural and pastoral farms, I would impress upon you the necessity of obtaining the extinguishment of the Native title to it at as low a rate as possible, and on no account to exceed the rate of 8d. per acre.

You will be good enough to arrange for the purchase in one lump sum, one-half to be paid when the external survey has been made and the final negotiations completed; the remainder to be handed over to the Natives in two annual instalments.

From your long experience in land-purchasing operations it will be hardly necessary for me to remind you of the extreme care and accuracy that will be required in defining the boundaries of the block, for which purpose a surveyor has been instructed by the Waste Lands Commissioner to accompany you and cut the lines under your personal superintendence.

You will be good enough to take care that ample and eligible reserves are made for the use of the Natives, the selection, number, and extent of which must be determined by the wishes of the vendors themselves, and your own discretion.

Before completing the negotiations for the final alienation of the above-mentioned block by the Natives, or making arrangements for the acquisition of other and smaller portions of territory, I have to request that you will report to me fully the position and site and probable value in each instance for the information and approval of the Government.

I have, &c.,

SIR,—

I have the honor to request that you will be good enough, during your stay, in the Kaipara District, to have the survey of the Waikiekie Block, purchased from the Natives by the Government on the 30th October last, for the sum of £400, executed, and the boundaries carefully and accurately defined, in order that the Government may be enabled to decide upon the enclosed clause of the Deed of Sale, relative to the extent of the purchase.

Okahu.—Forwarding Deed of Conveyance of Block. Auckland, 25th November, 1857.

SIR,—

I have the honor to enclose herewith a deed of sale and conveyance of a block of land, situated in the Kaipara District, containing about Sixteen thousand (16,000) acres for which the sum of £500 was paid to Manukau, Paraone, and others, on the 23rd instant. This land is bounded by the Tokatoka purchase, Matakohē Block, the Manganui river, and Native land. The survey of the land is completed, with the exception of the river traverse, which, however, does not affect the present arrangement, as it is clearly understood that the title to the land is extinguished to the river boundary. The quality of the land is for the most part rich volcanic soil covered with fern, bush, kauri, and kahikatoa forest; but, owing to its position, it is probable the land will not become available for many years to come.

I have, &c.,

JOHN ROGAN, District Commissioner.

Enclosing Deed of Conveyance of a Block of Land at the Head of the Otamatea River. Auckland, 24th February, 1858.

SIR,—

I have the honor to enclose herewith deed of conveyance of a block of land, situated at the head of Otamatea, a branch of the Kaipara, and extends towards the East Coast to the Hakoru river, which forms the boundary of the Mangawhai purchase, for which the sum of Five hundred pounds (£500) was paid to the chiefs of the Uriohau and Ngatiwhatua tribes on the 20th inst., and subdivided by those chiefs amongst their followers in a very satisfactory manner.

A complete survey of the exterior boundaries of this block has been executed, which contains Eight thousand one hundred and twenty-eight acres of a superior description of land, which is well adapted for agricultural purposes.

The geographical position of this block, together with facilities of water communication which it possesses, both from the East and West Coast, must ensure its becoming a place of importance.

The enclosed description of boundaries is submitted for Proclamation in the New Zealand Gazette.

No. 22. Mr. COMMISSIONER ROGAN to the CHIEF COMMISSIONER.

Matakohe.—Enclosing Deed of Conveyance of Block. Auckland, 20th March, 1858.

SIR,—

I have the honor to enclose herewith a deed of conveyance from the chiefs of Te Uriohau tribe of a block of land called Matakohe, situated on the left bank of the Wairoa river, in the Kaipara district, containing by survey sixty-eight thousand (68,000) acres, for which the sum of Two thousand pounds was paid to those chiefs on the 2nd inst.

That part of the block which is bounded by the Wairpa, and extending towards the line of forest, comprises about fifteen thousand (15,000) acres, of marsh land, covered with raupo, toetoe, coarse grass, wiwi, and other vegetation which usually grows on low land.

There are several small creeks running from the forest through this marsh into the Wairoa river, the largest of which is called the Awaroa. These creeks would form good boundaries for small cattle runs, for which this portion of the block appears adapted.

There is a limited extent of fertile land, covered with fern, light bush, and scrub, at the head of Te Arapaoa, suitable for agricultural farms, and approachable by vessels of more than two hundred tons burthen from the Otamatea. The inferior portion of the block is covered with dense forest, principally kauri, with occasional patches of kahikatea and manuka. The land is very superior in quality, but very broken towards the inland boundary line, and is not likely to be occupied by settlers for many years to come.

A large tract of land, extending from the inland boundary of this block to the back boundary of the Mangawhai and Waipu blocks on the East coast, called Marutu, is now being surveyed, which, when purchased, the native title will be extinguished over the whole of that part of the district.

The description of boundaries is enclosed herewith; and I submit that the proclamation of this block may be deferred for a time, as the chiefs decided at a meeting, during their recent visit to Auckland, that the amount which they received for this land should be deposited in my charge, until I should be at liberty to visit Kaipara, when the money will be subdivided amongst the claimants.

General.—Reporting as to the state of land purchasing operations in the Kaipara District. Auckland, 16th October, 1859.

SIR,—

I have the honor to forward the following statement for His Excellency's information, in reference to the purchase and negotiation of land in the District of Kaipara from February 1857, the period at which negotiations were first entered into by me in that locality, to the present time, showing the quantity of land over which the Native title has been extinguished, the quantity of land surveyed, the purchase of which is not yet completed, the cost of survey, and the probable quantity of land now under negotiation.

The Oruawharo Block was included in Return to House of Representatives 1858, as the price was agreed to by the Natives, but the claimants subsequently differed amongst themselves, and no arrangement has as yet been arrived at between them.

Okaka and Waioneke have not been purchased, as they are small detached blocks, and it was considered inadvisable by the Government to complete the purchase until a larger extent of land should be offered in that locality. The land offered by Paora is adjacent to Waioneke, and it will probably be found, after the survey of Mairitahi, desirable to purchase these blocks, as the land situated on the Kaipara is of good quality.

With regard to the survey of the large block called Mareretu, I hope to be able to report, after my next visit to Kaipara, that an arrangement can be made with the Natives for the purchase of this land, without the necessity of traversing the inland boundary, which runs through a rugged mountain forest and extends to the Whangarei district, the cost of surveying which would amount to a large sum, owing to the difficulty of carrying provisions such a distance through the forest.

The amount of advances to Natives in the Kaipara district, on account of land, is not quite Three hundred pounds (£300).

The survey of the inland boundary of Waikiekie, and a tie line from Graham's purchase to the inland corner of Paparoa, will require to be cut before I can furnish a complete plan of the different blocks above referred to, without which it is difficult to convey a correct impression of the locality to those unacquainted with the country.

This purchase contains upwards of (30,000) thirty thousand acres, exclusive of a reserve and an old land claim of J. *General.—Reporting as to the state of Land Purchasing Operations in the Kaipara District.*Auckland, 5th June, 1861.
SIR,—

In accordance with the request contained in your Circular letter of the 15th ultimo, I have the honor to forward the following general statement of land purchasing operations in the Kaipara District in continuation of my general report dated 16th October, 1859.

It will be seen by reference to the report above referred to that the quantity of land purchased from February, 1857, to October, 1859, amounted to One hundred and fifty-two thousand five hundred and thirty acres 152,530 acres purchased from, the Natives in the Kaipara and Mangawhai from 1857 to the present time at a cost of £9,151, which is at the average rate of about 9d. per acre, and the amount of advances on account of land in the Kaipara, which is not yet purchased, does not exceed £300. I am unable to state accurately the quantity of land surveyed last summer, as the field work is not yet protracted on paper, but it will probably amount to more than 40,000 acres, and the quantity of land which may be considered now under offer to the Government may be stated in round numbers to be 150,000 acres.

The questions raised by some of the Natives in the Kaipara, excepting the great question which, is well known to the Government as existing between Tirarau and Paikea for several years past, are as follows:—

A block of land (Te Kopuru), situated on the Wairoa river and adjoining the Tatarariki purchase, which Rapana and his people hold in dispute. This land was made over to the Government many years ago, by way of compensation, by a number of Natives who were connected with the robbery of Forsaith's store at Mangawhare, the particulars of which are known to the Government; but as I have not been able to trace the documents connected with the cession of this block, I declined to express my opinion on the matter to the parties who represent themselves to be the real owners of the land, and who now repudiate the transaction.

There is a correspondence in the Land Purchase Office with Rapana, who is the principal party objecting on the part of the Ngatikawa tribe.

A question has been raised by the Kaipara Natives with reference to the inland portion of the Arapohue Block, which has been disposed of to the Government with Paikea's consent, who formerly gave over his interest to a Hokianga Chief, Tiopira, who received the money for this land together with the Ngatikawa Natives, and as no part of the money was returned to Paikea or any of his people, they have subsequently set up a claim to the inland portion of this block. I have met the Natives on the ground that they had requested that a surveyor should be sent by the Government who merely surveyed the land which was pointed out to him by the Natives (Ngatikawa) who they consented to point out the boundaries. This may be considered a question more between the Natives themselves than with the Government, as Paikea's people now insist on the other party refunding a portion of the purchase money to the Government, which is not likely to be carried out. There is a letter in the Native Office addressed to the Governor by Rapana, who asserts a claim to a portion of Oruapou which has been purchased by me from Paikea and his tribe; and, previous to the payment, Te Keene and I explained to the Natives that an objection was taken by the Native above-named to the disposal of this block exclusively by the Uri-o-hau Natives, who denied his right to any portion of the land, and promised under any consideration to settle the question amicably, should any reference be made to the Government disputing their right to receive the money for this block.

During my recent visit to Pakiri, a Native named Poari, from Oruawharo, demanded a small payment for an old cultivation within the Waioneke purchase, which I decline to accede to, as the claimants, including Poari, all agreed that Brown should have the distribution of the money for this purchase. There is a letter from him in the Native Office, explaining that Poari's claim is insignificant, and that he will himself deal with it. The chief Arama Karaka, who offered for sale a block of land named Piroa, on which an advance of £100 has been made to him, applied for a surveyor, which was complied with, and in traversing the inland boundary, he insisted upon carrying it into the Waipu purchase, and almost over to the East Coast, when the surveyor returned and reported the circumstance. On examining the deed of sale of Waipu, I find that the inland boundary has never been surveyed, which is the cause of the present encroachment.

I have been unable to reconcile this question with Arama Karaka, and proposed that he should come to some understanding hereafter with Mr. Johnson, who was the Commissioner negotiating the Waipu purchase, to which he assented.

The above are the only questions of difference now existing on the part of the Natives, relating to the purchase of land in the Kaipara, and I submit that the difficulties are of a minor nature, which will easily be overcome by giving the Natives time to withdraw their objections, as has been the case with several other objections which were raised by them, such as the Oruawharo case, which is now finally settled.

At Whangarei there are about 50,000 acres surveyed, including the Waikare and Whanui Blocks, the negotiation for which is still pending, as the Natives have repeatedly refused the price offered by the Government for the purchase of these blocks.

The Natives who offered the land lately surveyed by Mr. Bedlington are most anxious to come to an arrangement regarding the price to be given, and as I have had no opportunity since the survey was completed of visiting Whangarei, I have not been able to bring the negotiation to a conclusion.

On the South side of Whangarei Harbour there is a block of land called Poupouwhenua, which was ceded to the Government many years ago by the Chief Mate and others in payment for a robbery committed at Matakana, the inland boundary of which is disputed by the Natives. I have examined on the ground the boundary mark, and am of opinion that the Natives are labouring under a false impression as to the boundary of the land, and am supported in this view by Mr. Clarke, who accompanied the surveyor who marked out the boundaries at the time. The only other boundary question that I am aware of existing in this district has been brought forward by Mr. Anderson, a settler in the Maungatapere Block, who states that the Natives dispute a portion of the boundary of his land, containing about half an acre. There is a letter in the Native Office in reference to this dispute which will explain the particulars, and as I am not likely to visit Whangarei for a considerable time to come, I submit that the matter be referred to Mr. Johnson for his report, as he negotiated the purchase of Maungatapere and Ruakaka Blocks, in which these disputes have arisen.

The only question that I am aware of in which you are involved is at Whangateau in the Pakiri purchase which is disputed by Kiri and Tauwhitu, in reference in which I beg to enclose a copy of my report which was called for by the Assistant Native Secretary while I was in that neighborhood. I should state that while I was at Mahurangi lately, Te Hemara said he was one of the party who pointed out the boundaries to the surveyor, and that the boundary described in the deed of purchase is correct. It will therefore be seen by the above statement that 244,100 acres have been purchased, about 90,000 are surveyed, and about 150,000 under offer to the Government; and these purchases, with the above unimportant exceptions, are free of dispute.

I have, &c.,

JOHN ROGAN, District Commissioner.

Description.

Opou Block.

Opou Block contains 985 acres, principally stunted fern with a few patches of forest. The soil is inferior in quality, and the land is undulating. The position of this block adds to its value, being situated between the Oruawharo and Tauhoa rivers, the Oruawharo having deep water for several miles inland of Opou, and vessels of 50 tons may approach the land by the Tauhoa River. It adjoins the Oruawharo Block, which has been purchased at the rate of 8d. an acre, but owing to the number of claimants, and the comparative small size of the block, I think it probable that the Natives will not be induced to accept less than £100 for this purchase, which will be at the rate of about 2s. an acre.

Kaikai.

Kaikai contains 2230 acres of hilly land, one half of which is covered with kauri forest, the other half is open fern land. A belt of land along the Kaukapakapa River is a rich alluvial soil. This land adjoins the Kaukapakapa West, which is now occupied by settlers; it was purchased for 1s. an acre, and as this block is better situated as regards water carriage, I consider it is well worth 2s. an acre.

Okaka.

Contains 1851 acres, consisting of Tupakihi scrub, high fern, swamp, and sand hills. It is situated at the South head of Kaipara Harbour, and adjoins the Whiritoa.

Whiritoa.

Contains 1,558 acres, one-third of which is good fern land, a portion is swampy, the remainder is sand. It is situated south of Okaka. These two blocks were included in a number of others which have lately been purchased. The uniform price of 1s. an acre was fixed by the Government, but the Natives would not agree to the price for these two pieces of land. There is now a letter in the Native Office from Keene, offering to accept 1s. 6d. an acre, and I submit that, as the Natives have reduced their price from 3s. to 1s. 6d., and as it is really important to have the south head as a pilot station, it is desirable to purchase these blocks at the price asked, i.e., 1s. 6d.

Whakapirau.

Whakapirau contains 3,600 acres. Nearly the whole of this block is good forest land; the open land is rich dark clay soil, covered with fern and scrub. It is bounded on the north by Whakapirau, on the east by Arapaoa, and on the south by Kokorako. There is deep water frontage to this land, where vessels of 600 tons may anchor in perfect safety. I consider this land is worth 2s. 6d. an acre in relation to the price given for other blocks.

Matawhere.

Matawhere is about 5,500 acres. A great portion of this block is hilly, four - fifths is open of average quality, the remainder is kauri forest. Situated on the Kaipara Harbour, with deep water frontage, between the Omokoriki and Kaukabakaha Blocks, within twenty-seven miles of Auckland. The Natives have lately differed among themselves, and it is not necessary to determine the price until the Natives are disposed to treat for it.

Maungaturoto.

Contains 6,815 acres of excellent level open forest land, with three small patches of manuka scrub and toitoi; accessible, having water communication by the Wairau. It is probable the Natives will expect 1s. 6d. an acre for this block.

Piroa.

Contains 9,200 acres (see my report in reference to Arama Karaka's dispute) hilly forest land, of average quality. Situated between the Aparoa, Waipu, and Maungaturoto Blocks, and Wright and Graham's claim. There appears to me no necessity to fix a price for this block at present.

Waiherunga.

Contains 2,884 acres. One-half is good open land, or quarter barren, and one-fourth white sand hills. Situated on the Kaihuru River, between the Waioneke and Mairatahi Blocks. 1s. 6d. an acre would be ample for this piece.

Hikurangi.

The Hikurangi Block contains 12,000 acres of land of fair average quality, nearly two-thirds of which is hilly and covered with forest, a portion of which is kauri and kahikatea. One-third is composed of open fern land and swamp. This block adjoins and is situated on the north side of Kaurihohore Block, and is about eight miles distant from the European settlement at the head of the Whangarei river.

Ruatangata Block.

Ruatangata contains 5,450 acres, a small portion of which is good volcanic land, the remainder is of inferior quality, about one-half of which is covered with forest of general description. The other portion is almost barren, having a tough upper soil of about five inches in depth, with white and light yellow clay subsoil, covered with rushes and short fern. This block is for the most part extremely damp during the greater part of the year. It is situated about four miles to the north-west of Mair's claim. It is accessible by a good level track through forest, passing the Native settlement at kotinikau

Miro Whakatiki

Contains 5,500 acres of land, one-half of which is of good quality, principally volcanic, covered with forest. The other part is white clay, inferior in quality, and covered with rushes and short fern and raupo, a considerable portion of which is swampy. It adjoins the Ruatangata Block. I think an uniform price of 1s. for these three blocks would be ample.

Omokoriki

Contains 35,000 acres. Nearly the whole of this block is covered with forest, comprising a considerable quantity of kauri. The greater part of this land is good, 3,000 acres of first class alluvial fern and flat land. Hilly, situated inland of Mahurangi, Whangarei, Waikau, and Whanui. (See Mr. Johnson's report.)

Respecting Land in dispute between Tirarau and Te Uriohau. District Commissioner's Office, Otaika, Whangarei, 5th December, 1861.

SIR,—

I have had the honor to receive your letter of the 3rd ult., enclosing two letters for Tirarau and Parore, which I have forwarded to them.

The Ngapuhi appear to be quite satisfied with the cession of the land in question by the Uriohau to the Crown.

I shall use my best endeavours to dissuade Tirarau and Parore from bringing any of the Ngapuhi tribes to occupy the territory in dispute between them and the Uriohau, but at the same time I would observe that, if they persist in doing so, it cannot be construed into an aggressive movement on the part of those Chiefs, as it has for many years past been the practice of the Northern tribes to resort periodically to the Wairoa river for the purpose of squaring spars and collecting kauri gum for disposal to the merchants located there, and I fear it will be difficult to persuade them to relinquish this source of traffic to which they have been so long accustomed.

Pukeatua Block offered for Sale by Te Reweti. Te Awaroa, Kaipara, 7th January, 1864.

SIR,—

The Chief Tamati Reweti, at a meeting of Natives held yesterday at this place, came forwards and offered for sale to the Government a block of land named Pukeatua, containing about twenty thousand acres (20,000 acres), situated within a few miles of Auckland, for 7s. an acre. I intimated to him that I had no authority to agree to pay him any such amount. It was arranged that I should refer the matter to Auckland, and as it appears to me that the opportunity has now arisen for bringing the purchase to a conclusion, I have the honor to offer the following suggestions for your favourable consideration. The Superintendent will at once see the importance of purchasing this land. As I have never yet been able to examine the Pukeatua Block, it is submitted that an officer be despatched forth with to examine and report on the nature of the land; its position, availability, &c, and that the Government should then fix the highest limit per acre, and authorize me to make that offer to Tamati Reweti. The arrangement now existing between us is that he will wait until I return from my visit throughout the district, which I hope will be in a few days, when a reply to this letter may be expected, and if the Government are prepared to give 4s. 6d. or 5s., I believe the purchase may be concluded at once.

I have, &c,

JOHN ROGAN, District Commissioner.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary, Auckland.

No. 39. LIEUT-COLONEL McDONNELL, TO THE GENERAL GOVERNMENT AGENT, AUCKLAND.

Kaipara.—Waoku Block. Auckland, 10th July, 1872.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report, for the information of the Government, that in accordance with instructions I received from Mr. Clarke, the Civil Commissioner, I proceeded from Auckland to the Waimate, and from thence to Ottawa, to make enquiries respecting the block of land named Waoku, offered for sale to the Government by Hora Puatata, Wiremu Pore, and other Chiefs.

I arrived at Ottawa on the 25th June, a settlement on the Taheke, a branch of the Hokianga River. I held a meeting with the Natives, and the following morning I left with five guides, who were to show me over the country. About two miles from the settlement we entered the bush, travelled all day in the rain, and camped at nightfall, wet, tired, and hungry. The weather was of the worst description, and had it not been that we were fortunate enough to meet with and kill a wild cow, the fat of which I made the Natives burn for a fire, as there was no wood near that we could get to kindle, I doubt if we could have moved the next day from camp and the exposure, as we had neither blankets nor other covering, excepting what we stood in. We passed a miserable night. In the morning the Natives had decided to return. It would have been useless to proceed, if even I had been able, so we returned to the village, which we reached late on the evening of the following day. I again conversed with the Chiefs, and offered to go out again in a few days, when the weather moderated, and if they could procure food. This they declined doing, as they were busily engaged in fitting up a large house intended for the reception of other Natives, who were to take part in a "hahunga," or disinterment of bones. But they proposed that I should return in the summer months, when they would go over the block, and point out all the boundaries to me. From what I could see and judge of the country, I made the following remarks:—

- 1st. It is all forest land, comprising kauri, totara, rimu, mata, and other useful timber.
- 2nd. The nature of the country is rough and mountainous in some places, and undulating in others.
- 3rd. The soil is of excellent quality, being a rich chocolate-coloured loam, that would grow any farm produce.
- 4th. As to the position and probable extent, the land is on the Mangakahia stream, which runs into the Wairoa River. I should judge the eastern boundary to be four or five miles to the westward of Maunganui (the mountains on the Coast). The Southern boundary commences about seven miles in a straight line from Ottawa, running inland over the wooded range. The acreage is, as far as I could judge, about 35,000 acres.
- 5th. I am inclined to think there will be little or no dispute as to ownership, unless old Parore makes a claim. I spoke to the chief Mohi Tawhai, and with the Native member for the North Wireinu Katene, as to the ownership, and these chiefs seemed to think that those who have offered the land for sale have a good claim.
- 6th. As I have not been over the land, I can say nothing for certain as to the best line of road, or the most convenient seaport or outlet, as it is forest country, surrounded by forest on all sides. Before a reliable opinion can be given, it must be thoroughly explored in fine weather.
- 7th. Its fitness for immigration purposes. This will, in a great measure, depend on the approaches that can be got to it, but I think a road could be made from Ottawa and the Taheke. From the latter place, water carriage is to be had to Hokianga. A road might also be had to it from the Bay. I expect the natural outlet from it will be by the Wairoa. Should my surmises prove correct, the country might be suitable for Canadians or Nova Scotians, but not for immigrants fresh from the home country.

The lowest price mentioned by the Natives was 5s. an acre, but this was a mere matter of form. The utmost value I place upon it, and that only if available roads can be made to it, is at the outside 2s. an acre.

I believe coal exists, as the Natives showed me some, said to have been found on the land, a specimen of which I enclose.

I have, &c.,

Thomas McDonnell.

The General Government Agent, Auckland.

Kaipara.—Pakiri Block. Auckland, 24th December, 1872.

SIR,—

I returned from the Kaipara yesterday evening, and have the honor to inform you, with respect to the block of land near Little Omaha, named Pakiri, that I have been instructed to purchase, that I have had personal communication with two of the three owners, Rahui, and Arama Karaka who is trustee for Wi Apo. Hori te More, the third owner, I have not yet been able to communicate with. Rahui says that she is not willing to dispose of her right to the Government, but that she is willing that the owners' titles be individualised by the Native Land Court, after which each person can do as he or she may then please. Arama Karaka, trustee for Wi Apo, has given his consent to this arrangement, and has signed a requisition to the Native Land Court to this effect, and Rahui has signed also. Arama Karaka is agreeable to sell 6,000 acres out of what will be awarded to Wi Apo, reserving 4,000; or to dispose of the whole, if some provision be made for the lad's education, and he wishes the sum of £300 to be advanced at once on the land, and I enclose a letter from him, which I believe is to that effect.

I have not spoken to Hori te More about the money he is said to be owing Mr. McLeod, but I understand that he is willing to settle old scores with that gentleman, should the Government purchase his interest in the land. I will, however, place myself in communication with him, and acquaint you with the result. And I presume nothing further can be done in this matter until it has been brought before the Native Land Court.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS McDONNELL.

The Hon. Dr. Pollen, Government Agent, Auckland.

Kaipara.—Marunui Block. Auckland, 11th February, 1873.

SIR,—

I returned this morning from the Kaipara, and have the honor to inform you, for the information of the Government, that after I had seen Mr. Rogan respecting the Marunui land, I proceeded to Otamatea, and saw Arama Karaka. This chief sent one of his Natives, who pointed out the land he is willing to dispose of—a block of 2,200 acres; also a piece of land, 500 acres in extent, which he says, "the Government have sold to a Mr. Henry for 10s. an acre, though he has never parted with his title to it."

Arama Karaka has agreed to take half-a-crown an acre for the first block, and I have consented to this on behalf of the Government, as it is fair land.

Respecting the 500 acres occupied by Mr. Henry, Arama Karaka says that he expects to be paid the same amount of money that Mr. Henry purchased it for some years since, which, at 10s. an acre, would amount to £250. He spoke very strongly on this subject, urging a speedy settlement, saying that if it is arranged for soon, he will take what he offered it for, and not charge any back interest.

I promised to recommend that his claim be seen to as soon as it is possible, and I have the honor to call the attention of the Government to this case, with a view to its speedy settlement.

I have also the honor to enclose a statement made by Mr. Rogan to me about the Marunui Block, which I took down at the time in writing.

I have agreed to meet Arama Karaka on the 21st instant, at Helensville, at which time the Native Land Court sits, and as John Sheehan has said that he will be present, an arrangement can then be made about that portion of the Pakiri Block, for which Arama Karaka is trustee on behalf of Wi Apo.

Hori te More has promised to meet me at Helensville on the 21st instant, and states that he is willing to dispose of that portion of the Pakiri Block owned by him. He is also willing to come to a settlement about some moneys owing to John McLeod, which I think will be satisfactory to all concerned. I have, therefore, agreed to meet this chief on the day named by him.

Arama Karaka is anxious to obtain a small sum of money on account, as he is in want of cash, and I have promised to send him what I could procure from the Government to the extent of £40. I have, therefore, the honor to request that a sum of money be placed at my disposal (not more than that named) for this purpose.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS McDONNELL, Land Purchase Commissioner.

The Hon. Dr. Pollen, General Government Agent.

Kaipara.—Mangakahia. Superintendent's Office, Auckland, 11th February, 1873.

SIR,—

I have the honor to inform you that on a recent visit (unofficial) to Mangakahia, I was offered several blocks of excellent settlement land for sale by the Native owners. Their desire seemed to me to be to encourage European settlement in the district, and I promised them that a Government officer would be sent up to negotiate with them, as I did not feel at liberty to personally take advantage of their offers. The land I would recommend to be acquired by the Government, at a price not exceeding 2s. per acre, covering all charges.

I shall be glad to have a reply as soon as possible as to whether the General Government will undertake to purchase, as otherwise I shall be prepared to do so at once on private account.

One special block which I inspected lies between the Karaka Block, Baker's land claim, and the Mangakahia River, and is well suited for settlement.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS B. GILLIES, Superintendent.

The General Government Agent, Auckland.

No. 43.Lieut.-Colonel MCDONNELL to the GENERAL GOVERNMENT AGENT, Auckland.

Kaipara.—Pakiri Purchase. Auckland, 26th February, 1873.

SIR,—

I have the honor to report my return from Helensville, and to state for the information of the Government that Hori te More has signed an agreement consenting to dispose of all the interests that he is and will be entitled to in the Pakiri Block of 32,000 acres,—that is, 10,666½ acres, or one third of the whole block—to the Government for the sum of £1,000, after deducting the sum of £270 owing to John McLeod, M.H.R., including law expenses and costs amounting to £21 13s., also a sum of £55 owing by Hori te More to John Sheehan, M.H.R., and a sum of £10 advanced to Adam Clarke by me on behalf of the Government, amounting altogether to £343 7s., leaving £643 7s. to be paid to Hori te More on completion of title, but any expense connected with surveys are to be defrayed by the Government.

The application that was heard at the Court now sitting was to have the land divided so that each claimant could deal separately with his or her interest, but as it is necessary that Hori te More should have power to deal with the land on application for succession of title has been sent in to the Native Land Court signed by Hori te More, to be heard at the next sittings of the Court.

It has also been agreed to by Adam Clarke and John Sheehan, who are trustees for Wi Apo in the Pakiri land, that on their being authorized by law to negotiate his interest that they will accept the sum of £1,000 on his behalf, and I have advanced to Adam Clarke £10 on this understanding.

Mr. Sheehan assures me that there will be no difficulty in obtaining the necessary legal authority for the fulfilment of the agreement that has been signed, and which I have the honor to attach to this report.

With regard to the Marunui Block of 2,160 acres, Adam Clarke has agreed to take 2s. 6d. an acre for the block, and I have given him an advance of £20 on account, which leaves a balance of £250 that is to be received when he comes to Auckland and signs the deed of conveyance.

Respecting the 500 acres of land claimed by Adam Clarke, but which has been sold to Thomas Henry of Whangarei, Adam Clarke says that he simply wishes to be repaid what the Government sold the land for, namely—10s. an acre.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS MCDONNELL, Land Purchase Commissioner.

The Hon. Dr. Pollen,
General Government Agent.

Kaipara.—Mangakahia. Auckland, 7th April, 1873.
SIR,—

I have the honor to report that, on my return to the Taheke and Ohaeowae from Hokianga, that I proceeded to Mangakahia, in accordance with your instructions. On my way there I met a number of Natives on their road to Kaikohe, many of them principal owners of the country sought to be obtained by His Honor the Superintendent. Hare Potai, Eru Teke, and Piripi Hahu, who were with these people, on hearing my errand, protested strongly against the sale of these lands by Matiu to Mr. White, and gave me directions where to find other chiefs at Mangakahia, who would tell me more.

On my arrival at Mr. Frazer's, at Mangakahia, I sent messages to the various settlements, and the following morning Mari te Wharepapa, Paora Kewi, Te Hatiwira, and others, called to see me, and a long conversation ensued, the result of which is that the Natives are still willing to dispose of their land to His Honor Mr. Gillies, for the purpose of locating Europeans thereon; but they one and all, Matiu and Hamu excepted, are annoyed and angry at Mr. White dealing with only two of their number, and not meeting the whole of the owners on the land itself. They also refuse to agree to sell at the price arranged between Mr. White and Matiu at Helensville; that is, at 1s. 6d. an acre for the good land, and 1s. 3d. for the hills and forest. The best part of this, or the most part of the land, they (the Natives) tell me Mr. White has never looked at. They wish to have a letter from the Government, and to hear from me as soon as possible after arriving in Auckland, and they do not wish the land to be surveyed by private individuals, but to be undertaken by the Government, free of cost to them, after the price per acre has been properly agreed upon.

With reference to the Charles Baker's claim, I led the Natives carefully round to the subject, and we had a long discussion, the result of which is, that they have promised me that if surveyors are sent by the Government to survey the land, that they will go over to the ground and survey the portion agreed upon before, at the time the surveyors were stopped, and that no dispute will now arise. At the same time, I would suggest that if the Government assent to this, a Government officer should be on the spot during the survey, and I think that this very troublesome question would then be amicably settled.

Any further action taken by me than ascertaining what I did during this visit might have proved injurious, so I left the following Monday, promising to write soon after arriving in Auckland, The Natives mentioned by me expressed a strong wish to hear from yourself, and His Honor Mr. Gillies, after which they would send for me. I promised them as far as I could that their wishes should be attended to. They expressed themselves satisfied, and the meeting broke up.

On Sunday morning, Wharepapa called to see me, giving me a letter for you, which I have already forwarded, and he told me that the Natives wished Baker's claim to be settled, and surveyed off; but he hinted that a further reduction of acreage would be asked for, though he said at the same time that he did not think that the extra claim would be at all insisted on, and I fancy he is right.

I have, &c.,

THOMAS McDONNELL.

The General Government Agent,

Auckland.

No. 45. The UNDER SECRETARY, Native Department, to Mr. BRISSENDEN.

Appointment of Mr. Brissenden as Land Purchases Agent. Native Office (Land Purchase Branch), Wellington, 12th March, 1874.

SIR,—

It has come to the knowledge of the Hon. the Native Minister that there are several considerable blocks of forest land to the north of Auckland, which it is desirable that the Government should procure for public purposes. I am therefore desired to request you that you will proceed to Auckland with as little delay as possible, and endeavour to negotiate with the Natives to purchase on reasonable terms these lands, and any open lands which it may be thought expedient to acquire. On reaching Auckland you will put yourself into communication with Mr. Civil Commissioner Kemp, who is already in treaty for certain blocks of land in the direction of Kaipara and the back of Whangarei district; and you should arrange between yourselves regarding the perfection of these negotiations. Perhaps it will be advisable for Mr. Kemp to complete them and avoid possible complications.

You will be good enough to report to this office from time to time the progress you are making, and the sums of money you will be likely to want for these purchases, being careful to specify the sums required for each particular block. You are also authorized to engage, through Captain Heale, any surveyors who may be required to survey the lands you propose to purchase.

Care should be taken that the plans when complete are submitted for examination and approval to the Inspector of Surveys, and that copies of them are forwarded to this office.

Should you be in want of other assistance, you are authorized to obtain it, reporting to this office the necessity for doing so, and the salary you propose.

I have, &c.,

H. T. CLARKE, Under Secretary.

E. T. Brissenden, Esq., Wellington.

Kaipara.—Land Transactions. Auckland, 14th April, 1874.
SIR,—

As I understand that you are aware that I have been appointed Government agent for the purchase of Native lands in the North by the Hon. the Native Minister, and that you act for him in his absence, I take the liberty of addressing you on the subject of Native lands.

I have commenced the negotiation for the following blocks' of land—viz., 20,000 acres of Te Pakiri Block, for which I require £2,000; the Muriwhenua Block, about 20,000 acres, at 2s. an acre, £2,000; the Taupaki Block, 6,000 acres, fit for special settlement; and many other blocks, in all amounting to some 100,000 acres.

I have been very much crippled in my transactions for want of the necessary funds to enable me to pay the whole or part of the purchase money, and have in consequence been compelled to prolong negotiations to fill up time.

One great obstacle is the number of private individuals throughout the North anxious to purchase kauri forests as well as open country. These people having money in hand gives them a great advantage over me, and makes my task extremely difficult, the more so while many of the blocks in the North have passed through the Native Land Court, rendering private transactions quite safe.

I hope that no further delay will be given, and that you will be good enough to authorize me to draw for any such sums as may be required from time to time on the Bank of New Zealand, Auckland.

I have, &c.

E. T. BRISSENDEN.

The Hon. D. Pollen,
Government Office, Auckland.

The same. Auckland, 16th April, 1874.

SIR,—

Since mine of the 8th instant I have the honor to report the commencement of my negotiations for the following blocks of Native lands North of Auckland—viz., the second 10,000 acres of Te Pakiri Block, at 2s. per acre; the Muriwhenua Block, of above 20,000 acres, at 2s. per acre; the Taupaki Block, of 6,000 acres, surveyed and through the Court. This block is a very superior one, and well adapted for special settlement; it is near Auckland and accessible. I have not yet arranged as to price, but hope to secure it for 5s. per acre, though I have lots of opposition from private parties who are willing to give three times that price.

Before this reaches you I expect to have concluded the above transactions, and hope you will be able to induce the Treasury Department to be prompt in forwarding me, without loss of time, the necessary sums of money for which I send in requisitions.

I have also begun negotiations for several other blocks of Native lands that will amount to more than 200,000 acres, and have every prospect of securing by purchase very extensive tracts of country throughout this district in a short space of time.

I enclose requisitions for money required at once.

Alleged Improper Sale of Land North of Auckland. (Inquiry by Mr. R. C. Barstow, R. M., and papers relative to).

His Honor the SUPERINTENDENT, Auckland, to the Hon. the Colonial SECRETARY.

Kaipara.—Alleged improper sale of Waipoua and Maunganui Blocks on the Wairoa. Superintendent's Office, Auckland, 9th March, 1876.

SIR,—

I have the honor to enclose the copy of a letter received from Joseph A. Tole, solicitor, Auckland, calling attention, on behalf of the Native Parore, to the improper sale of the Waipoua and Maunganui Blocks, in the Wairoa, Kaipara District, and I request that no further steps may be taken in regard to these two blocks until inquiry has been made into the complaint set forth in Mr. Tole's letter, which inquiry I pray may be at once instituted.

I have, &c.,

G. Grey.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary, Auckland.

Enclosure in No. 1. Mr. J. A. TOLE, to His Honor the SUPERINTENDENT, Auckland.

Auckland, 6th March, 1876.

SIR,—

I have the honor, on behalf of an aboriginal native named Tiopira, a co-grantee with another Native, named Parore, of two blocks of land named respectively Waipoua and Maunganui, in the Wairoa, Kaipara District, to communicate to your Honor briefly the following facts, disclosing a grievance of which it is confidently hoped your Honor will kindly endeavor to seek redress.

The above blocks of land were adjudicated upon in favor of the above-mentioned Tiopira and Parore, as joint grantees of each block, upon the understanding that Parore would pay to Tiopira the sum of £100, being part of the purchase money of a block of land (to which Tiopira asserted a claim) called Waimata, sold some time previously to, I believe, Mr. Dargaville. This arrangement was concluded by correspondence between the parties, which correspondence is in existence.

With the free knowledge of this arrangement the blocks were sold to the General Government, through Native Land Purchase Agents, who negotiated the sale at the sum of £2,000 for each block. At the time of the execution of the deeds, I am instructed the place, in the instruments of conveyance, allotted to the insertion of the consideration money was left blank, and though at the time of execution the real consideration of the sale was interpreted to Tiopira (as before stated), £2,000 for each blocks, it was nevertheless shortly afterwards discovered that the considerations in the same deeds had been filled in as respectively £2,200 and £2,300, being an aggregate increase of £500 over the price agreed upon originally. This extra £500 has, I am instructed, been paid entirely to Parore, and Tiopira has received none of it. Tiopira's grievance, therefore is, that though the original purchase money was understood to be £2,000 for each block, yet since it has been thought necessary to increase that amount to the extent already stated (£500), he asserts that he is justly entitled to his proportion of it, and not that it should be all paid to a co-grantee.

As the grants to the Crown from the Natives of both the above blocks are alleged by the Trust

Commissioner, under the Native Lands Frauds Prevention Act, to have satisfactorily passed through all the requisite stages of inquiry, for the purposes of registration, it is respectfully trusted that your Honor will, as conveniently as possible, institute such measures as may eventuate in the proper protection of Tiopira, and also in the adjustment of the claims of parties in this purchase.

In conclusion, I may state that these facts are furnished to me by the Native Chief, Paul Tuhaere, who was present during the adjudication of these blocks, and acted then, as now, as the agent of Tiopira.

I have, &c.,

JOSEPH AUGUSTUS TOLE, Solicitor. His Honor the Superintendent of the Province of Auckland.

Referred to Mr. Commissioner Kemp for his report.—Daniel

Pollen.—10th March, 1876.

Memo. attached for Hon. Dr. Pollen's information, also translation of a letter from the Paul Tuhaere, on the same subject.

1876.

The Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY to His Honor the SUPERINTENDENT.

Auckland, 15th April, 1876.

SIR,—

I have received your letter of date 9th March ultimo, covering copy of a letter from Mr. Joseph a Tole, calling attention, on behalf of the Native Parore, to what your Honor is pleased to describe as the "improper sale" of the Waipoua and Maunganui Blocks, in Wairoa, Kaipara District.

I enclose, for your Honor's information, copy of a memorandum by H. T. Kemp, explanatory of the circumstance attending the sale of the blocks in question, which was concluded during a sitting of the Native Lands Court, and recorded as required by law.

Your Honor will see that the Native on whose behalf you intervene has no cause to complain, and makes no complaint regarding the actual sale of the land, but has grounds to complain of the action of Messrs. Brissenden and Nelson, the Land Purchase Agents, who declined in the first instance to recognize his title, and who exclusively favoured that of Tiopira.

I call your Honor's attention to the circumstance that Paul Tuhaere denies the assertion made by Joseph A. Tole, that he (Paul) had furnished the "facts" upon which Mr. Tole's statement is based.

I have, &c.,

DANIEL POLLEN.

His Honor the Superintendent, Auckland.

Enclosure 1 in No. 2. Mr. KEMP, C.C., to the Hon. Dr. POLLEN.

18th March, 1876.

SIR,—

I have referred these papers to J. W. Preece, the Land Purchase Agent, who states that the Waipoua and Maunganui Blocks were purchased by Messrs. Brissenden and Nelson, for the Government, from Tiopira and other Natives, for 1s. 1d. per acre, and paid them sums of money (at a very early stage), in the shape of advances, to the amount of £620. Mr. Preece further states, that these Agents utterly ignored, and refused to acknowledge the interest of Parore te Awha, the principal chief of the district, who afterwards proved his claim in Court. Parore then refused to sell, and Tiopira was requested to complete the sale to the Government of his interest on the terms agreed on, which he, in the presence of Paul Tuhaere did; the Government Agent conceding his only request, which was to make up his share to £2,000,—which was about £50 more than his share of the amount originally agreed on, viz., 1s. 1d. per acre, together with a valuable reserve at Waipoua of 6,000 acres, which afterwards turned out to be 12,000 acres, and which more than compensated for the extra price given to Parore. Parore afterwards sold his interest for £2,500 in the two blocks; all these arrangements having come under my personal notice.

H. T. KEMP.

Enclosure 2 in No. 2.Mr. PREECE to Mr. KEMP, C.C.

IN reference to the complaint made by Tiopira, that he only received £2,000 for his interest in Waipoua and Maunganui, while Parore received £2,500 for his interest, I have the honor to say that—

- 1. Tiopira had, together with all his people, before the land was surveyed, agreed to sell the land to the Queen for a stated sum, namely, 1s. 1d. per acre, being a trifle less than he eventually got; and on that agreement they had drawn from the Government money on the land to the amount of £620: while, on the other hand, Parore and his people had never agreed to sell the land at all, nor had they drawn any money on it—holding their interest intact and unencumbered by agreement to sell, until after Tiopira had finally disposed of his interest.
- 2. There was no doubt that their interests were equal in the whole area of the estate; but the judgment being invalid, we were bound to get them to come to an agreement if possible; and we could get no better terms out of Tiopira than that he was to get the Waipoua reserve (over 12,000 acres) to himself, and that Parore was to pay him £100, which, by the deliberate verdict of a former Court, he (after being heard) had been found not to be entitled to. Thus Parore received £2,400, and Tiopira received £2,100 and over 12,000 acres of land, to which, by the verdict of the Judges of the Court, Parore was as much entitled to as was Tiopira, but, by the compromise, obtained no interest in it.
- 3. The purchase of the interest of Tiopira and that of Parore were two entirely different negotiations, and conducted quite separately; the former having willingly, and without any hesitation, sold at a trifle over what he originally agreed to: and the interest of the latter having been purchased at the very lowest sum he could possibly be induced to take, and he being under no obligation whatever to sell at all.

It is true that one deed for each block was made to cover both transactions, but that was done simply as a matter of convenience.

J. W. Preece.

Enclosure 3 in No. 2.PAORA TUHAERE to Mr. KEMP, C.C.

(Translation.)
17th March, 1876.
Mr. KEMP,—

The information you asked me for in reference to what Mr. Tole, the lawyer, said.—I cannot say who the interpreter was to that lawyer. I only saw Mr. Nelson there once, but Mr. Tole, the surveyor, I saw oftener; and perhaps it was he who interpreted for Heta and Te Haurangi. This is merely an idea of my own, but, as for myself, I had nothing to say with reference to the matter complained of.

PAORA TUHAERE.

Enclosure 4 in No. 2.

(Memo.)

HETA and Te Haurangi, Natives of Ohaeawai, came to Auckland to receive a sum of £90 due to them on some of these blocks, and which, at their own written request, had been held by Mr. Preece for them, £10 having been paid at Kaihu, total amount being £100.

His HONOR the SUPERINTENDENT, Auckland, to the Hon. the COLONIAL SECRETARY.

Superintendent's Office, Auckland, 2nd May, 1876.
SIR,—

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 15th ultimo, regarding a communication which I enclosed you from J. A. Tole, solicitor.

In reply, I enclose copy of a further letter I have received from J. A. Tole, and of its enclosure, and beg to request earnestly that you will cause an inquiry to be made into the irregular circumstances alleged in this correspondence to have taken place; and further, that until such inquiry has terminated, all proceedings relative to the deeds for the blocks of land in question may be stayed.

J. A. Tole is right in stating that the chief Paora Tuhaere, together with Mr. Tole and some Natives, sought and obtained an interview with me on the subject of the wrong proceedings which in this correspondence it is alleged took place.

I have, &c.,

G. GREY.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary, Auckland.

Enclosure in No. 3. Mr. TOLE to His Honor the SUPERINTENDENT, Auckland.

Shortland Street, Auckland, 1st May, 1876.

SIR,—

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter, dated 27th ultimo, from the Provincial Secretary, covering copies of a letter to your Honor from the Hon. the Colonial Secretary, and also of a memorandum from Mr. Kemp, and a letter from the chief Paul Tuhaere.

I have carefully perused that letter and its enclosures; and, in reply, beg to state that there is (whether designedly or not, I am unaware) nothing in them which deals with, much less explains, the extraordinary circumstances connected with the sale of the Waipoua and Maunganui Blocks, as stated to your Honor in my letter on this subject; and that the Hon. the Colonial Secretary appears to me to have at least misinterpreted my letter to your Honor, seeing that he, strangely enough, replies as if the Native Parore were the complaining party, whereas the most casual perusal of my letter could not have failed to make it manifest that Tiopira, and not Parore, was and is the aggrieved person. Furthermore, in view of the fact that my letter was submitted to Messrs. Kemp and Preece for information, it is incomprehensible to me how such a misconstruction as that to which I allude could have arisen, except by reluctantly attributing it to design, a cause to which I should be glad to learn it cannot be ascribed. But passing on to the merits of this correspondence, your Honor will observe, by a comparison of the facts contained in my previous letter relative to Tiopira, with the reply, and the irrelevant enclosures therewith from the Hon. the Colonial Secretary, that those facts are in no respect controverted, or justified, or even explained. Nowhere is it denied that on the occasion of the execution of the deeds by Tiopira, the consideration money of each of the blocks (Waipoua and Maunganui) was not only understood to be £2,000, but that amount only was also interpreted to him; and that, after execution, the consideration money was increased to £2,200 and £2,300, and those sums inserted in the respective deeds.

Indeed, it is admitted by Mr. Kemp, under whose "personal notice" these matters came, that the "extra price" was given to Parore. Nowhere is it denied that Tiopira did not receive his proportion of the "extra price," though on the face of the deeds, and by his executing them, he is made to acknowledge the receipt of such proportion. Nor again is it denied that, at the time of the execution of the deeds by Tiopira, it was distinctly understood and publicly expressed that the pecuniary consideration of each deed was £2,000, and that according to that intention, and not otherwise, he subscribed his name. But this acknowledged settlement was permitted to be violated to the prejudice of Tiopira, for, in the concluding sentence of his memorandum to the Hon. the Colonial Secretary, Mr. Kemp, under whose "personal notice" "these arrangements" came, states that Parore afterwards (i.e., in the interval between the signing by Tiopira and that by Parore) sold his interest for £2,500, from which it would appear that an impropriety is at once admitted. And yet I may say, with astonishment, the result of the inquiries made by the Trust Commissioner under the Native Lands Frauds Prevention Act is deemed to be satisfactory. It is needless further here to discuss the effect of statements which would properly be the subject of evidence in any inquiry which it might be deemed necessary to institute. Suffice it to say, I do not consider that the correspondence in reply, now forwarded to me by your Honor from the Hon. the Colonial Secretary, affords any explanation whatever of the allegations contained in my letter, and therefore no satisfaction of the grievances therein specified. The Native Tiopira personally called on me at my office on Saturday week and Monday week last, in company with his son, and Mr. Woods, a Native school teacher, who informed me that he (Tiopira) came to interview me on the subject of my correspondence with your Honor on his present business; and knowing that the Hon. the Native Minister was expected soon in Auckland, I advised him (Tiopira) to remain in Auckland till Donald McLean's arrival, a course which was readily assented to. Previous to this interview I had never seen Tiopira, and I believe his visit to me is attributable to a letter which he received from the Chief Paul, who subsequent to my former letter to your Honor wrote to Tiopira, informing him that he (Paul) had seen me, and that I had written to your Honor on his behalf. On this occasion, also, Tiopira seemed to entertain great indignation in relation to the matters connected with the conclusion of the sales of Waipoua and Maunganui Blocks; and further expressed his desire of accompanying me to interview both your Honor and Donald McLean on the subject. I have not, however, seen him since; but having heard that he has been the guest of the Chief Paul, I am inclined to conjecture that Tiopira, acting under the sinister influence of deputed finesse, has refrained from calling on me. This being so, and having received no official intimation that the grievance has been satisfied, I must again request that your Honor will, if there appear now still to be sufficient reason, urge either that such satisfaction (by payment to Tiopira of his proportion of the extra purchase money) be made, or an inquiry with that view held; and that in the meantime all proceedings relative to the deeds of the blocks in question be stayed. No better opportunity than the present could arise, as the Hon. the Native Minister and all the parties concerned are now in Auckland.

I cannot close this letter without adverting specially to one point in the Hon. the Colonial Secretary's letter, to which he has devoted a concluding paragraph of an uncomplimentary import. I would not trouble your Honor with any comment on this aspect of the subject were it not manifest that, by an inordinate investigation regarding the source of my information, either by the Hon. the Colonial Secretary or the officers to whom he referred the papers, strenuous efforts have been made to raise a false issue and divert attention from the subject-matter under consideration. These efforts are shown by the letter apparently extorted from the Chief Paul, who seems, as far as I can judge from the translation forwarded to me, in a state of duress to have written categorical answers to indicated questions. I use the word "duress" advisedly, for otherwise surely it cannot have escaped the memory of Paul that he came to my office on Tiopira's business; that, as Tiopira's agent, he, with Heta te Haara and te Haurangi, accompanied me to interview your Honor, as your Honor is aware, upon the subject only of the matters contained in my previous letter; that, prior to this interview, he, with Heta te Haara, te Haurangi, and Mr. William Young, a licensed interpreter, went with me to Colonel Haultain, Trust Commissioner, to show cause why, under the circumstances already detailed by me, the registration and other steps towards completion of the deeds of conveyance should be stayed till an arrangement satisfactory to Tiopira had been arrived at. The Chief Paul makes no mention of these facts, and consequently does not contradict them. I am, therefore, certain that Paul has allowed himself to be constrained into writing this letter; otherwise, in the face of the conclusive incidents above quoted, he could not have resorted to so desperate and audacious a statement as that wherein he says, "but, as for myself, I had nothing to say with reference to the matter complained of."

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary, I think, seems to regard my position in this correspondence as importing other than purely professional significance. My relations in this matter, as in the case of Heta te Haara and te Haurangi (concerning which I await a reply), are simply those of a solicitor and client—a circumstance which there is evidently an inclination on the part of the Hon. the Colonial Secretary to ignore. The issue before us, and the only one which with any show of pertinence we can deal with, is, not as to the source of my information in relation to the matters (which are, as described by me, "facts"), but whether or not that information is correct, or can be established. This issue, I hold, is untouched by the correspondence forwarded to me, and therefore the grievance complained of still remains unexplained and unredressed.

In conclusion, I enclose a letter from C. E. Nelson, Licensed Interpreter and Assistant Land Purchase Agent, who in such capacities possesses personal knowledge of the transactions now in question; and beg to call your Honor's especial attention to the circumstances therein detailed relating to the extraordinary statements made and position now sought to be assumed by the Chief Paul.

I have, &c.,

JOSEPH A. TOLE, Solicitor.

His Honor the Superintendent, Auckland.

General Government Offices, Auckland, 4th May, 1876.
SIR,—

No. 5. TIPIRA KINAKI to the Hon. the NATIVE MINISTER.

[TRANSLATIONS] Okahu, 5th May, 1876.

FRIEND,—

Greetings. Listen to this, my word to you, with respect to the Maunganui and Waipoua Blocks.

These two blocks were formerly included in one piece. It was the Native Lands Court that divided it into two, and awarded one block, viz., Maunganui to Parore, and one, viz., Waipoua to me.

This is the reason that there is trouble over that land. I and my tribes were not willing to have that land divided between us and Parore. It was this that caused me to be grieved and angered, and which made me say that I would put obstacles in the way of settling the Maunganui question. This I said in the presence of Parore and Te Tirarau. Parore did not answer to this. After I had made this statement, grief settled upon the Court.

In the evening my tribes assembled in a house to make arrangements for occupying Maunganui, so that when Parore saw us do so, he might come and try to turn us off. At this stage of the proceedings, Messrs. Kemp and Preece arrived. The word of Ngatiwhatua, Te Ririhau, and Te Roroa tribes, that Maunganui should be taken actual possession of by us, and that arms should be taken up against Parore and Te Tirarau, had been approved by the meeting.

Mr. Kemp then spoke as follows:—

"Listen, tribes. I and Mr. Preece have just returned from interviewing Parore and Te Tirarau; what they have had to say has been said, and this is why we come to you now, to ask you to make peace and be of one mind with regard to Maunganui and Waipoua—let it be one. The opinion that Maunganui should be divided did not emanate from the Court, it came from ourselves—viz., "that Tipira and Parore should have Maunganui, and that Tipira and Parore should have Waipoua." To this the meeting consented, but I said I would not consent unless Parore gave me a certain sum out of Waimata as a peace offering; not till this was done would I consent. Mr. Preece then said, "What you say is but fair. We will let Parore and party know what you say. Do you talk over the matter again after we are gone, so that on our return on the morrow you may have arrived at a decision in the matter."

In the morning, the question was again discussed, and it was decided that Paora and I should represent our party. The next morning, Messrs. Kemp and Preece returned to us bringing with them a letter from Parore, consenting to certain terms, which letter was as follows:—

"Kaihu, 2nd February, 1876.

"To Tipira and the chiefs of the other side.—I consent that you should have Maunganui, and that I have Waipoua. The piece outside Waipoua to be for you only; and I also consent to the £100 at Waimata.

"From Parore."

I replied to Parore's letter as follows:—

"To Parore and the chiefs of the other side.—I consent to your having Waipoua and my having Maunganui.

"From Tipira."

Next morning, Messrs. Kemp and Preece arrived, and inquired of us whether we had yet come to an unanimous decision; we both replied, "Yes, we have decided." They answered, "Then the Court will sit to-morrow to finish the investigation at Maunganui and Waipoua, so that the same may be settled satisfactorily."

Next morning the Court sat, and at last a right decision was arrived at, in the Court awarding the Maunganui and Waipoua Blocks in favour of myself and Parore. After the conclusion of the above case, Waipoua No. 2, containing 12,000 acres, was adjudicated upon. It was only then that Mr. Preece became aware of the acreage of the block, and that it contained 12,000, but I and some other Europeans knew, Mr. Preece was under the impression that it only contained 6,000 acres. Another thing, Parore's letter and my letter was given to Mr. Kemp to read out, so that the whole of the tribes that were in the Court-house might hear Parore's word consenting to the £100 out of Waimata, but Mr. Kemp did not read it. I then knew that this was not done, in order that they might put a different construction upon the matter, and be able to say that the £100 which we heard about through Mr. Preece was from the sale of Maunganui.

Next morning, when the Court was over, Paora and I went to the Court House to receive the money. Captain Symonds, Mr. Clendon, Mr. Kemp, Mr. Preece, and Mr. Nelson were there. Mr. Preece said to me, "Tiopira, what have you got to say?" I replied, "I want eighteen pence per acre." Mr. Preece said, "The price cannot be raised above the first figure named." I replied, "That is according to the price offered by Mr. Brissenden, viz., one shilling and one penny an acre. You are a new man and should give a new price." Mr. Preece answered, "I will not consent to that." I said, "Well, then, I will not sign my name." Mr. Preece: "It was you yourselves who agreed to this price."

I replied, "Will Parore receive a higher rate than this per acre?" Mr. Preece: "No, you are the only ones that have received money, viz., £600 for 12,000 acres of Waipoua. Parore has not received any of this." I replied, "That is another price altogether, and was surveyed at another time as a reserve for us, and was not included in this."

We continued arguing the matter, when Paora took up the question and said, "Would you not agree to exclude 2,000 acres; because the balance is small, and 2,000 will cover it?" Mr. Preece consented, and Paul said to me, "You had better give your consent." I then said to Mr. Preece, "If the £100 for Waimata is forthcoming now, I will agree to sign my name." Mr. Preece said, "You will receive the money for Waimata now." Whereupon I agreed, and the money was divided as follows:—£2,000 to me and £2,000 to Parore; that concluded the matter, and the deed conveying the Maunganui Block for the sum of £2,000 was read. Mr. Kemp then signed his name. Secondly, similar arrangements were made regarding Waipoua, for £2,000, and Mr. Kemp signed his name to that also, and the three documents were signed by Mr. Kemp, and I then signed them. At the time I signed them there was no other money but that £2,000 in these documents for Maunganui and Waipoua.

We then went back, but in our absence Mr. Preece had let Parore have £2,500. I was troubled at the deceitful conduct of your European Land Purchase Agents. I have been derided by the Ngapuhi, and am overcome with shame. I said to Paora, after this, you must urge Mr. Preece and Mr. Kemp to divide the £500, as we have got into trouble through the Europeans, and the chiefs on my side said, had the operations in connection with this matter been suspended at the proper time, these Europeans could not have acted in this tricky manner. Paul said he would speak to Mr. Kemp about it. I then went back to my place, where I remained in great trouble of mind at the confused way in which your Europeans were making this purchase. That is why I came to see you personally, viz., about the £500 which Parore got. I too should receive a like sum, because Parore had £2,500 and a piece of land containing 250 acres out of the Maunganui Block, which was given back to him by the Government. The piece only contains 12,000 acres, according to Mr. Preece, and that was why I was to have such a small portion of the money. This is wrong; had it been a piece out of Waipoua No. 1, it would have been right, like the 250 acres which was given back to Parore by the Government out of Maunganui, and that is why I consider that we should have received an equal amount, viz., £2,500 for Parore and £2,500 for myself, or else that the extra £500 paid to Parore should be equally divided between us; Parore to receive £250 and I £250, thus making a total of £2,250 for me and £2,250 for Parore, and then my signing my name for the £2,300 for Maunganui and £2,200 for Waipoua would have been right. But this is a false accusation against me, and only done, to make you believe that I really did sign my name for that sum. Mr. Preece's action is wrong, and the consideration money was charged against those lands in such a manner as to lead you to believe that the money was received by both of us, that is to say, Parore and myself. No, Parore alone received it. I have not known Mr. Brissenden to act in such a manner. Mr. Preece's-word, which he is trying to maintain about the 12,000 acres, must cease.

To Sir Donald McLean.

Enclosure in No. 7. Mr. J. A. TOLE to HIS HONOR the SUPERINTENDENT, Auckland.

Auckland, 13th March, 1876.

SIR,—

I have the honor, in pursuance of the interview which, in company with the Native chiefs Paora Tuhaere, Heta te Haara, and Haurangi, I had with your Honor a few days ago, on the subject of the improprieties connected with the purchase of Native lands near Hokianga, to make known the facts relative to the Opouteke Block, having already written to your Honor on the subject of the other two blocks, named Waipoua and Maunganui.

Early last year the above-named Opouteke Block, containing 43,622 acres, was subject to an adjudication coram Symonds, Judge of the Native Lands Court. The claimants were three in number, named respectively Heta te Haara, Haurangi, and Mare, the last-mentioned of whom, apparently, was the acknowledged claimant of the greatest territorial interest. The Court was about to enter into the usual investigation of the claim, when, after a short conference with Mare and Heta te Haara, and on the persuasion of Mare, and with the concurrence of Heta (a concurrence never since questioned), Haurangi addressed the Court to the effect that it was arranged that Mare should be allowed to be sole grantee of the whole block on condition that he (Mare) would consent to hand over to the others (Haurangi and Heta), when the block would be sold, such portion of the total purchase money as would be equivalent to that part of the block (viz., 8,775 acres) contained within certain limits, which limits were, with the consent and by the direction of all parties, in their presence and in the presence of the Judge and other officers of the Court, accordingly officially delineated by pencil lines by the Government Interpreter on the official map submitted to the Court. In order that this arrangement amongst the claimants might be judicially noticed, Haurangi properly made a special request to the Judge that a record of the fact might be made; and such, it is understood, was made.

Mare, consequently, became the sole grantee. Till recently (and at such a distance of time from the first adjudication, that a second hearing or appeal was, according to the Native land laws, rendered impossible) nothing ever transpired to create any doubt that the arrangement come to by the parties, and recognized by the Court, would be violated.

The block has recently been purchased by the Government, through their Native Land Purchase Agents, who, I am instructed, were thoroughly aware of the existing agreement amongst the Natives concerned; and here, in no little degree, lies, as I am informed, the grievance which it is desired to bring under your Honor's notice; for the Native Mare has been paid the whole of the purchase money, and the other Natives, Haurangi and Heta te Haara, have received nothing, except to the extent and in the manner as I shall now describe. They spoke, on the occasion of the completion of the purchase, both to the Native Mare and the Native Lands Purchase Agent who was paying the money, reminding them of the agreement arrived at in the Court and sanctioned by the Judge; but Heta and Haurangi were in turn reminded that the time for a re-hearing had passed, and that Mare, being the sole grantee, no other person could be recognised; nor were Heta and Haurangi deemed entitled to their agreed portion of the purchase money, notwithstanding that the arrangement was public, before a legal tribunal, and then and there confirmed, by being marked upon the judicial map in the presence of the parties, by the Interpreter of the Court.

Under this representation of the position of the matter, Haurangi was, in the absence of Heta te Haara, induced by the Government Agent ("out of feelings of friendship," as it was stated, and also out of consideration for the loss they had sustained by Mare's repudiation) to sign a Government voucher for the sum of one hundred pounds (£100), of which he (Haurangi) received ten pounds (£10), the remainder being reserved, as it was alleged; for payment to Heta, who has according been offered the balance of ninety pounds (£90), but which he has indignantly refused, maintaining, with Haurangi, that they together, are justly entitled to their proportion of the total purchase money, which proportion, calculated at the selling rate per acre for the block, would amount to about six hundred and fifty pounds (£650).

Acting upon instructions from these so far prejudiced Natives, I, with them, and in company with the Native Chief Paora Tuhaere, waited upon Colonel Haultain, the Trust Commissioner under the Native Lands Frauds Prevention Acts, with the view to his making most searching inquiries into the equitable disposition, amongst the proper parties, of the purchase money, before testifying to the satisfactory alienation of the block, by the indorsement of the certificate to that effect. The conveyance has not yet reached his office, and the Trust Commissioner has, at my request, kindly taken a few concise notes of the circumstances herein detailed.

The Natives on whose behalf, as solicitor, I now write, respectfully request that your Honor will endeavour to secure the money to which they are entitled, by such representation to the Government, or otherwise, as your Honor, under the circumstances, may deem effectual.

Mr. PREECE to the UNDER-SECRETARY, Native Office, (Land Purchase Branch.)

Auckland, 20th April, 1876.
SIR,—

I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of a letter addressed by his Honor the Superintendent of Auckland to the Hon. the Colonial Secretary, covering the copy of a letter from J. A. Tole to himself, referred to me by you for my report thereon; and have the honor to return the same enclosed with a memorandum attached containing my remarks thereon.

I have, &c.,

J. W. PREECE.

The Under Secretary, Native Office,

(Land Purchase Branch), Wellington.

Enclosure 1 in No. 8. MEMORANDUM re Mr. Tole's Complaint concerning the Opouteke Purchase and the Claim of Te Haurangi and Heta Te Haara thereto.

The circumstances connected with the above matter were duly reported by me in my letter to the Under Secretary, Native Office, dated 12th February, 1876, under the heading of "Mangakahia Lands." I will, however, add the following remarks in reply to the statements contained in Mr. Tole's letter:—

Vide No. 9.

Mr. Tole states that there were "three claimants who appeared before the Court, namely respectively Heta te Haara; Haurangi, and Mare." Such was not the case. Heta te Haara was present in the Court the whole time the case was being proceeded with, and never in any way made the slightest claim to the land, either for himself or on behalf of any one else, although the Judge several times asked whether any one objected to the unanimous desire of all present that Kamariera te Wharepapa (who is called Mare by Mr. Tole) should have his name alone inserted in the memorial of ownership. It was at this stage of the proceedings that Te Haurangi came forward and stated that he had no objection, but that a portion of his land was included in the survey, and he was quite willing that Te Wharepapa's name alone be in the memorial, provided that he (Te Wharepapa) pay him his share of the money when the land should be paid for. So far the statement is correct, and Te Wharepapa agreed to do so; but Heta te Haara took no part whatever in these proceedings, although present all the time, which he has since admitted to me, in the presence of Mr. Kemp, on my reminding him of the fact.

It is also true that the Judge told Te Haurangi to mark off the piece he claimed, and that a pencil line was drawn across the plan of the land by the Interpreter of the Court at the direction of Te Haurangi, and not objected to by Te Wharepapa, who was looking on at the time. I do not myself, however, consider that such a line could give any correct idea of the actual portion which Te Haurangi really claimed, for it was not a line describing any natural features such as usually form boundary lines of Maori claims, nor was it even a straight line from any point known or described by name to any other point similarly defined, but an arbitrary straight line crossing the plan, which itself showed no distinctive features, neither Te Haurangi or Te Wharepapa, being Maoris, having any idea on what scale the plan was drawn, or what proportion the one portion had to the other. At the same time whatever interest Te Haurangi may have been entitled to, Te Wharepapa did admit that he had an interest, and he, without any persuasion on the part of Te Wharepapa (as is incorrectly stated in Mr. Tole's letter), but after consulting with others of the Natives, voluntarily informed the Court that he was willing to leave the matter in Te Wharepapa's hands on condition that he got paid for his portion. It is true that the portion so marked out on the plan by a pencil line does contain 8,775 acres, as shown afterwards by the separate areas having been calculated, but there was no mention of area at the time, and I do not believe for one moment that either Te Wharepapa or Te Haurangi himself had the most remote idea that such an extent was included, nor do I myself rely on such a description as giving a correct view of the boundary line between the two parties in the case of Maori claims.

Mr. Tole remarks on the fact of such a length of time having elapsed between this settlement and the actual purchase of the land so as to preclude the claim being reheard. This was, no doubt, unfortunate, and weakened my hands in effecting a settlement between Te Wharepapa and Haurangi; but the reason was that the then Agent was not in possession of funds at that time to enable him to complete the purchase, and before he obtained the necessary funds the Natives had dispersed. He (Mr. Brissenden, who was the Agent at the time) went to meet the Natives at Kaihu as soon as he was in possession of funds, but did not settle with them on that occasion because they were not all present, Te Haurangi being one who was absent. The first opportunity there was after that of meeting them was at the Kaihu Court in January last, when the matter was closed by me, as related in my report above referred to.

Early in January, namely, on the 6th, I met Te Haurangi at Ohaeawai. I then informed him that I had appointed to meet Te Wharepapa and the Mangakahia Natives at Kaihu on the occasion of the sitting of the Native Lands Court, advertised to be held on the 27th January, and warned him to be present, as I intended to settle for the Opouteke Block. Heta te Haara was with him at the time, and said he would try and be there too) if he was well enough. This was the first I knew of Heta in the matter, and he did not then prefer a claim.

On my arrival at Kaihu on the 27th January I met Haurangi, who handed me a letter from Heta te Haara and Ihaka te Tai, of which the following is a translation:—

"FRIEND,—

"Ohaeawai, 24th January, 1876.

"Greeting.—This is a request from us to you about the money belonging to Peita te Haurangi. Do not pay it there, but give him ten pounds; take the greater portion to Auckland.

"IHAKA

te

TAI, and "HETA

te

"To Mr. Preece, Kaihu, Wairoa."

On reading this letter, I asked Te Haurangi whether this was his desire; he replied, "Yes." I told him it entirely rested with him, as I did not know Heta in the matter. He said Heta had written the letter with his knowledge and consent. On proceeding to settle the purchase of the block, I told Te Wharepapa that I should require to retain for Te Haurangi the amount of money in proportion to the area marked off on the plan. Te Wharepapa said he intended to deal fairly, but that the amount claimed by Te Haurangi was out of all proportion to his interest, and that it was a matter which he alone was responsible for, and that I had no right to interfere; that the money would all be taken to Mangakahia, and there be dealt with by the whole of the persons interested.

I endeavoured in every way in my power to effect a settlement of the matter between them, and assembled them and others together to discuss the question. In this discussion, I must say that To Haurangi made out a very poor case for himself as to the extent of his claim to the land; yet, notwithstanding that, I did my best to get Te Wharepapa and the other Mangakahia Natives to settle with him there and then, but they insisted that it was a matter, entirely between them and Te Haurangi, and Te Wharepapa refused to sign the deed unless I paid him the amount of the purchase money.

Mr. Tole refers to the matter as an "arrangement which was come to by the parties and recognized by the Court." Such it was "by the parties" and between them, namely, Te Wharepapa and Te Haurangi, and that arrangement relating not to the land itself, but to a portion of the proceeds of the sale of the same; the nature of which arrangement will be found in the records of the Court; and on the evidence of that record, I presume, Te Haurangi has a legal claim, against Te Wharepapa, independent of any sum I have paid him, provided he has not already settled it, as I am informed he had done before he ever saw Mr. Tole. When I found I could not get the matter settled between Te Wharepapa and To Haurangi, and as it was a matter of dispute as to money between them, Te Haurangi having no legal right to the land, but having, as I considered, a good remedy at law as against the money, if Te Wharepapa failed to settle with him, I, on giving the matter careful consideration, and after consultation with Mr. Kemp, who was present on the occasion, decided that my only course was to pay Te Wharepapa the amount of the purchase money agreed on in fall, and to settle with Te Haurangi to wave his claim, as far as the Government were concerned, for a stated sum, reserving to himself the right to sue Te Wharepapa for whatever he might be entitled on the agreement between them, in any competent Court if he chose, if he could not effect a settlement with him. He was at first adverse to doing this, but after a time came to me of his own free will and intimated that he was willing to accept what I had offered him, namely, £100 in full satisfaction as against the Government of any claim he may have had on the land or its proceeds. He at the same time said that, as regards his claim against Te Wharepapa, he would get Heta te Haara to use his influence to settle that. I accordingly, before settling with Te Wharepapa and the Mangakahia Natives, paid Te Haurangi the sum of £100 in the presence of H. T. Kemp, Esq., Civil Commissioner, explaining the matter fully to him, and getting his signature to a voucher for the amount, and explaining to him the contents of the same.

On my paying the amount, he returned me £90 to take to Auckland, as requested in Heta to Haara's letter, which I took, and at the same time wrote a letter to Heta fully explaining the matter, and telling him I had, in accordance with his letter, and by the consent of Te Haurangi, taken his £90 to Auckland, to be handed over when demanded.

I read this letter to Te Haurangi, who said it was right and took it. Attached is a copy of that letter together with a translation of the same.

Mr. Tole states, "They, (alluding to Heta te Haara and Haurangi) spoke on the occasion of the completion of the purchase both to the Native Mare and the Native Land Purchase Agent who was paying the money, reminding them of the agreement arrived at in the Court and sanctioned by the Judge, but Heta and Haurangi were in turn reminded that the time for a rehearing had passed," &c. The fact is, Heta te Haara was not within a hundred miles of the place at the time, nor had he been there for eight months previously. Nor, did I remind Te Haurangi that the time for a rehearing had passed, but Te Wharepapa did; nor was this discussion at the time of the payment of the money, for the whole matter had been discussed for several days, and I had settled with Te Haurangi the day before I paid the money, although I gave him the opportunity of again preferring his claim to Te Wharepapa, and the others when the money was paid to them. The payment to Te Haurangi was made on the same day as that to Te Wharepapa, but during an earlier part of the day.

About the end of February, Heta Te Haara and Te Haurangi came to Auckland. I was very busy with some Kaipara Natives at the time, and, as they said they were in no hurry, I appointed a day to meet them at Mr. Kemp's office. During the interval I noticed them several times having long conversations with J. A. Tole and John Lundon, about the town, the latter of whom seemed to be acting as interpreter. When I met them at the appointed time and offered them the £90, they both refused to take it, and Heta told me he either had seen or intended to see George Grey on the matter, and that the whole purchase would be upset. There was, however, no indignation shown by either Heta or Haurangi in the matter; they certainly declined at first to accept the money, which" being their own property (I only holding it in keeping), I left it where I had tendered it to them—namely, in Mr. Kemp's office—and said no more to them on the subject, leaving them to exercise their own judgment in the matter. However, on the 6th March, seven days before the letter of complaint written by Mr. Tole purporting to be on their behalf, they of their own free will asked Mr. Kemp for the money and it was given to them.

Prior to this and to their visit to Auckland, they had, I am given to understand, accepted a sum of money from Te Wharepapa, through Mitai Pene Tauī, as a satisfaction of their claim on him; so it seems to me they came to Auckland for no other purpose than to draw the £90: at the same time not losing the opportunity, when it offered while they were here, of getting more if they could.

I find, as a rule, when Natives are really dissatisfied on any matter that they are quite equal to the task of writing direct to the Hon the Native Minister; nor are they slow in doing so, without seeking the aid of a solicitor with whom they are not acquainted. At the same time they are equally ready to revive a settled claim, if encouraged by any one to do so.

I do not myself believe there is any dissatisfaction in the minds of either Te Haara or Te Haurangi on this matter; in fact I was in the same steamer with them on their return North after they had taken the money, and they seemed perfectly satisfied, and on most friendly terms with me, and never once alluded to the subject; and I am of opinion that in the amount they have received they have got fully as much, if not more, than they would have been found to have been entitled to had their case, or rather the case of Te Haurangi (Heta having made no claim whatever), been heard in detail in the Court. At all events I had no option but to deal with the legal owner, and treat Te Haurangi's claim as an equitable one, entitled to some consideration under the circumstances, and did treat with him without using any undue, influence or persuasion, but in a fair and open manner, and closed with him, apparently to his satisfaction, and at all events with his consent, as Mr. Kemp will, I think, vouch for, he having been present during the whole transaction. I may or may not be chargeable with want of judgment in closing difficult Maori negotiations, but during a career of twelve years as a Native Land Purchase Agent, George Grey and Mr. Tole are the first who have ever charged me with being guilty of improprieties in connection with my business. However, I can afford to let the matter rest on its merits.

I have seen Paora Tuhaere and asked him what he knows of this matter? His reply to me was, "That he was requested by Mr. Tole to accompany him, with Heta te Haara and Te Haurangi, to go and see George Grey, and on then arrival there, George Grey asked him what he had to say: he replied that he knew nothing of the matter; on which a conversation took place between Mr. Tole and George Grey, in English; and that after that interview, Mr. Tole requested him to accompany them to Colonel Haultain's office: he did so, but with a view of inquiring about the Maunganui and Waipoua deeds, taking no interest whatever in this matter. The deed relating to the purchase of the Opouteke Block has not yet been referred to the Trust Commissioner, it being in the hands of the Inspector of Surveys, awaiting particulars of the linkage of some of the lines, which he was not at the time able to furnish me with, a surveyor having gone to the block to re-chain them. This, however, does not affect the boundaries, which were cut long ago but has delayed the transmission of the deed, so that the Trust Commissioner will have an opportunity of making the "most searching inquiries" desired by Mr. Tole, and equally courted by myself.

Enclosure 2 in No. 8.[TRANSLATION.]Mr. J. W. PREECE to HETA TE HAARA

Kaihu, 2nd February, 1876.

FRIEND,—

Greeting. Your letter has reached me, but Te Wharepapa and the others did not agree to give Te Haurangi any money; but Te Wharepapa says, that they will-consider you both.

I have paid the money to them, as, I have no right to retain it; so you two must demand it from them. If any of those moneys are paid over to you both, well and good, but I did not like to see you not get any, and on that account I have paid to Te Haurangi £100, in full satisfaction of the claims of both of you to that land, so that neither of you may hereafter turn round on the Government to search for further payment. If you both choose to obtain any further sum from Te Wharepapa, well and good; but this, which I have paid is a payment in full as far as I am concerned.

The £10 I have given to Te Haurangi, and the balance, namely, £90, I take to Auckland in accordance with the word in your letter that, I should hold it, and Te Haurangi agrees to-your proposal.

From your affectionate friend,

PREECE.

Te Hoto to Haara, Ohaeawai.

Auckland, 12th February, 1876

SIR,—

I have the honor to report that I returned on the 10th instant from attending the sitting of the Native Lands Court, held at Kaihu, where I have been able to complete the purchase of the Waipoua, Mauuganui, Kairara, Opouteke, Waerekahakaha, Pekapekarau, and Oue Blocks of, land, containing in the aggregate 155,400 acres.

It will be remembered that with regard to the first two blocks, namely, Waipoua and Maunganui, a very sore dispute has existed for some time between the old Chief Parore te Awha, supported by Te Tirarau and the Ngapuhi on the one part, and Tiopira Kinaki (a man comparatively unknown outside his own tribe, the Roroa), supported by the Ngatiwhatua and Uriohau tribes on the other part.

The Agents having paid to the last-named tribes very excessive deposits, and having entirely ignored the rights of Parore and his people, caused so strong an opposition on his part to the survey and sale of the land that at one time (about this time-twelve months) there seemed to be every probability of hostilities breaking out between the tribes. At that time Parore, on my advice, desisted from taking active measures to forcibly stop the survey, and contented" himself by asking the Government to stop it, instructions to which effect were given by the Hon. the Native Minister, which, however, did not reach the surveyors until the work was done.

I was at this time acting as a private Agent, and advised Parore to permit the survey to continue, and trust his claim to title to the Native Lands Court, where he would be sure to secure his rights, whether the land was surveyed by the other claimants or not; to which he after considerable hesitation, consented, and has since then patiently awaited, the result of the decision of the Court: at the same time he has carefully refrained from taking any deposit, or committing himself in any way as to the sale of the land.

The case was to have been heard in May last, but the feeling was then still running high; and the Waipoua Block, being a portion of the same estate, having been advertised to be heard at Hokianga about the same time, I deemed it advisable to get them both postponed:

The cases were again advertised for August last, but were again put off. On the occasion of the present sitting of the Court, the weather being fine', and all parties being assembled and anxious to get rid of so long and unsatisfactory a dispute, the question was gone into by the Court by consent of all parties concerned.

The Court was composed of H. A. H. Monro, Esq., and Captain Symonds, Judges; and Hori te Whetuki, Native Assessor.

The Court was opened on the 27th January, and the Maunganui case commenced.

The Roroa, Urioliau, and Ngatiwhatua were represented by Paora Tuhaere, who conducted their case for them.

Parore te Awha and his people were represented by Taurau (brother of Te Tirarau), who conducted their case.

The whole question was fully gone into, a number of witnesses having been examined and crossexamined, which fully gave the whole history of that part of the country for some fifty years past, leaving the Court in a position to give a judgment without any hesitation.

On the conclusion of the hearing of the Maunganui case, which lasted several days, the Court asked the claimants and counter-claimants whether they wished to go over the whole ground again in the Waipoua case, or whether they would take the evidence which had been taken for Maunganui to apply to Waipoua, as both blocks were part of the same estate, the line dividing them being only an arbitrary one laid down by the surveyor, and forming no tribal division of the land. To this all parties, were willing, having on both sides exhausted all the evidence they had to offer; so the Court then adjourned to consider their judgment, and assembled on the following day to pronounce the same. In this, however, a fresh complication arose, which' evidently took the two Judges by surprise, and certainly surprised every one else; it was this:—

When the Court were about to give the judgment, the Assessor intimated that he wished to say a few words to the people, in order that they might not think he took no interest in the matter. He was permitted; and proceeded to express his opinion, which, it appears from what transpired afterwards, was the very opposite of the decision of the two Judges, fully concurred in by the Assessor himself when they were consulting together.

This placed the Court in a dilemma. However, the presiding Judge told the assembled people that they had no idea that the Assessor had opinions such as he had then expressed, and that they had discussed the whole matter fully together with the Assessor, who had concurred in the judgment the Court were about now to pronounce and that it was quite contrary to the expression of opinion he had just given. However, the Court retired for a few minutes to a private room to consult together. On re-assembling, the presiding Judge gave judgment, prefacing it by saying, that according to law the Assessor must concur in the judgment, and that he could hardly tell whether he concurred or not, for although he said he now did his expression of opinion was so absolutely contrary to the judgment itself, that it could hardly be taken as concurrence; such being the case, the judgment could only become valid by both parties accenting it.

It was the opinion of the Court that the Ngatiwhatua, Urioliau, and Roroa had become subjugated by Ngapuhi, and the two former completely driven out of the country after the battle of Te Ikaranganui; but that subsequently certain individuals of the Uriohau returned to the Wairoa, and lived under the protection of Kukupa, the father of. Te Tirarau, for a short time, and eventually left, for Otamatea and other parts of the Kaipara District. That a portion of the Roroa, including Tiopira Kinaki, after the Ikaranganui battle, lived at Waimamaku and Waipoua, under the protection of Parore, and have continued to remain there ever since. On these and other grounds, which were gone into at considerable length, the judgment was that neither Ngatiwhatua nor Te Uriohau had any claim to the land, but that those of the Roroa who had continued with Tiopira to live and exercise rights of ownership on the land were entitled together with Parore and his people.

Both these blocks being about the same size, the Court therefore awarded the Maunganui to Parore Te Awha, and the Waipoua to Tiopira and their respective-people, and adjourned for the day to enable them to talk the matter over, and either accept the judgment or not, or to come to some voluntary arrangement, as the Court was precluded, by the conduct of the Assessor, from giving an absolute judgment.

H. T. Kemp, Civil Commissioner and District Officer for Kaipara, was present, and I consulted with him on the subject. We decided to let them have their talk out, and not to interfere with their consultations until they had exhausted their eloquence and arguments on each side. It is unnecessary to detail what took place, suffice it to say that after two days we succeeded in bringing both parties to terms, including, the consent of the Ngatiwhatua and Uriohau portion of the claimants.

These negotiations had to be conducted with great tact and delicacy, both parties feeling strengthened in their position; Parore by the expression of opinion of the Judges, and the opposite party by the expression of opinion of the Assessor.

Mr. Kemp was of material assistance to me, in this matter, both in his personal skill and tact, and, being so much older an officer of the Government he considerably strengthened my position with the Natives, particularly with those of the Ngatiwhatua and, Uriohau, who to a certain extent looked upon me as favouring the other party, because. I had, before joining the Government service, taken up the cause of Parore.

The settlement we effected was, that Parore and Tiopira should each be named in the memorial of ownership for-both the Waipoua Block and the Maunganui Block, and that Parore should pay Tiopira a Sum of £100 out of some moneys he had received for another; block of land; in the title to which Tiopira had been defeated-at a former sitting of the Court, and that Tiopira have the Waipoua Reserve. I am pleased to say that the arrangement was fully agreed' to by all parties, and the result is that what has been a long-standing, and sore dispute has been settled to the complete satisfaction of all, the disputants.

This compromise was rather, too much in favour of Tiopira, the reserve being 12,000 acres, and the interest in the other two blocks being equal. We could, however, come to no better term's with Tiopira's party, and we had to make it up with Parore in another way, he having the advantage of us, to a certain extent, as he had never taken a shilling, deposit for the land, nor had he agreed as yet to sell at all, having been utterly ignored and treated as, a man of no importance by the former, Agents.

The terms of agreement as to title having been arranged, the Court re-assembled, and Mr. Kemp, as District Officer, informed it of the voluntary arrangement come between the parties; and both sides having been questioned by the Court, the matter was settled, and the memorials of ownership ordered accordingly.

After preparing the deeds, I sent for Tiopira and Paora Tuhaere, who represented those who had sold and taken deposits to the amount of £620, and concluded with them at the price originally agreed upon by them, namely, at 1s 1d per acre, conceding only an extra sum of £56 13s. 8d. on the whole block of 72,892 acres, so as to make an even sum of £4,000 for the whole of the two blocks., Dividing this in half, and deducting the deposits already paid from the £2,000, his share, I paid Tiopira the balance, namely, £1,380, and the sum of £100 on account of Parore, against whose interest in the land I charged it. He then signed the deed for both blocks and vouchers for the amounts paid. This was done in the presence of Judge Symonds and Mr. Kemp.

Now came the difficulty in dealing with Parore, who had not as yet agreed to sell or to name a price.

He at first insisted on 5s. and 2s. 6d. per acre. I felt no anxiety however about this matter, for the question of title having been settled, I knew, the eventual purchasing of his interest was only a matter of time. After a day or two of, patient waiting, during which time I received assistance and advice from Mr. Kemp, as to conceding to a higher price, I eventually concluded with Parore, with the concurrence of his people, to purchase his interest in the whole of-the two blocks for the sum of £2,500; thus purchasing the entire interest in both blocks, containing 72,892, acres, for the sum of £4,500, being a fraction over 1s. 2¾d. per acre. I also agreed to let Parore have a small reserve in the Maunganui of about 250 acres, being an eel fishery which is to be cut out of the block and a grant issued to him for the same.

Parore then signed the deeds, upon which I paid him £2,400, which, together with the sum of £100 paid to Tiopira on his account, made the amount agreed on.

Mangakahia Lands.

These blocks are those the purchase of which was first negotiated for by Colonel McDonnell.

The price originally arranged for was at 2s. 6d. per acre, and afterwards reduced to 2s. for such portion of the land as was kauri forest, and 1s. 3d. for the balance of the land, excepting that the moneys which up to that time had been paid as a deposit (which included a sum of £250 which had been advanced by a Mr. Wright, at Whangarei, on the orders of Colonel McDonnell, purporting to be given on behalf of the Government), amounting in all to £545 on the two blocks above named. I was not previously aware of the fact of there having been three prices agreed on. However, from the evidence of Mr. Nelson, Mr. Clendon, and Mr. Wright, who were present at the arrangement, together with the statement of the Natives, there is no doubt the agreement was as Te Wharepapa stated, although Colonel McDonnell only informed me of the two prices, 2s. 6d. and 1s. 3d. per acre; so I carried out the agreement as stated by the parties present.

Not being able to ascertain the actual acreage of the kauri forest contained in these blocks, I obtained information from reliable parties, and, with the concurrence of the owners, rated them as follows:—

Kairari.

The owners being the same in each block, I, in order to make even money in each deed, transferred the odd 2s. 6d. from Kairara to Opouteke, making £2,079 for Kairara, and £3,289 for Opouteke.

There may be some discrepancy in the acreage of Opouteke, as, the Inspector of Surveys has sent a surveyor to go over one of the boundaries again; but the figures on which this calculation is based, I obtained from the Inspector, leaving the acreage in the deed blank for the correct figures, which, he tells me, will not vary much. The Natives understand this, and accept the figures. There is, however, one proviso in the deed, that a grant be issued to certain Natives for 50 acres at a portion marked out on the plan, being an old burial-place. This, as well as the reserve before mentioned in Maunganui, will be laid off and placed on the plans of the deeds before the same are deposited for registration.

In addition to the sum of £3,289 paid to the Mangakahia Natives for Opouteke, I had also to pay a sum of £100 to a Native named Haurangi, to extinguish a claim he had to the block, which claim Te Wharepapa would not admit, although he had admitted it when the land went through the Court, Te Haurangi then leaving the matter in his hands. As this was likely to lead to some complication, I paid him the sum above-named, for which he agreed to dispose of any claim he might have. I consulted Mr. Kemp on this matter, and he quite concurred with me in the advisability of settling the matter in that manner. The price, therefore, of the Opouteke Block is £3,389, and is so stated in the vouchers and deed.

Oue.

This block is the old land claim purchased by the Government from the Charles Baker, and on which Mr. Brissenden has paid a sum of £125, in satisfaction of all Native claims on the surveyed portion of the same; it contains 3,968 acres. The title was passed by the Court without opposition, and a deed signed without any further payment.

There is yet a sum of £35 outstanding on Mr. Baker's claim, which was paid by Mr. Brissenden, but the land which is to represent that sum has not yet been surveyed; it is situated on the south of the Oue, and named Opuhete.

You will observe in the vouchers a contingency voucher for a sum of £200, paid to Te Wharepapa for services as agreed on by Colonel McDonnell, which I was instructed by you to pay in the manner I have. The whole of these blocks being completed, I have done so.

The purchases completed by me at Kaihu on this occasion are as follows:—

Which, together with the purchase of Waimamaku last month, make a total of 182,600 acres since the 1st of January.

The vouchers connected with these payments I have furnished to Major Green, from whom I have obtained the money.

I have, &c.,

J. W. PREECE.

The Under-Secretary, Native Office,
(Land Purchase Branch), Wellington.

REPORT on PURCHASE of MAUNGANUI and # AIPOUA BLOCKS.

THE original negotiations for these blocks, or rather block, the subdivisions being quite arbitrary were begun by Mr. Brissenden, who was assisted by C. E. Nelson as interpreter. At this time the land was unsurveyed, and Tiopira alone was dealt with. An advance of £620 on account of the purchase at an agreed rate of 1s. 1d. per acre was made to Tiopira and friends. Subsequently Mr. J. W. Preece was appointed agent for the purchase of Native lands in place of Mr. Brissenden. A Ngapuhi chief, named Parore, had asserted a claim, and at one time threatened to stop the survey by force.

These lands were adjudicated upon at a sitting of the Native Lands Court, held at Kaihu, Kaipara, in January and February last, and eventually a memorial of ownership granted Jointly to Tiopira and Parore. Mr. Preece with difficulty induced Tiopira to adhere to his arrangement for sale, a sum of £25 being thrown in to make the total up to £ 2,000. Up to the time of Tiopira's receiving his money and signing the receipts and deeds, no attempt had been made to buy Parore's moiety.

The charges against Mr. Preece resolve themselves into these—viz., that he induced Tiopira to complete the sale by a representation that Parore would not receive a greater amount for his share. The evidence of Messrs. Preece, Kemp, and Clendon refutes this charge, which rests on the statements of Paora and Mr. Nelson, which, however, greatly differ from one another. The second charge is, that the consideration money was not expressed in the deed when signed by Tiopira. This is in accordance with fact; the figures were merely pencilled in, and the notice of the attesting Judge called thereto; and the object thereof stated—viz., that should Parore be induced to sell, the sums paid to him might be added to those already given to Tiopira, and one conveyance to the Queen be taken from both vendors.

I can find no irregularity in these purchases. Tiopira received his due, and, indeed, in the joint letter of himself and Paora only begs for more money that his chiefs may not be put in a lower scale than Parore's.

I must notice the behaviour of C. E. Nelson, who, whilst in receipt of Government pay as clerk and assistant to Mr. Preece, kept a diary in which he made notes of matters which seemed to him to throw discredit on his superior, and, who, whilst still in the service of the Government, without communicating with Mr. Preece (whom he was to assist); Mr. Kemp, the Civil Commissioner and. District Officer, or the Native Minister; handed over his note-book to Mr Tole, his personal friend, a solicitor, and also a member of the House of Representatives. I refrain from commenting upon conduct so dishonorable. Mr. Nelson is not now in the service of the colony.

R. C. BARSTOW.

Report on Purchase of Opouteke Block.

WHILST this block was before the Native Lands Court, a Native named Te Haurangi asserted a claim to a portion of it, and pointed out on the plan the piece which he stated to belong to him. A pencilline was drawn on the plan indicating, the piece. He consented, however, that the grant for the entire block should be issued to Kamariera Wharepapa.

When Mr. Preece, as Land Purchase Agent; was about to pay the price which had been agreed upon to Wharepapa, he wrote to Te Haurangi, who thereon came to Kaihu. Mr. Preece gathered from some of the Maoris that Haurangi would not get any money from Wharepapa, and before paying for the land concluded an arrangement with him that on receiving £100 he would make no further claim against the Government, and only have recourse to Wharepapa. This sum was paid before the purchase money for the land was handed over. Te Haurangi and Heta afterwards came to Auckland to take steps against Wharepapa, but were met by Mr. Nelson, who induced them to go to Mr. Tole, and then to George Grey. They both expressed themselves to me as having no complaint against the Government, that these grievances were manufactured by Messrs. Nelson and Tole, but that they hoped to get some payment from the parties who had appropriated the purchase money.

R. C. BARSTOW.
30th June, 1876.

The attached statements of Paora Tuhaere, Charles Edwin Nelson, James Stephenson Clendon, John Jermyn Symonds, James Wathen Preece, and Henry Tacy Kemp, written upon thirty sheets of paper, numbered 1 to 30, and by me fixed together, were severally declared to and signed by the said above-named persons under the provisions of "The Justices of the Peace Act, 1866," before me.

R. C. BARSTOW, R.M. Police Court, Auckland, 29th June, 1876.

Paora Tuhaere: I am a Rangitira, of Ngatiwhatua, living at Orakei. I remember being at a Lands Court at Kaihu in February last. Maunganui and Waipoua Blocks were investigated at that Court. I was conductor of proceedings for one party. I heard the judgment of the Court. Maunganui was awarded to Parore, Waipoua to Tiopira. Then equal interests were given to Parore and Tiopira in each block. Tiopira himself had arranged to sell both these blocks prior to the survey. Brissenden and Mr. Nelson were the agents arranging this purchase for the Government. I don't know the price. Some money was paid on account before it was passed through the Court. After the sitting of the Court I heard the price; I am not sure whether it was 11d. or 1s. per acre. I know what took place after the Lands Court about the sale. I wrote the particulars of this sale in my own hand to Donald McLean. The whole statement is correct. Tiopira was thoroughly aware of the contents of that letter, which was written at the request of Sir Donald. At my first return from the Court at Kaihu, I complained to Mr. Kemp of the division of the money—of the £500. About a month after, Mr. Nelson came to me, on the occasion of Heta te Haara, Haurangi, and others being in town. Mr. Nelson said to me, "You had better go to Mr. Tole's office or house as companion to Heta or Haurangi; they are there." When I reached there Mr. Nelson was not there, and I went by myself I found only Mr. Tole and two Natives there. Tiopira was not there. Nothing was said, as there was no interpreter to speak between us. He did mention Maunganui and Waipoua. Mr. Nelson had not told me to speak about those blocks, but only as a companion to Heta and others. About three days after Mr. Nelson came in and interpreted about this matter at Mr. Tole's office. Not much was said, but it was about this sum of £500; that was the first time that I was aware that the matter was put into Mr. Tole's hands, as a lawyer. Mr. Nelson told me that this was the lawyer who was to ask George Grey to ask the Government for our money; that was all that took place. We then went to Colonel Haultain's. On our arrival there we found that deeds of Waipoua and Maunganui had been passed by him. Heta's deed was there. Myself, Heta, Haurangi, and Mr. Tole were, the party who went to Colonel Haultain's. A few days after, Mr. Nelson came again to me. My name was not in the Crown grant. I went to Colonel Haultain's because Mr. Nelson and Mr. Tole asked me to do so. It was on account of Tiopira, that I was asked by them to go. This originated here, but my speaking to Mr. Kemp was by the desire of Tiopira; he told me to ask the Government quietly for the money. Richard de Thierry was present in Colonel Haultain's office with us, I think. I am wrong; it was William Young, the interpreter, who was there he acted as such. I did not take him there; it was their doing. When Tiopira and self left Kaihu, Parore was at his own Kainga, near there. After we went they fetched him. I saw a payment made in the Court House to myself and Tiopira; the payment made was £1,400, and £100 for Waimata. Parore was not present. The payment for the block was not all made then. I did not see Parore receive any money. The amount he received was published to the tribe. The letter from Parore was given to Mr. Kemp, but not read in Court. Tiopira signed three receipts. There was a separate document for the £100; that I saw. I was present and heard the deed interpreted by Mr. Clendon to Tiopira.: I did not see the writing; I only listened to the interpretation. The price mentioned was £2,000 for Waipoua, and £2,000 for Maunganui. Mr. Preece was present at the reading of the deed. I heard Tiopira ask Mr. Preece if Parore had assented to the £2,000 as the price. Mr. Kemp was there too. I do not know Mr. Preece's reply, as I was confused; all that took place was there in my letter. On the same day Mr. Preece had said to us (myself and Tiopira) that the price was fixed, and that they would not get a higher price; this was in consequence of Tiopira saying that he would not sign his name till he got 1s. 6d. per acre. Parore's name was not mentioned at that time. I was not near Parore when he was arranging for the sale. At the time of sale it was not mentioned at all by Parore what price he should receive, whether more or less. Tiopira asked if Parore would not receive a larger payment than himself. Mr. Preece replied that the price would not be increased, that he would not get more. Mr. Nelson asked me to go with Mr. Tole to Sir G. Grey. I went. He questioned me; I did not reply; Mr. Tole spoke. Sir G. Grey asked me what I had to say. Mr. Tole took up the reply. He did not ask me if the account was true. Sir G. Grey said to us Maoris: "My sons, I will ask for your money from Government quietly." Mr. Nelson and Mr. Tole told me that Mr. Tole would be the lawyer to speak to Sir G. Grey. I knew what I went for, as I had been told. I understood Mr. Tole was going to speak about this. Had I wanted to take up this matter I should have gone to my own lawyer, Mr. McCormick. Had the £250 or £500 asked for been received; I should have got some, as I have an interest in the land.

PAORA TUHAERE. I, Paora Tuhaere, of

Orakei, do solemnly and sincerely declare that the statements herein above made by me are true, and I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of an Act of the General Assembly of New Zealand intituled "The Justices of the Peace Act, 1866."

Before me—

R. C. BARSTOW, R.M.

Charles Edwin Nelson: I have been a resident for some years in the Kaipara District, and am a licensed interpreter. I was engaged with Mr. Brissenden in purchasing land for the Government from the Natives. Mr. Brissenden and myself first negotiated the purchase of these two blocks, about nine months previous to sitting of Native Lands Court upon them. Our negotiations were both with Tiopira and Parore. We concluded a bargain with Tiopira, at rate of 1s. 1d. per acre for any land surveyed and adjudicated to him. I paid Tiopira, and adherents of his, £620 on the block, which was then called Waipoua only; this money was paid after the price was agreed upon, some before the survey, some during it, some after completion. I offered Parore the same price after I had paid some money to Tiopira, some £150. Parore was willing to accept the price if I had given an advance on Account of £500. I offered £100. He said, "You will never get the land." He said I had negotiated with the other party first. This took place at Kaihu. I saw Parore again afterwards, after having paid Ngatiwhatua £200. I tried again to bargain, without effect. He asked for £500; I offered £200, which he would not take. Parore told me twice to stop the survey; and I heard that he had threatened to stop it with an armed party. The survey was completed. I was present at the sitting of the Native Lands Court at Kaihu. It opened on 27th January. These blocks were adjudicated upon. The decision of Court was given on 1st February. Decision was that Tiopira was to have Waipoua, and Parore Maunganui. Hone Whetuki did not agree. Paora Tuhaere, on behalf of Tiopira, Ngatiwhatua, and other tribes, objected. Tiopira said he would go and take possession of the land: let the Court suspend this judgment. The Court adjourned. Mr. Kemp and Mr. Preece came down to Mangawhare, where the Natives were, to effect a conciliation, which they ultimately did. Tiopira told Mr. Kemp that he would only consent on condition that himself and Parore were both included as grantees of blocks of Waipoua and Maunganui, and for the reserve at Waipoua to be his own; and for the "right of conquest" to be effaced from the deed. Mr. Kemp said he would do what was just and reasonable. He had seen Parore and Tirarau. On Wednesday, 2nd February, Messrs. Kemp and Preece came to Mangawhare again, and brought word from Parore that he had agreed to Tiopira's request of previous evening. Then Tiopira began to quibble, saying that both names should be in Maunganui, but his own name only in Waipoua. Mr. Preece objected. Tiopira stated that he would consent if Parore gave him £100 out of money he had received from Waimata Block. Mr. Preece said he would take upon himself to promise that Parore would do this. In the afternoon, 3p.m., Messrs. Kemp and Preece returned with a letter from Parore; saying that he would agree that he and Tiopira should be in both pieces; that Tiopira should have Waipoua, and should have £100 from Waimata. Paora Tuhaere wrote a letter accepting the terms on Tiopira's behalf, and Tiopira signed it. There was a plan of the reserve in the Court. Its area was not then mentioned. The next day the Court met, Mr. Kemp read the first portion of both letters, avoiding any mention of the £100 for Waimata, which Parore had agreed to pay Tiopira. I asked Paora to make a copy of these notes in his pocketbook, and he did so from memory immediately after. The Judge said that memorials of ownership should be made out in conformity with this arrangement, viz., the names of each in the grant, and Tiopira and party only in the reserve. On Friday, 4th, about 10 a.m., Paora and Tiopira went to Kaihu; I followed half-an-hour after. I saw Messrs. Kemp and Preece there. The latter said he was going to see Parore and Tirarau, but would not be long. They stayed away about an hour. When I saw Mr. Preece again, he requested me to get Tiopira and Paora to come to the Court House. I did so. There were present Kemp, Preece, Clendon, Austin, Tiopira, Paora, and myself. Mr. Preece mentioned that the area of two blocks was 72,892 acres, which at 1s. 1d. amounted to £1,974. "Wait," said Tiopira; "I acknowledge that I agreed to sell the land to the Government at that price; but I agreed with Nelson, and he has nothing to do with it now; you are a new person, and ought to give another price. I must have 1s. 6d. per acre or I sign no paper" To this Mr. Preece replied, "Although I am another person, I am working for the same Government that purchased the land from you; you have taken money on account; you have given receipts for it, and agreed to sell the land at 1s. 1d. per acre" Tiopira then asked, "Has Parore consented to accept his money?" Mr. Preece replied, "Yes." Mr. Kemp took it up and said, "We have just come from Parore's house; he has consented." Paora then said, "Tiopira is bound to complete this sale; but regarding the price, I think it should be made something more. Will you not make it up to £2,000?" To this Mr. Preece agreed at once, though he said it was wrong to extort money from him in this manner, especially as Tiopira had already received over £600 and 12,000 acres of land. Tiopira then said, "You told me yesterday that you agreed to pay me £100 Parore agreed to give from sale of Waimata" "Yes," said Mr. Preece, "I will pay you the Waimata money now" Mr. Preece then said to Mr. Kemp, "I will go for the money and some blank vouchers, as I must get Tiopira's receipt" I remarked to Mr. Preece, "This money is being paid by Parore to Tiopira; Tiopira has no business to sign for it." Mr. Preece said, "Parore's money is not here, and I must have a receipt to keep accounts square with the audit." I said, "It is Q.—C. simply a monetary transaction; you pay on Parore's account; he should give you a receipt for money advanced." Mr. Preece said, "I cannot see why you should put in any obstacles." I replied, "That will do." Mr. Kemp said, "Mr. Nelson: Parore's money is not available; the money paid for Waimata is in Auckland." I said, "It is certainly no business of mine, only it seems somewhat strange." Mr. Preece left the Court House, and not long after returned with money and voucher forms. He said he had been looking for Captain Symonds, and could not find him; would I go and seek him, and ask him to come up. I went to verandah of hotel, and there found Captain Symonds. I asked him to come and witness some deeds at the Court House; and I ran back again, as I was anxious to read contents of vouchers about to be signed by Tiopira. When I re-entered Court House, Mr. Preece was filling up duplicate papers for Tiopira to sign. I went up by side of Mr. Preece, and by momentary view perceived the voucher to be an acknowledgment for £100 on account of Maunganui. Captain Symonds entered the Court and took his seat. Mr. Preece handed Tiopira £100 in bank-notes, and placed the paper before him: "This is the £100 for Waimata—to sign your name." Tiopira put on his spectacles and signed his name to the vouchers in duplicate, which were subsequently witnessed by Mr. Kemp. [Voucher produced.]

The voucher is for £100 (No. 15, 1876, 4th February), 9th payment, on account of purchase of Waipoua and Maunganui, £620, former payment.

Shortly after Manunganui and Waipoua deeds were produced, Mr. Clendon was asked by Mr. Preece to act as interpreter, Mr. Preece explaining to him the arrangement, and that the consideration was to be £2,000 in each piece. Mr. Clendon then interpreted the deeds, but as the consideration had been left blank, he read out £2,000 in both instances. Tiopira signed the parchments, took the money, took off his specs., and the transaction was completed. The blanks were not filled in when Tiopira signed. Captain Symonds was present when the deed was signed, and when Mr. Preece explained to Mr. Clendon that the consideration was left blank, but was to be £2,000. I do not know anything further than I have stated already as to any transactions between the Government and Parore about this land. The allowing the Waipoua reserve to Tiopira had nothing to do with the purchase, and did not affect it. My wife is a half-caste, but from the Rarawa, and not related to these people. I was employed by the Government to act in concert with Mr. Preece during these transactions. I kept a diary of what took place day by day. I am not in the service of the Government now. I made no complaint either to Government or to any one else of Mr. Preece's conduct whilst I was in the service; but I may have stated facts. I handed my pocket-book to Mr. Tole while I was in the Government service. I am not aware that this was a breach of the Civil Service Regulations. I was only engaged from month to month. At Kaihu I had seen a Native, named Haurangi, who had a dispute with Kamariera about the sale of the Opouteke Block, Mr. Preece having told him that, should he sue Kamariera, he would make him pay something. In town here, afterwards, I saw Haurangi and Heta te Haara, who spoke to me about this matter, saying the law had been recommended. I mentioned Mr. Tole to them, and brought them to his office, and acted as interpreter for them. Heta said he had no money for law, and wished to go to Sir G. Grey, as he knew him. It was then I mentioned this present matter, and that Paora and Tiopira were much aggrieved at the way they had been treated. I brought Paora to Mr. Tole's office. I interpreted for them. I knew the facts and brought them forward. I brought them forward at my instigation. Paora went to Mr. Tole's office, knowing what he came for. I never reported or mentioned to Mr. Preece that Paora or Tiopira were dissatisfied. I wish to mention that, on the 8th of February, at Kaihu, I was requested by Mr. Preece to fill in the consideration which had been left blank in the Waipoua deed. It was pencilled in £2,200, and I wrote it in ink. I was also requested to fill in the deed of execution, which was of that date, 8th February. I did not fill in Maunganui deed. I did not notice it. There were many deeds there. I don't remember Mr. Kemp saying, on the wharf at Kaihu, after the transactions were concluded, "I think Tiopira had by far the best of the bargain," and my fully, concurring therewith. I deny so doing. Tiopira and the whole tribe expressed indignation to me at the way they had been treated in receiving less than Parore. After Mr. Preece was employed, I was like the fifth wheel of a coach, and had nothing to do. I received pay to the end of May. My service expired at the end of April last. I never reported the dissatisfaction to any one in the service of Government.

CHARLES E. NELSON.

Declared before me— R. C. BARSTOW,
R.M.

James Stephenson Clendon: I am Secretary to the Native Lands Court at Kaihu, in the Kaipara District. I was present during the Lands Court session at end of January and beginning of February, 1876, when Waipoua and Maunganui Blocks were adjudicated. I have heard the evidence of Paora Tuhaere and Mr. Nelson, and have no wish to say anything thereon prior to the adjudication. I was present at the signing of the documents; I interpreted the deeds. The sum for consideration was blank, and the cause thereof explained to the Judge by Mr. Preece before me and to myself also. The cause was that, as the price which Parore would take had not been agreed upon, it was advisable to leave the space blank, so as to fill in the full amounts when ascertained and deed, executed by Parore. The object was to make one deed answer for the sale of each block by the co-grantees, otherwise there must have been a separate deed for each interest in each block. When I read the deeds, I read them at the price for which Tiopira sold his claim, £2,000. Some days after I read the deed to Parore. I explained the deeds on each occasion. I expressed the consideration Parore was to receive; I am not certain that I told him how much Tiopira had received, but may have done. I understood that Mr. Preece advanced £100 on Parore's account to Tiopira, to come out of the Waimata money, which was, to my knowledge, in Auckland. I had seen it paid some months previously, and saw it sent to Auckland through a Mr. Mitchelson, Dargaville's manager. Tiopira was perfectly aware that he received the £2,000 in liquidation of his claim on the two blocks. When Tiopira received his money and signed the deed, he relinquished all claim and title to his interest in the two blocks; thereafter the Government and Parore would remain joint owners. I am stated by Mr. Nelson to have been present on the 4th, when Mr. Preece, in reply to Tiopira, said that Parore had consented to accept this money, and Mr. Kemp was said to have added, "We have just come from Parore's house; he has consented." I heard no such conversation. I knew that no arrangement had been made at this time as to price with Parore, and should have noticed such remark. I was close by and think I must have heard any such remark. I remember Paul asking for the increasing the price to £2,000, and that conversation, which lasted from twenty minutes to half an hour; till Captain Symonds arrived. Mr. Nelson was at the opposite side of the hall sitting under a window on a form; I was beside the table where the talk was going on the whole time. I heard Mr. Preece asked by Tiopira why it was necessary to sign the vouchers in addition to the deeds; Mr. Preece told him it was necessary to have the vouchers to send to the Treasury. I understood that the £100 was an advance for Parore on account of Waimata, the other the balance of the purchase money. I had heard the Natives themselves, at a public meeting, speak of and acknowledge the money they had previously received. I did not hear any dissatisfaction expressed by Tiopira's people after the transaction. William Young, interpreter, told me they had been to Colonel Haultain's about a month subsequently. I have only seen Tiopira and Parore once each since this business. I remember Mr. Kemp, after Tiopira, had received the money, remarking that he had got the best of the bargain, and Mr. Nelson expressing his concurrence. This was, I think, in the Courthouse.

James S. Clendon.

Paora Tuhaere: I never employed Mr. Tole in Tiopira's name. I was not authorized by Tiopira to employ a lawyer. I never told Mr. Tole that I was authorized to employ a lawyer. Tiopira had only asked me to apply to Mr. Kemp. I never authorized Mr. Tole to act for me. Tiopira and myself have never applied for this investigation. When I appeared before George Grey I never spoke, neither did the other Natives; only Mr. Tole. When Tiopira arrived in Auckland, after four days I took him to Okahu. Tiopira told me that Mr. Nelson had been urging him to go to Mr. Tole. Tiopira then said he did not wish at all to have a lawyer; that he and I should go to McLean, and apply to him. We saw him. We wrote the letter of 5th May in consequence of that interview, at which Mr. Kemp and Mr. Preece were present. Donald McLean asked us to put our statement in writing. Tiopira came down because he had heard that Sir Donald had arrived here. I do not know that any one wrote to him.

PAORA TUHAERE.

Declared to before me— R. C. BARSTOW, R.M.

John Jermyn Symonds: I am a Judge of the Native Lands Court. I remember being at Kaihu, Kaipara, at the end of January and beginning of February last, when the Maunganui and Waipoua Blocks were passed through the Court. It was part of my duty to witness the execution of the deeds. I did witness the execution of these deeds by Tiopira. It was three days, I think, prior to their being signed by Parore, which was on 8th February. The consideration money was not written in when Tiopira signed, for the reason that it was not then known what consideration money it would be necessary to put into the deed, because arrangements had not then been made with Parore, and that the money to be paid to him would have to be added to what had been paid to Tiopira in order to express the true consideration for the blocks. Mr. Preece called my attention to this, stating that he had not as yet arranged with Parore. There was no bother or trouble, and Tiopira seemed quite to understand what he was doing. It was clearly explained to him by the interpreter, Mr. Clendon, in my presence.

I understand the Native language well enough to know that. I know that Tiopira sold his right to Maunganui and Waipoua to the Government. I do not remember the price, but he was paid in my presence, and he sold for the amount then paid to him, together with a sum previously paid on account. Ngatiwhatua seemed dejected at their claim being rejected, but Tiopira and people seemed well contented when I left, which was after Parore had been paid. When Mr. Preece mentioned that the consideration money had not been written in the deeds because Parore had not been arranged with, that statement was made openly in the Court House, and audible to everybody. There was not the smallest concealment about it. My official attestation to the deeds was not made till after completion of them by Parore's signature.

James Wathen Preece: I have no recollection whatever of Tiopira asking me if Parore had consented to the price, i.e., 1s. 1d. per acre. I have no recollection of his asking me any question as to what Parore was to get. I state positively that I never told him that Parore had agreed to any terms; had I told him that Parore had agreed to any terms, I must have told him a falsehood, as Parore had not then come to any terms whatever; nor did Mr. Kemp, in my hearing (and he was within two yards from me), make any such statement as described by Mr. Nelson. I did tell Tiopira that I would not agree to more than the 1s. 1d. per acre, when he asked me for 1s. 6d., but this had no relation whatever to Parore, nor was he then mentioned.

These land purchase transactions were entirely my own; Mr. Kemp was in no way responsible, though he did render me very valuable assistance.

J. W. PREECE.

Declared to before me— R. C. BARSTOW, R.M.

Henry Tacy Kemp: I am Civil Commissioner at Auckland. I have had knowledge for very many years of the nature of the several land claims at Kaipara and the North. I was a Land Purchase Commissioner for more than twenty years. I became aware of the reckless manner in which Mr. Brissenden, assisted by Mr. Nelson, paid money by way of advance to Natives having small or no interest in lands. I accompanied Mr. Preece, as I am District Officer, and had special instructions from Government to attend the sitting of the Lands Court at Kaihu in January last. I am thoroughly cognizant of all Mr. Preece's transactions in payment of money for land at that time; all were sanctioned by me, though I was not the active agent. I was present when Tiopira signed the deeds for Maunganui and Waipoua and received the money therefor. He declined to sign unless he got the £100 for Waimata. Mr. Preece agreed to pay it on behalf of Parore. No inducement to sign these deeds was held out by any promise that Parore should receive no larger payment than himself, by myself or by any person in my hearing.

I took a prominent part in arranging with Parore, and suggested to Mr. Preece that as Tiopira had received 12,000 acres of reserve in lieu of 6,000, as agreed, that the sum of £500 beyond the amount paid to Tiopira might be paid to Parore, so as to equalize the consideration each received; and it was with some difficulty that we could persuade Parore to agree to this, when it is borne in mind that Waipoua itself was for very many years the favourite residence of Parore, and the difference in the price given to him, as with the value of the reserve, was very much in Tiopira's favour.

H. T. KEMP.

Declared to before me— R. C. BARSTOW, R.M.

MEMORANDUM re J. A. Tole's Complaint as to the Purchase of Maunganui and Waipoua Blocks.

Mr. Tole, after making certain statements, sums up by saying that "Tiopira's grievance therefore is, that though the original purchase money was understood to be £2,000 for each block, yet, since it has been thought necessary to increase that amount to the extent already stated (£500), he asserts that he is justly entitled to his proportion of it, and not that it should be all paid to a co-grantee."

The answer to this is that the original purchase money was never understood to be £2,000 for each block, but was 1s. 1d. per acre, which amounted to less than £2,000 for Tiopira's share, but that at the signing of the deeds I conceded the extra amount, making it come to £2,000, for all his right, title, and interest in both blocks; and, as a proof of that being the case, it will be found that the voucher he signed for the balance of the money stated such to be the case—that is, the voucher acknowledges the receipt of One thousand three hundred and eighty pounds (£1,380) as a final payment for all his right, title, and interest, and acknowledging the former receipt of £620, thus making up £2,000

The amount of the price of Tiopira's half of the land under his agreement was £1,974 3s. 2d. He asked me to make it up to £2,000, which I did, as it was only a matter of £25 16s. 10d. extra.

In settling up with Tiopira, I first read over to him in detail the vouchers for the various sums of money which had been paid to him and his party from time to time by Messrs. Brissenden and Nelson, amounting in all to £620. These payments he admitted. That point having been settled, I told him that by the papers before me, it appeared he had, on receiving these various sums, agreed to sell the land to the Government for the sum of one shilling and a penny per acre (1s. 1d.). This he said was correct. He said I, being a new purchaser, should enter into a new arrangement. I told him that I was not the purchaser but the agent, and, as he had agreed to sell to the Government at that price, and, on the faith of that agreement, the Government had advanced him such a large sum of money as £620, and had been induced to incur the cost of survey and other charges, that he was bound to carry out his agreement.

I then told him the two blocks contained 72,892 acres, which, at 1s. 1d. per acre, would amount to the sum of £3,948 6s. 4d., the half of which would be £1,974 3s. 2d., which sum he was entitled to, less the £620 deposits. Paul Tauhaere then calculated the amount, and told Tiopira it was correct. They both said they were quite satisfied, but asked me to agree to make even money of it and let it be £2,000. This I agreed to, the difference being, as above stated, £25 16s. 10d.

I then went to the hotel to get the money, and first gave Tiopira the sum of £100 on behalf of Parore (the nature of which I shall presently show), as he (Tiopira) had made it a sine qua, non that that sum should be paid before he would sign the deeds. This sum I advanced out of sums in my hands, as I knew Parore had no funds at the place, and I knew he would repay me even if we did not come to terms as to his interest.

I then counted out £1,380 in notes, and prepared vouchers for Tiopira to sign—one for £100 and one for £1,380—acknowledging the receipt of that amount as being "a payment in full satisfaction of his right, title, and interest in the Waipoua and Maunganni Blocks." These vouchers I read over to Tiopira and Paul in the presence of Judge Symonds, H. T. Kemp, C.C.; Mr. Clendon, Interpreter of the Court; and Mr. Nelson, my assistant in land-purchase matters, and fully explained the nature of the same to them. Tiopira then signed them in the presence of the gentlemen I have named, and they were attested by Mr. Kemp.

There could have been no possibility of there being any misunderstanding as to the £2,000 being the price of Tiopira's interest, for I remember distinctly, when Mr. Clendon, the interpreter, was reading over and explaining the deeds, he at first explained to them that the two blocks were being sold for £4,000; and I at once corrected him and told him that the arrangement was that Tiopira was selling the whole of his interest for £2,000, which was then his explanation to them.

It is true that there was no total amount of consideration absolutely written in the deeds at the time, and I myself called the attention of the Judge to the fact, and told him that, as I did not yet know what I should have to pay Parore, I could not tell what the full amount was, and at the same time I asked him to note what I was now paying, and if Parore came to terms he would see what he was to get, which, together with the amount now and formerly paid, would be the price of the two blocks. I also told him that I would not ask him to attest the signatures of Tiopira until I should have come to terms with Parore and he should have signed; or, should I fail to come to terms with him, I would ask him to attest the signatures of Tiopira, and then insert the £2,000 as the consideration of his interest. The Judge did not attest the signature of Tiopira then, nor was the attestation clause written in or attested to until after the actual amounts of consideration of money for both blocks had been written in in both deeds, and after Parore had signed them and the whole of the money had been paid. Judge Symonds and Mr. Kemp then attested the deeds and examined them, thereby seeing that the amounts named were true, and in accordance with the payments made.

The apportionment of the moneys in the deeds, at £2,200 for the one block and £2,300 for the other, was simply a matter of detail, in order to apportion the payments as nearly as I could according to area in round numbers, for the agreements with both Tiopira and Parore, although quite separate, were in each case not for the two blocks separately, but for each of their undivided interest in the whole area contained in the two blocks; and such division was a matter of no moment to the sellers, as both blocks were owned by the same parties, and the money was, paid in each case in a lump sum.

There was no concealment of anything by me; the whole matter was done in an open and straightforward manner before a Judge of the Court, a Resident Magistrate, and two licensed interpreters, besides being publicly talked about. After Parore came to terms, and I had consented to pay him £2,500, I was asked by some of Tiopira's own people what he had got, and I told them. I saw Paul afterwards, as well as several of Tiopira's people, who must have known it, but they made no complaint, nor did I hear of any till I saw Mr. Tole's letter.

With regard to the question as to whether in the whole arrangements Tiopira has not obtained fully as much and more than Parore, I shall presently show.

It must be remembered that the Maunganui and Waipoua Blocks alone (and not the reserve, Waipoua No. 2) were the subject of investigation before the Court up to the time of its giving its judgment, which: judgment the Court informed the Natives could only be rendered valid by their mutual agreement, or by the Court accepting any voluntary arrangement come to between the parties. The Court did, however, give its judgment, in order, I apprehend, to acquaint the Natives how far their opinion went, and in this judgment they expressed an opinion that Parore had a superior right to Tiopira, and consequently, out of the 72,892 acres before the Court, they awarded to Parore 37,592 (Maunganui) and to Tiopira 35,300 (Waipoua), thus making the award to Parore 2,292 acres in excess of that to Tiopira.

This judgment could not be upheld in consequence of the strange conduct of the Assessor who sat with the Judges, who, having fully concurred with the Judges while they were conferring together, afterwards on the bench gave expression to quite a contrary opinion.

It must be remembered that the Waipoua reserve, containing 12,220 acres, was not under investigation at the time; had it been I have no doubt but that the Court would have awarded to Parore at least an equal interest with Tiopira, if not more, for the Waipoua settlement was his birthplace and continual home until only a few years ago, and in it was planted, and now stands, a fig tree, a present made by His Majesty George IV. to Hongi Hika, the uncle of Parore, who brought it out from England and planted it there. So Tiopira was not entitled by the judgment of the Court to be in the memorial of ownership of Maunganui at all, but in Waipoua, the lesser of the two by 2,292 acres, and the reserve of 12,220 acres was not before the Court.

It was only by an agreement come to between the parties after considerable discussion, and numerous proposals and counter proposals having passed between them, that it was arranged that Parore and Tiopira were each to have their names inserted in the memorial of ownership for both Waipoua and Maunganui, and that Tiopira should be paid by Parore the sum of £100 out of the proceeds of the sale of timber on a block of land named Waimata, which by the judgment of a former Court Tiopira had been found to have had no interest in, and that the Waipoua reserve should be in the name of Tiopira alone, which reserve was through the whole of that negotiation stated to have been 6,000 acres or thereabouts, whereas it afterwards became known to us that it was and is 12,220 acres.

Mr. Kemp and myself had very great difficulty in inducing Parore to agree to these terms, and had we known, as we afterwards did when too late, that the reserve was over 12,000 acres, instead as we understood about 6,000 acres, I am sure that I for one would not have asked him to agree to such terms; and it was that as much as anything which induced me ultimately to agree to pay him £500 more for his interest than Tiopira had sold for: at all events I had to do it, for it was the lowest amount that it was possible to get him to agree to take.

In order to show clearly the proportionate value that Parore and Tiopira have each had out of the whole estate in which they were jointly interested, I have put in the following form:—

A Statement showing the Value separately of the Arrangements as to Title and Sale of Maunganui and Waipoua Blocks.

Thus it will be seen that out of the block of land extending from the south boundary of Maunganui to the north boundary of Waipoua, including the reserve in question (all of which comprises but one estate as regards Native title), taking the value of the reserve to be only 1s. 1d. per acre, Tiopira has had in land and in money in excess of what Parore has received the sum of £348 7s. 6d., which I consider is considerably more than he is entitled to; and my opinion is borne out by the judgment of the Court, which found him to be entitled to less than Parore by 2,292 acres out of 72,892 acres.

But whether Tiopira has had the best of it or not, the fact remains. He agreed to sell all his interest in the two blocks for the sum of £2,000, and he did it with the full knowledge of what he was about, and he has received that amount in cash. And Parore agreed to sell his interest in both blocks for £2,500, and has received that amount in cash, of which he has paid £100 to Tiopira, as agreed on at the settlement of the question of title.

Te Haurangi: I live at Mataawa. I remember the first bringing of the Opouteke Block before the Lands Court at Kaihu, in January, 1875. Symonds was the Judge. I was there with Heta. I spoke to the Court with respect to our land that was included in their survey; that is, the survey of Wharepapa and party. I was questioned by the Judge. Wharepapa disputed my claim. I said I did not dispute their claim to their land, but only to ours, that is, Heta, Ihaka te Tai, and myself. I said the land had been stolen by the surveyor, by them. The Maoris who assisted the surveyor, Hopeha, and others were asked by the Judge. My claim was admitted by the Court to our land that had been included in this survey. Opokena is the new name of the piece. The plan was placed on the table, and Wharepapa asked me if I knew my piece. I pointed it out; its name is Owata. I pointed out the other boundary, Te Pukitaru. I cannot point out the line on this plan (produced); but one was made on the plan in Court. The Court ratified it. My name was not written in. Heta then proposed that Wharepapa should be allowed to deal with our piece too. The Court and we all consented to this. It was arranged that my money should be paid to myself by Wharepapa, or some one paying the money, and that myself and Heta should be present when the money was being paid. This is what I said in the Land Court. Wharepapa promised that when he received the money that he would pay our share to us. There has been a great deal of deceit in him: I was at Kaihu when the money was paid for this land. Mr. Preece wrote for us to come. I went, but not Heta. He had also, at Ohaeawai, told me to come I did not see the money actually paid to Wharepapa. I do not know how much he got. I expected to be paid for the area of my piece. I forget now how large the piece was. I did know at the first Court. I cannot say how much I ought to have had Wharepapa did not give me a penny even. I did not know that he gave any to Heta or to Ihaka. Heta may say. I asked Wharepapa for it in Mr. Preece's presence. He replied that Heta and self were thieves. He was obstinate and would not give any. The only money I got at Kaihu then was £10 from Mr. Preece. I returned home. I left £90 in Mr. Preece's hand to bring to Auckland. This was paid to me in consequence of Wharepapa's bad behaviour. The £90 was taken to Auckland by Preece in consequence of a letter I had given him from Ihaka and Heta te Haara. Immediately after I had signed a receipt for the £100, I was told by Mr. Preece that I was to have no further claim on the Government. I would not have signed had I known this before. Mr. Preece and Mr. Kemp alone were present. The money was paid to me before this explanation. I had the money in my possession. I did not return it, nor make any objection to what had been said. Preece wrote a letter for me to give to Heta, and read it over to me. I took the letter to Heta, and gave it to him on my return to Ohaeawai. We both came to Kororareka and saw Ihaka. These two disapproved of what I had done in taking the £10. Heta and self came to Auckland about it. We went to Mr. Kemp's office, and saw Mr. Kemp and Mr. Preece. Mr. Preece handed us the £90, and Heta would not receive it, as he did not approve of it, as the land was a large piece. We did not then take it. Heta said he would retain the land. We saw Mr. Nelson. I did not speak to him about this matter; perhaps Heta did. We went back to Kororareka. Before this (our return), Paora Tubaere, Heta, and self were standing in the street at the corner of Queen Street, outside an entrance. Nelson had pointed out the place, saying that was the house of his lawyer. We went upstairs, and Nelson came up after. He interpreted for us. We did not speak, only Nelson: it was he who had advised us not to take the money (£90). He had talked to us at a public-house before this. We met him in Queen street, and said he was very glad to have seen us before we went to the Native Office. He gave us all the information about the area of the land and everything. We went to see Mr. Tole to try to get money from the Government, not from Wharepapa. We all went together to George Grey. We never said anything; the lawyer did all the talking. Paora spoke a little about his matter with Tiopira. We all went to Colonel Haultain also, then we returned to Kororareka, as I have said. I was not aware that Heta received this £90 while in Auckland.

Before the payment of the money I spoke to Mr. Preece not to pay all the money to Wharepapa. I do not know if he heard me, as there was a noise. I was not present when Wharepapa was paid. I went to the Court House, but the door was closed. I may have got the £100 from Mr. Preece before Wharepapa was paid. Mr. Kemp was present. It was in the day-time, about noon sometime.

Na pei te, TE HAURANGI.

James Stephenson Clendon: I am Clerk of Native Lands Court, Kaipara District, sitting at Kaihu. I remember in May, 1865, the investigation of Opouteke Block. I was acting there. The adjudication was in favour of Kamariera Wharepapa, with consent of Heta te Haara and Haurangi. The opposition was in Haurangi's name. During the investigation, Haurangi pointed out a portion of the plan which he claimed. Captain Symonds, the Judge, drew a mark across with a ruler. It was a line between the two points known to Haurangi. Wharepapa made no objection at the time. He was to be sole grantee, but was to pay Haurangi for the acreage contained in the portion marked off. Wharepapa's name was inserted in several Crown grants, amounting to 80,000 acres in all. He was so put in at request of the Natives to act as agent for them. Mr. Nelson was present at this Lands Court during part of the time. I was present at Kaihu when the purchase was completed at last Kaihu Court (January and February, 1876). I interpreted the deed. I remember Haurangi expressing great dissatisfaction at Wharepapa not acceding to his claims—not giving him what he wanted. It was against Wharepapa, not against the Government. It was both before and after payment for the block. Heta te Haara was not at Kaihu at all, or probably would have got a larger share. Wharepapa had only a small interest in Opouteke. The money was distributed all through the country, to Bay of Islands and else where

JAMES S. CLENDON.

John Jermyn Symonds: I am a Judge of Native Lands Court. I held a Court at Kaihu in May, 1875. The Opouteke Block was then adjudicated upon. Kamariera Wharepapa was appointed agent by the Natives concerned, and at their request his name was put in the memorial. Two Natives named Heta te Haara and Te Haurangi were present, and claimed a part of the block. Their claim was admitted. They pointed out the spot before the people in Court and Wharepapa; and a line was drawn across, either by myself or in my presence, to indicate the extent of their claim in a rough way. A note of their claim was made in the Court minutes. The memorial was made to Wharepapa with their full consent. The consent was asked for three times in open Court, and given. The grant would issue in Wharepapa's name alone, and he alone would have the power of selling. Te Haurangi alone was the complainant, not Heta te Haara. In January last, at Kaihu, I witnessed the execution of the deed of sale by Wharepapa to the Government [produced]. Haurangi was at the Lands Court. I do not know if he was present at the signing of the deeds. No protest of any kind was made when the deed was signed and the money paid.

JOHN JERMYN SYMONDS.

Heta te Haara: It was not my suggestion, at Mr. Tole's office, that we should go to Sir G. Grey it was Mr. Nelson's. Mr. Kemp gave me the £90. When I first went Mr. Kemp said, "Take your money." I said, "Let it be for a future time." At my second going I found Mr. Kemp alone. I said, "I had come to fetch my money." He said, "Very well." Mr. Kemp gave it to me. Mr. Preece was not present then. Mr. Vickers was there. He brought the money upstairs. I knew what the money was—the money brought by Preece from Haurangi at Kaihu. I understood that we should have no further claim upon the Government by Mr. Preece's letter of the 2nd February. I believe that the letter produced is an exact copy of it. There had been no new arrangement about this land since then. I expected to have got £600, as I was told that there was 5,775 acres in our piece. I have applied to Wharepapa for the money, but he said it was all gone from him; that it rested with Petu and others who had the money. I knew that the £90 was with Kemp. Mr. Preece had shown it to us at the Native Office on the first occasion when we declined it before. Mr. Preece said he would not take it as it was not his, and left it with Mr. Kemp. He did not tell us that we might get more afterwards. Mr. Preece and Mr. Nelson both returned to Kororareka in the same steamer with me. On board the steamer, Mr. Nelson said to me that he was afraid of letting Mr. Preece see him talking to me. He did not talk to us in Mr. Preece's presence. I was not at Kaihu when the money was paid I was ill, or should have gone.

HETA TE HAARA.

The statements of Peita te Haurangi, John Jermyn Symonds, James Stephenson Clendon, and Heta te Haara were taken by me, on seven sheets of paper, number 1 to 7, and severally declared by the above-named persons, by virtue of provisions of "Justices of Peace Act, 1876.

I have the honor to make application for permission to invite the representatives of the Press to be present at the inquiry which is about to take place before you in reference to my land-purchase transactions. My object in making this application is in order that the fullest publicity may be given to both the actual nature of the charges and to my reply to them, as a statement has already appeared in one of the daily newspapers that the charges are of a "sweeping character;" the article containing the statement having been headed in the most conspicuous type with the words "Native Lands and Native Jobbery." I would, therefore, respectfully request that an opportunity may be afforded me of giving the whole matter publicity in the way I have indicated.

No. 19. Mr. BARSTOW to the Hon. the NATIVE MINISTER.

Auckland, 1st July, 1876.
SIR,—

I have the honor, by way of supplement to the accompanying report, of forwarding for your information the following statement:—

On the 17th May, on receipt of your letter (with enclosures) requesting me to investigate into irregularities alleged to have taken place in certain land purchases in the North (Maunganui, Waipoua, Opouteke), I informed J. A. Tole, solicitor, who preferred the charges, and Mr. Preece, whom these appeared chiefly to affect, that I would hold the inquiry asked for in said papers at an early date.

I was annoyed at finding on the following morning articles in the newspapers on the subject of this inquiry, and spoke of this to Messrs Tole and Preece. The former admitted that he had mentioned the matter in the offices of the Provincial Government, and that thence intimation might have reached certain papers.

Mr. Tole applied for copies of letters, reports, &c., connected with the purchases. I had these prepared for and supplied to him.

I desired, in pursuance of your instructions, to investigate the affairs referred to me without delay, but found that Mr. Commissioner Kemp, then in Waikato, was a necessary witness; and also that time would be required in order to communicate with the several Natives—Tiopira, Heta te Haara, Te Haurangi—said to be complainants. Accordingly, on 1st June I fixed the 9th instant for commencing, and notified the parties interested.

An application was made to me by Mr. Preece for permission to admit reporters, on the ground that many comments had appeared in the Press already, and that he was anxious that the inquiry should be public. I refused this, and also the request of Mr. Kemp that counsel should be allowed to attend on behalf of the officers whose transactions were called in question.

On Friday, at 2 p.m., in the room attached to the Police Court, I opened the inquiry. There were present, Messrs. J. A. Tole, C. E. Nelson, J. W. Preece, H. T. Kemp, C.C.; J. S. Clendon, Paora Tuhaere, and Mr. Brown, as interpreter.

I ruled that Mr. Tole appeared as having applied for the inquiry, and not as counsel for any client.

The matters connected with the purchase of Maunganui and Waipoua Blocks were proceeded with Paora Tuhaere's evidence was first given, and though I several times expostulated with Mr. Tole against the need of going into the proceedings of the Native Lands Court when adjudicating upon these blocks on his stating that it was essential to his case that the whole transaction should be opened out, I gave way; thus Paora's evidence was not concluded till 5.30 p.m. I allowed Mr. Tole to put, through myself, to the witnesses any question he desired.

I sat again at 10 a.m. on the next day (having myself suggested an earlier hour, Mr. Tole objecting, as it was his unpunctuality caused delay). Mr. Nelson's evidence was taken. Mr. Tole constantly pressed the taking, as it seemed to me, of irrelevant matter, so that it was a quarter past one when this witness was done with. Mr. Tole then stated that, as he must leave Auckland on the 12th (Monday) for Wellington for his parliamentary duties, he would be unable to attend further. An adjournment was asked for, and 2 p.m. fixed for resuming. Mr. Nelson promised to reappear, but failed to do so. I only examined J. S. Clendon; and adjourned again till the 13th, for evidence of Captain Symonds, Judge of Native Lands Court.

During Mr. Clendon's examination I received a note from Mr. Tole, asking me to postpone the further hearing until after the session of Parliament.

In the course of this day's proceedings Mr. Tole admitted that, when he wrote his letters to the Superintendent stating that he was employed: professionally on behalf of Tiopira, he had never seen nor heard either by letter or message from that chief, but that he looked upon Paora Tuhaere as Tiopira's agent. Paora flatly contradicted this fact (the agency), and also that he in any way authorized Mr. Tole to act for Tiopira or himself. Mr. Tole also stated that he had not made and did not expect to make anything, i.e., pecuniarily, out of the parties.

I cannot refrain from expressing my opinion that the tactics pursued by Mr. Tole, in protracting the examinations of Paora and Mr. Nelson, were adopted for the purpose of preventing my holding the whole inquiry in his presence. I feel certain that the entire matters connected with the purchase of Waipoua and Maunganui might have been examined into during the six hours occupied by these two witnesses.

On Tuesday, 13th, Captain Symonds gave his statement, and I then further adjourned until Monday, 19th, for Heta te Haara and Te Haurangi. I took their testimony as to sale and payments in respect of Opouteke; and, hearing from Tiopira that he would not attend on the 29th, concluded the inquiry by examining Messrs. Kemp and Preece.

I return herewith all the documents furnished to me for the purpose of this inquiry, together with the evidence taken in the matter, and some explanatory papers and notes.
